6. ἐὰν εἴπωμεν] if we say—as many of the Gnostics do—that we have communion with Him, and if we walk in darkness, we lie. They alleged that, by reason of the spiritual seed in them, and of their superior spiritual knowledge, and communion with the light, they were free to act as they chose, and were not polluted thereby, and were not guilty of sin. (Irenæus, i. 6. 20.) Some of them even ventured to extol the workers of the most audacious acts of darkness, such as Cain, Korah, and Judas, as persons gifted with superior freedom of thought, and intrepidity of action (see on Jude 11); and to affirm that, since the soul could not attain to perfection except by knowledge, it was even requisite for men to make themselves familiar with all manner of evil, in order that by an universal empiricism of evil they might arrive the sooner at their ultimate consummation. See Irenæus (i. 25. 4, ed. Stieren; p. 103, ed. Grabe: ii. 32, ed. Stieren; p. 187, Grabe), and cp. Blunt on the Heresies of the Apostolic age; Lectures, ch. ix. p. 179, and below on ii. 3; iii. 9.

7. αὐτός] ipse, He Himself,—emphatic: He Himself Who is our Head is in the Light; consequently we his members ought to be in the Light also.

— κοινωνίαν ἔχομεν μετ' ἀλλήλων] we have communion with one another. Here is a reply to those who would restrain Catholic communion to their own sect. St. John says that, "If we walk in the light we have communion one with another: and truly our communion is with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ," v. 3. If we walk in the light, and communicate with the Father and the Son, in the Catholic Faith, "once for all delivered to the Saints" (Jude 3), and in the Christian Sacraments, we hold communion with all the Saints of every age and every nation in the Church. This is true Catholic communion, and those who are members of it are the true Catholics. Cp. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ix. p. 357, and the authorities quoted in Theophilus Anglicanus, part ii. ch. viii.

— καὶ τὸ αἷμα Ἰησοῦ] and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin. Some MSS., e. g. B, C, and Versions omit Χριστοῦ, but it is found in A, G, H, and in most Cursives, and the Syriac and Vulg., and it imparts completeness to the doctrinal statement here, which declares that Jesus is the Christ —against the Cerinthians—and that He is the Son of God— against the Ebionites—and that He shed His blood on the cross— against the Simonians and Docetæ—and that it cleanseth from all sin—against those who deny pardon on earth to deadly sin after Baptism (see on Heb. vi. 4)—and it cleanseth us if we walk in the light—against the antinomian Gnostics, who changed the grace of God into lasciviousness (Jude 4), and alleged that a man might walk in darkness, and yet be clean from all guilt of sin.

Tertullian (de Pudicitiâ, c. 18) cites this passage from v. 5, and part of ch. ii. 1, and connects it with v. 16, expounding it in somewhat a Montanistic sense; to which he had been tempted by the vicious use made by some of God's grace in Christ.

But St. John himself affirms, that he declares the all-sufficient efficacy of Christ's cleansing blood, not in order that any one may sin, or be at ease when he has sinned, but in order that men may not sin (ii. 1); inasmuch as no less a sacrifice than the death of the Son of God was required to propitiate the offended justice of God for sin (see below on ii. 2, and iv. 10); and no less a price than His blood, to ransom us from the bondage of Satan, to which we were reduced by sin. Thus he shows the heinousness of sin in God's sight; and displays the ingratitude of those who continue in sin, which cost the Son of God such bitter sufferings on the cross.

He says that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us; that is, it is ever cleansing us from all sin: that blood which was shed once for all on the cross for the sins of the World, is always being effectually applied to individuals, in the washing away of the guilt of original sin by the Sacrament of Baptism; and in the cleansing of them from actual sin on the condition of their faith and repentance, in the administration of the Sacrament of His Body and Blood, and in the Ministry of Reconciliation. See above on Matt. xvi. 18; xviii. 18. 2 Cor. v. 18; and below, ii. 2; iv. 10.

8. ἑαυτοὺς πλανῶμεν] we lead ourselves astray from the right road in which we were.

9. πιστός ἐστι] He is faithful in fulfilling His promises of forgiveness through Christ. (See Luke xxiv. 47. Acts ii. 38, 39; v. 31. 1 Cor. i. 9; x. 13. 1 Thess. v. 24. Heb. x. 23; xi. 11.) And He is also just, in order to forgive us our sins. Observe this sense of ἵνα, not used for ὥστε, but in its natural meaning, in order that, see Winer, § 53, p. 409, and declaring the gracious truth, that God's attributes of faithfulness and justice, or righteousness, are exercised in order to our pardon. He in His love to us has provided a ransom for us (see iv. 10), by which His justice is fully satisfied, by reason of the infinite value of the price paid for our redemption, namely, the blood of His well-beloved Son, Whose death was the reconciliation of an offended God, and the satisfaction made to a just God, Who is therefore able to justify the sinner, without any impeachment of His own justice. See above on Rom. iii. 26, and below on iv. 10. And on the sense of δίκαιος, righteous, cp. 2 Thess. i. 5. 2 Tim. iv. 8. 1 Pet. ii. 23.

10. ὅτι οὐχ ἡμαρτήκαμεν] that we have not sinned, and are not sinners. On this sense of the perfect, see below, iii. 9.

— ψεύστην ποιοῦμεν αὐτόν] We make Him a liar; we constitute and treat Him as such; because He has given His Son for the purpose of tasting death for every one (Heb. ii. 10), which could not be said, if there was any one who was not liable to the penalty of sin, which is death. Rom. v. 12; vi. 23. On this use of ποιῶ, see on 2 Cor. v. 21, and below, v. 10.

Hence it appears that the Church of Rome, in its new dogma of the Immaculate Conception, ascribing sinlessness to the blessed Virgin Mary, is chargeable with this sin among others, that it imputes falsehood to God. Cp. notes above on Matt. xii. 48. Acts xx. 27. Gal. i. 8, 9. Rom. viii. 3.

CH. II. 1, 2. τεκνία μου] My little children. An address of endearment;—"diminutivum, amoris causâ." (Bengel.) It is not expressive of littleness in them, but of his tender love toward them; a love like that of a Mother for her offspring. Cp. John xiii. 33, and St. Paul's words, Gal. iv. 19. This term of endearment is used seven times in this Epistle, ii. 1. 12. 28; iii. 7. 18; iv. 4; v. 21. And this appellation τεκνία μου, "my little children," is addressed to all St. John's hearers and readers of every age. Cp. Bengel here, and below on ii. 12. It comes with special propriety from him who was now aged, and survived all the Apostles.

I write these things, not in order that you may presume on God's grace, and pervert it into an occasion for sin, and abuse your Christian liberty, as the heretical Teachers and their disciples do (1 Pet. ii. 16. 2 Pet. ii. 19. Jude 4); but in order that ye may not sin: and yet, since the flesh is weak, we have the comforting assurance that if any man shall have sinned (ἁμάρτῃ, aorist; not ἁμαρτάνῃ, present) we have an advocate with (πρὸς, see i. 2, "apud") the Father, Jesus Christ, righteous, and prevailing by His righteousness (see 2 Cor. v. 21), and He Himself (αὐτὸς) is propitiation for our sins; but not for ours only, but for the whole world.

Observe the tense of the verb here; he does not say ἐάν τις ἁμαρτάνῃ, "si quis peccet," if any one sin; but he says, ἐάν τις ἁμάρτῃ, "si quis peccaverit" (Vulg.), if any one have sinned: he does not give encouragement, or afford security, to the future sinner, but he comforts the penitent, who is sorry for his sin.

On the meaning of the word παράκλητος, a word only used by St. John in the New Testament, see above, John xiv. 16, and compare Heb. vii. 25.

This doctrinal statement concerning Jesus Christ our Advocate with the Father, is made by St. John in opposition to the tenets of the Cerinthians and others,—especially in Asia, St. John's province,—who invoked Angels as Mediators between God and Man, and thus derogated from the dignity of Christ our only Mediator and Advocate. 1 Tim. ii. 5. See above on Col. ii. 18.

Lest any should become careless by hearing that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin, the Apostle quells their presumption and inspires them with fear. God is faithful and just to forgive you your sins, if you grieve over your sins, and confess and repent of your sins. My little children, he adds, I write these things unto you, in order that ye may not sin. But if, through human infirmity, ye have been betrayed into some sin, ye may not therefore despair. No. Ye have an Advocate with the Father. First, then, take heed that ye do not sin; and if ye have fallen into sin, condemn yourselves, and fly to your Advocate, cry to Him. He will plead for you to the Judge. S. Augustine, Tract. i. on this Epistle, in the third volume of S. Augustine's Works in the Benedictine Edition.

Observe St. John's meekness. He had lain in the bosom of Jesus, and had imbibed heavenly mysteries from His mouth; but he humbleth himself. He does not set himself apart from sinners, and represent himself as their advocate, but he puts himself in the number of sinners, and says, "we have an Advocate with the Father." S. Augustine.

Compare the words of St. James, iii. 2, "In many things we all offend," and Bp. Andrewes, v. 430.

Observe αὐτὸς here, emphatic, as used in the nominative. He Himself, He and He alone, is the propitiation for our sins: see above, Matt. i. 21; viii. 17: here i. 7; ii. 6.

On ἱλασμὸς, "a propitiatory sacrifice implying offence and indignation in God, Who was to be appeased" (Bengel), see Rom. iii. 25. Eph. i. 7. Heb. ii. 17, and note below, iv. 10.

On the use of περὶ, for, on account of, see on Gal. i. 4. Rom. viii. 3; below, iv. 10.

St. John says, that Christ Himself is the propitiation for our sins; not that the sacrifice offered once for all on the cross is now repeated; but that its efficacy never ceases. See on Heb. x. 12, and the note even of a learned Roman Catholic Expositor, Estius, here, who does not hesitate to allow, that Christ is the sacrifice once offered upon the cross; and that by this sacrifice He propitiates God, inasmuch as He applies this sacrifice—which is sufficient to take away the Sins of the World—to those persons particularly whom He wills, for the pardon of their sins. "Christus est hostia, per quam, semel in arâ crucis oblatam, Deum nobis placat, in quantum videlicet hostiam illam, pro omnium salute sufficientem, continuè quibus vult applicat, ad remissionem peccatorum." See above, i. 7.

St. John here declares the doctrine of Universal Redemption through Christ. "Quam latè peccatum, tam latè propitiatio" (Bengel). Sin was universal in its extent, and the sacrifice is universal in its application. Cp. above, Heb. ii. 9, and 2 Pet. ii. 1.

3. καὶ ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκομεν] And by this we know that we have known Him, if we keep His commandments. We may infer our knowledge of Him from our obedience to Him. Christian Praxis is the test of Christian Gnosis. A condemnation of the heretical presumption, and licentious depravity of the Gnostics. As is well said here by Bengel, St. John here censures those who vaunted knowledge, and despised obedience. Cp. 1 Tim. vi. 20. 2 Pet. i. 5.

Hence the frequent occurrence of the word γινώσκω in this Epistle, where it is found about twenty-five times; see ii. 4, 5. 13, 14. 18; iii. 16. 19, 20. 24; iv. 2. 6, 7, 8. 13. 16; v. 2. 20; and of οἶδα, which occurs about twelve times: see ii. 20, 21; iii. 2. 5. 14, and passim. St. Peter repeats the word ἐπίγνωσις for a like reason; see 2 Pet. i. 2.

Throughout the Epistle St. John assures those who are trained in the saving verities of the Christian Faith, and who bring forth the fruits of Faith in holiness of life, that they know all things; they are the genuine Gnostics. Indeed, knowledge in the full Christian sense of the word, implies love. See Didymus here, who observes that to "know the Lord" means, in the language of Holy Scripture, "to fear, to love, to obey Him."

St. John also declares, that those persons, who vaunt knowledge, and pervert the truth of Christ, and do not keep His commandments, know nothing, but are blind, and walk in darkness. See ii. 11. 2 Pet. i. 9; and cp. Dr. Hammond here, p. 824.

The word γινώσκω, signifying experimental knowledge, is distinguished from οἶδα, which has a wider signification. The Gnostic heretics asserted it to be a duty, γινώσκειν πάντα, to have experimental knowledge of all things evil as well as good; see on i. 6: and they professed εἰδέναι πάντα, to have scientific knowledge of all things, however transcendental and mysterious. Compare below, ii. 29, as to the distinction between the two words, εἰδέναι and γινώσκειν.

5. ἐν τούτῳ] by this we know that we are in Him. How do we know that we are in God? The answer is, by obedience.

6. ὁ λέγων ἐν αὐτῷ μένειν] he who saith that he abideth in Him. Observe the frequent occurrence of the word μένω, to abide, to wait with patience and perseverance,—in this and in the Second Epistle of St. John. It is repeated twenty-six times. The duty of abiding patiently in God, by faith and obedience in evil days, is characteristically inculcated by this beloved disciple, who survived his brother Apostles, and whose life was prolonged for near forty years after the destruction of Jerusalem, even to the age of a hundred years and more, and who, in days of persecution from without, and of rebuke and blasphemy from within (see v. 18), waited patiently and stedfastly as a faithful witness to the true faith in Christ's Incarnation and Godhead, and who had received a special charge from Christ to tarry (μένειν) till He came, and took him to Himself. See above on John xxi. 22, 23.

— καθὼς ἐκεῖνος περιεπάτησε] as He walked. Observe the emphatic ἐκεῖνος, He, spoken with feelings of reverence and adoration. "The Name" is the Name of Christ (3 John 7), "the Way" is the Way of Christ (Acts ix. 2, and note, Acts xx. 25); so, in this Epistle, the pronoun Hε, is CHRIST. See iii. 3. 5. 7. 16; iv. 17.

Mark also the use of the aorist, περιεπάτησε. Christ's walking was one act of undeviating obedience to God.

7. ἀγαπητοὶ, οὐκ ἐντολὴν καινὴν] Beloved (so the best MSS. and Editions. Elz. has ἀδελφοὶ), I write not a new commandment to you, but an old commandment, which ye had from the beginning. Do not listen to those false guides and Judaizing Teachers, who traduce the Gospel as a novelty; and who would limit the mercies of God, and the offices of Love, to their own sect or nation. The Christian Doctrine of Love of God, and of Love of all men in God, is the true doctrine from the beginning. Cp. Matt. v. 17. 2 John 5, "I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another." Cp. Clemens Alex., in Adumbrat. here, and Didymus, who say that Love is the Law of God from the time of the Law and the Prophets, and even from the beginning of the world; and so S. Cyril in Catenâ, and Cassiodor., Complex., p. 127, and Œcumen., and Theophylact, and Bp. Andrewes, v. 468, where he shows that the commandment of Love delivered in the Gospel is also in the Law of Moses and of Nature: it is in fact a necessary consequence of the Attributes of God Himself. And see Bp. Sanderson, iii. p. 315, and Dr. Hammond here.

8. πάλιν] Again: said with some intimation of correction of what has been just spoken. In another respect the commandment of Love to God, and of all men in God, is a new one, καινὴ, not νέα (see on Eph. iv. 23, 24. Col. iii. 10), that is, it is made new, renewed, by Christ the second Adam, the Son of God, Who came from heaven to make all to be one new man in Himself (Eph. ii. 15), and Who has made all things new (2 Cor. v. 17. Rev. xxi. 5), and in Whom each of us is a new creature (Gal. vi. 15), and Who has given us the Holy Ghost in the Sacrament of the New Birth (John iii. 5), to renew us in the spirit of our minds (Tit. iii. 5), and Who is the Mediator of the New Covenant, and writes it by His Spirit in our hearts (Heb. viii. 8; ix. 15), and gives us a new name (Rev. ii. 17), and has made us citizens of the new Jerusalem (Rev. iii. 12; xxi. 2), and has encouraged us to look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness (2 Pet. iii. 13), and has thus given us new obligations, new motives, and new powers, to fulfil the Law of Love, and has displayed new measures of largeness in its fulfilment, by His own precepts and example.

Therefore, as St. John relates in his Gospel, our Lord Himself had said, A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. John xiii. 34.

— ὅ ἐστιν ἀληθὲς ἐν αὐτῷ καὶ ἐν ὑμῖν] which thing is true in Him (Christ) and in you.

What is it that is here declared to be true?

Not the commandment (ἐντολὴ); the difference of gender precludes that interpretation. Nor is it simply the substance of the commandment that is asserted to be true; but the substance of it as new. Cp. Lücke, 2nd edition, and Huther here.

This new life of love is not a deceit, as the novel knowledge of those is, who say that they know God, and yet do not keep His commandments, especially this great commandment of all—Love; and who therefore lie (see v. 4), and do not the truth (see i. 6). Cp. v. 27, where ἀληθὲς is put as here in contrast to the ψεῦδος, or lie, of the Gnostic pretenders to illumination, whose works of darkness belied their professions.

But this new life of Love to God and of Love to man in God is true, genuine, really and vitally subsisting, and visibly manifested, and effectually energizing in Christ, Who is the New Man, and in you, who are new creatures in Him; in Him Who is the Head, and in you His Members; for Love is the element which knits all together in one another and in Him, and is therefore the bond of perfectness. Col. iii. 14.

— ὅτι ἡ σκοτία παράγεται] because the darkness is passing by (see v. 17), and the true light already shineth. Therefore this old commandment which ye have from the beginning is in a certain sense new; it is renewed and restored in Christ and the Gospel; because the darkness of error and sin which usurped its place and clouded it over, is now passing by (παράγεται), being dispersed by the sunshine of the Gospel, as mists and clouds are by the sun's rays; and the light that is true shineth.

Observe the adjective ἀληθινὸν, true, as opposed to what is counterfeit and false; see above on John xvii. 3, and below, v. 20. The Gnostics pretended to have light, to have special illumination; but their light is a false light, it is the light of "wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness," Jude 13.

The darkness is the darkness of the Old Man; the light is that of the New Man. As the Apostle says, "Ye were sometime Darkness, but now are ye Light in the Lord. Walk as Children of the Light." Eph. v. 8. 14. 1 Thess. v. 5, 6. S. Augustine.

At your Baptism ye were enlightened (ἐφωτίσθητε. See on Heb. vi. 4; x. 32). Ye became children of Light (see on Eph. v. 8); ye were engrafted into Christ; and if any man is in Christ, says St. Paul, he is a new creature; the old things passed away (παρῆλθε); behold, all things are become new. See on 2 Cor. v. 17, which text affords an excellent comment on St. John's meaning here.

Hence we see how natural is the transition to what follows in this place concerning the baptismal duties, consequent on the baptismal privileges, of all those who by their baptismal burial of the old man, and by their baptismal incorporation into the New Man, passed from the world of Darkness to that of Light.

10. καὶ σκάνδαλον ἐν αὐτῷ οὐκ ἔστιν] and there is no stumbling-block in him. A significant saying. Observe ἐν αὐτῷ, in him. Whosoever hateth his brother, walketh in darkness, and carrieth his own stumbling blocks in himself; he hath them in his own heart, in his own evil passions, envy, hatred, and malice. Therefore he must fall: so to speak, he carries his fall along with him. But whosoever loveth his brother, abideth in the light, and there is no stumbling-block in him. He has the element of light around him, and he has no stumbling-block in him.

Compare the prophetic declarations of Ezek. xiv. 3. These men have set up their idols in their own heart, and put the stumbling-block of their iniquity before their own face; cp. v. 7. Idols and stumbling-blocks are usually external, and erected by others, but these men bring forth idols and stumbling-blocks for themselves out of their own hearts. So great is their sin and blindness.

The beauty and force of these expressions are obvious: and the preposition ἐν is to be taken in its literal sense; which is well expressed by Bengel; "he who hates his brother is a stumbling-block to himself. But he who loves, walks at ease and has a clear road before him."

12. γράφω ὑμῖν, τεκνία] I write to you, my little children, whom I have begotten in Christ (cp. note above, ii. 1). The word τεκνία, little children, is to be distinguished from the word παιδία in v. 18.

The word τεκνία describes the spiritual relation in which all his hearers and readers stand to the Apostle their spiritual father. See v. 1. Cp. 1 Cor. iv. 14, τέκνα μου ἀγαπητά. 1 Cor. iv. 17. Eph. v. 1. 1 Thess. ii. 7. 11. Philem. 10.

But the word παιδία, children, describes their childhood as compared with the maturer age of others here mentioned, viz., young men and fathers.

This distinction may be marked in English by prefixing "my" to the translation of τεκνία.

Observe now the order of the address here;

He first says, Γράφω ὑμῖν, τεκνία. This is the general address, applicable to all. They are all dear to him as his little children.

Next this arrangement follows:

Γράφω ὑμῖν, πατέρες.
Γράφω ὑμῖν, νεανίσκοι.
Ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, παιδία.

Then the following:

Ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, πατέρες.
Ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, νεανίσκοι.
Παιδία, ἐσχάτη ὥρα ἐστί, v. 18.

Lastly, the series is summed up by the same address as that which began the series,—καὶ νῦν, τεκνία, μένετε ἐν αὐτῷ, v. 28. Thus the whole series takes the form of seven, and is closed by an eighth, the octave of the first. Compare the note on the Beatitudes (Matt. v. 3); and on the symbolical meaning of the number seven and eight, see on Luke xxiv. 1, and on 2 Pet. ii. 5, and Jude 14.

— ὅτι ἀφέωνται ὑμῖν] because your sins have been forgiven you for His Name's sake. This is the ground of his general address to all his spiritual children; the forgiveness of their sins through Christ. That forgiveness had been imparted to them by Christ at their Baptism. See Matt. xvi. 19. Acts ii. 38; xxii. 16. Eph. v. 26, and Bp. Pearson, Art. ix., "those who are received into the Church by the sacrament of Baptism, receive the remission of their sins of which they were guilty before they were baptized." Cp. Bp. Wilson here.

Thus the beloved disciple, the Apostle and Evangelist, St. John, instructs Christian Preachers to build their addresses, in Sermons and Exhortations to their spiritual children, on the foundation of the "One Baptism for the remission of sins."

Accordingly, the Church of England says by the mouth of her Bishops, in the Order for Confirmation of her τεκνία, "Almighty and everlasting God, Who hast vouchsafed to regenerate these Thy servants, and hast given unto them forgiveness of all their sins."

13. γράφω ὑμῖν, πατέρες] I write to you, fathers, because ye have known Him Who is from the beginning,—the Everlasting Word, the Son of God, made Flesh for us. He repeats this statement, for greater emphasis and assurance, against the delusions of the false Teachers, who in their professions of superior knowledge, pretended to reveal a temporal origin of Christ: some of them asserting that Jesus was a mere man; and others, that Christ was an emanation who resided only for a season in Jesus. They pretend to know, and they disseminate their false knowledge; and they profess to instruct you, who are wiser than they are; for ye have known Him that is from the beginning (1 John i. 1. John viii. 25), whereas they in their ignorance impute a beginning to Him Who is from Eternity.

St. John condemns those who under a pretence of knowledge separated Jesus from Christ, and divided Christ from the Only-begotten; and severed the Only-begotten from the Word. S. Irenæus, iii. 18, ed. Grabe.

St. John here begins with fathers; then descends to young men; and from them to children.

He declares the important truth, that the highest degree of knowledge to which Christian fathers can attain, is the knowledge of the everlasting Son. And the beginning of all knowledge in which all Christian children are to be instructed, is the knowledge of God as their Father. God the Father is the Original of all blessings which descend through God the Son, by God the Holy Ghost (see on 2 Cor. xiii. 13). His Name is first spoken in Baptism. That Name begins the Creed. And every Christian soul, made God's child by adoption, cries Abba, Father (Gal. iv. 6), and all say with one voice, "Our Father, which art in heaven." Matt. vi. 9.

— γράφω ὑμῖν, νεανίσκοι] I write to you, young men, because ye have overcome the Wicked one. This saying is also repeated (see v. 14), for the same reason as the former. "Flee youthful lusts," says St. Paul to his son in the faith when young (2 Tim. ii. 22); and divine grace triumphs in young men, when by its means they, young as they are, conquer the Old Serpent (Rev. xii. 9; xx. 2).

In the seven Epistles of the Apocalypse there is a sevenfold promise to him that overcometh. See on Rev. ii. 1.

This address of St. John to young men comes with special force and beauty from him who was the youngest of Christ's Apostles, and the Disciple "whom Jesus loved," and who proved his own love for young men in a remarkable manner, as is recorded by Clemens Alexandrinus, quoted by Eusebius, iii. 20, and Chrysostom, Parænesis ad Theodorum lapsum, i. 11.

— ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, παιδία] I write to you, children, because ye have known the Father: see above, the last note but one.

Els. has γράψω, I write, here; but ἔγραψα, I wrote, is in A, B, C, G, and in many Cursive MSS., and in the Syriac, Coptic, Æthiopic, Arabic Versions, and Origen, Cyril, and other Fathers; and so Lach., Tisch.

This word ἔγραψα does not imply that any former letter had been written to them by St. John. It is the epistolary aorist used often by the writers of the N. T. (see 1 Cor. ix. 15. Philem. 21. 1 Pet. v. 12), when they would put themselves in the place of the recipients of their Epistles, and look back on the writing of the Epistles as a thing past.

By its use St. John condescends to his readers, and he begins with condescension to children. And it is not unworthy of remark, that having used the present tense (I write) seven times in this Epistle, i. 4; ii. 1. 7, 8. 12, 13 twice; he now adopts ἔγραψα (I wrote), and continues to use it to the end of this Epistle, where he employs it six times: see ii. 13, 14 twice, 21. 26; v. 13.

16. ἡ ἐπιθυμία τῆς σαρκός] the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the vainglory of life, its self-vaunting and ostentation (see Rom. i. 30. 2 Tim. iii. 2. James iv. 16), are not of the Father.

The carnal Appetite, Covetousness, and Pride, these were the things by which the Devil endeavoured to overcome Christ at the Temptation; and these are the things, in which Christ conquered Satan, and has taught us to conquer him. These also were the things, which specially characterized those Gnostic deceivers, the filthy dreamers, against whom the Apostle warns his disciples. See above on 2 Pet. ii. 10. 18; and below, Jude 8. 16.

18. παιδία, ἐσχάτη ὥρα ἐστίν] Children, it is the last time. Do not therefore be deceived by those Teachers who now propound new doctrines. The Son of God has been revealed in the last time (see on Heb. i. 1. Acts ii. 17. 1 Pet. i. 20). The Gospel which he has preached is God's last message to men. You are not to look for any new revelation. Whatever is new, is false. They therefore who now bring to you new doctrine are not followers of Christ, but of Antichrist. See above on Gal. i. 8, 9.

— καθὼς ἠκούσατε ὅτι ὁ ἀντίχριστος ἔρχεται] as ye heard that Antichrist cometh (on this use of the present tense, see Matt. ii. 4), even now many Antichrists have arisen, whence we know that it is the last time, or season.

The coming of Antichrist is a sign of the last time; for the coming of Antichrist is to be followed by the coming of Christ. "Venit Antichristus, et supervenit Christus," S. Cyprian, Ep. 58. But how long "the last time" will be, it is not for us to know (see Acts i. 7). Time, which may seem long to us, is but an hour to God (see 2 Pet. iii. 8). Hence St. John uses the word ὥρα, hour, here. It may seem long now, but when it is past, it will seem only like a watch in the night (Ps. xc. 4).

B, C omit the article ὁ before ἀντίχριστος, but it is found in A, G, K, and the majority of cursive MSS., and Theophyl., and Œcumen. See also ii. 22.

(1) St. John alone uses the word Antichrist, and he uses it only in his Epistles, where it occurs five times (ii. 18 twice, 22; iv. 3. 2 John 7). It is never used by him in the Book of Revelation.

The word Ἀντί-χριστος signifies one who opposes Christ: ἐναντίος τῷ Χριστῷ (Theophylact); "Christi rebellis" (Tertullian, Præscr. c. 4); "contrarius Christo" (Augustine); see Lücke, p. 190. Huther, p. 105, and Dean Trench, Synonyms N. T. xxx. pp. 120—125.

Every one who sets himself against Christ, is an Antichrist: he may, or may not, set himself in the place of Christ. Cp. Wetstein, p. 717, and Suicer on the word Ἀντί-χριστος, i. p. 390. It is not necessary that he should do so, in order to be an Antichrist. And indeed the character assigned by St. John in his Epistles to Antichrist properly so called, is one of open hostility to the Divinity and Humanity of Christ; but is not one of assumption of His attributes.

The general opinion of the Fathers was that a personal Antichrist would appear a short time before the second Coming of Christ. See Irenæus, v. 25. 30, Stieren; p. 437—452. Grabe. S. Hippolytus, de Christo et Antichristo, pp. 1—36, ed. Lagarde. Origen c. Cels. vi. p. 499, and in Matt. xvii. S. Chrysostom in Matt. xvii. S. Hilary in Matt. xx. S. Cyril. Hieros. Cat. xi. S. Greg. Nyssen in Eunomium, Orat. xi. S. Jerome in Dan. vii. and xi., and Quæst. xi. ad Algasiam. S. Augustine in Ps. ix.; de Civ. Dei xx. c. 19; c. 20. S. Gregory, Moral. in Job xi. 9; xiv. 11; xx. 25. Homil. vii. and xxix. in Evangelia.

This opinion, commended by such authorities, is entitled to respectful attention; but it is our duty to be circumspect in the acceptance of any interpretations of unfulfilled prophecy. See on John xxi. 23, and note on 2 Pet. i. 20, whence it appears that even the inspired Prophets were not able to interpret their own prophecies. See also below, on Rev. xvii. 1.

St. John's argument is this, It is the last time (ὥρα), and as ye heard that Antichrist cometh (i. e. in the last time), and as ye see that many Antichrists are already come, therefore we know that this is the last time.

St. John therefore recognizes the fulfilment of the prophecy concerning the coming of Antichrist, in the appearance of many Antichrists who are already come. He therefore appears here to represent Antichrist as an incorporation of those who set themselves against Christ. Cp. Œcumen. in iv. 3. Damascen. de Orthod. fide, iv. 27. And this opinion is confirmed by what he says (v. 22), "this man is the Antichrist, he that denieth the Father and the Son." See also iv. 3, and 2 John 7.

The same is the doctrine of St. John's scholar, S. Polycarp, in the only passage of the Epistles of the Apostolic Fathers, where the word Antichrist is found. "Whosoever doth not confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is Antichrist." Polycarp, Philipp. c. 7.

This is also in accordance with St. Paul's prophecy concerning the "Lawless One" or "the Man of Sin," which represents a form of evil, displaying itself in a continuous series of persons, who are, as it were, incorporated and personified in one: see the note above on 2 Thess. ii. 3—12.

In like manner, it seems that the word Antichrist represents a succession of persons in different times, animated by a spirit of violent hostility to Christ. So Lange, Baumgarten-Crusius, and Bengel, who says, Where St. John speaks of Antichrist, or the Spirit of Antichrist (iv. 3), he signifies the enemies of the truth united together—"sub singulari numero omnes mendaces et veritatis inimicos innuit"—that is, he comprises in this term all the enemies of the Christian truths which he is inculcating.

It is however consistent with such a proposition to believe, that the Spirit of Antichristianism may develope and consummate itself eventually in some extraordinary personal antagonism to Christ. Time,—the great Interpreter of Prophecy,—will show.

(2) It has been supposed by some, that Antichrist, as described by St. John in his Epistles, is the same Power as that which is delineated by St. Paul as "the Man of Sin."

But in interpreting the prophecies of Scripture, care must be taken to adhere to the language of Scripture. The assumption of identity where it does not exist has been a fruitful source of error. St. Paul never uses the word "Antichrist;" and the attributes of Antichrist and those of the Man of Sin, as described by St. John and St. Paul respectively, do not correspond accurately to each other.

In the character of Antichrist, St. John describes an Infidel opposition to Christ, an open, impious denial of the Father and of the Son. There is nothing secret, no Mystery, there. But in the description of the Man of Sin, or the Lawless One, St. Paul represents a Mystery (2 Thess. ii. 7), something secret and sacred; a spiritual power, working miracles, and sitting in the Church of God. See above, on 2 Thess. ii. 3—12.

It is by no means impossible that the two Powers, described by the two Apostles respectively, may eventually coalesce. Time will show. But the Apostolic descriptions of them are definite and distinct; and it is the duty of an Expositor of Scripture not to "be wise above what is written" (1 Cor. iv. 6), and to compare spiritual things with spiritual (1 Cor. ii. 13), and not to confound things which are dissimilar, especially in the interpretation of Prophecy; lest the benefit be lost which might otherwise be derived from its warnings, and from the evidence it affords to the truth of the Gospel.

Further, there is reason to believe that St. Paul in his Prophecy (in the second chapter of the Second Epistle to the Thessalonians) is describing the same power as that which is described by St. John in another place, viz., in the Book of Revelation; where the word Antichrist never occurs. There is a remarkable similarity of features and language in those two descriptions: see Rev. xvii. 5. 7, compared with St. Paul's words, 2 Thess. ii. 7; and Rev. xiii. 12, 13 with 2 Thess. ii. 9; and Rev. xvii. 8. 11 with 2 Thess. ii. 3; and Rev. xiii. 4. 8 with 2 Thess. ii. 4; and see the notes below on Rev. xvii. 7, 8.

The resemblances between those two descriptions of St. Paul and St. John strengthen the belief that they refer to the same power; and they also confirm the argument derived from the discrepancies in the other descriptions which have just been mentioned, that the powers delineated by them are not the same.

St. John here announces the fulfilment of what had been prophesied by St. Paul in his farewell address to the Ephesian Presbyters at Miletus, "that out of their own selves would men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw the disciples after them" (Acts xx. 30).

The many Antichrists here described are the Heresiarchs of St. John's age. He says that they went out from us: and this was specially applicable to the father of the Gnostics, Simon Magus, who was baptized by St. Philip the Deacon at Samaria (see on Acts viii. 9—18), and who is called an Antichrist by the ancient Fathers; see S. Cyril. Hierosol., Catech. vi. p. 53, and Dr. Hammond here, and Tillemont, Hist. Eccles. ii. p. 19.

The same was true of another Heresiarch of the same age, Ebion, to whom Tertullian applies St. John's words. In his Epistle, St. John calls them Antichrists, who deny that Jesus is come in the flesh, and that Jesus is the Son of God. The former proposition is denied by Marcion, the latter by Ebion: see Tertullian, Præscr. Hæret., c. 33.

St. Jerome affirms that St. John directed this censure also against another Heresiarch of the Apostolic age, Cerinthus, who arose within the Church and opposed the Apostles (see on Acts xv. 1), and of whom there is an historical record, that he was personally known to St. John at Ephesus; and that when St. John had gone into a bath there, and heard that he was within it, he quitted it immediately, saying, "Let us depart, lest the bath fall on us, now that Cerinthus, the enemy of the truth, is there." See S. Irenæus iii. 3. Euseb. iii. 20. Theodoret, Hær. Fab. ii. 3. Cerinthus made a distinction between Jesus and Christ.

See also the important testimony of S. Irenæus (iii. 18, Grabe), who cites this passage (vv. 18—22), and applies it to the Gnostic Teachers of that age who arose within the Church, viz., Simon, Ebion, and Cerinthus. Cp. Estius here, p. 1217. Dr. Hammond here, p. 828. Bp. Bull, Ind. Eccl. Cathol. ii. 6, p. 44. Dr. Waterland on the Trinity, vol. v. chap. vi. p. 187, and above, Introduction to this Epistle, pp. 98—101.

— μεμενήκεισαν ἄν] they would have remained with us. If they had been really of us—living and sound members of the mystical body of Christ—they would have continued in it. Continuance is an essential condition of vitality. He who quits the Church proves himself to be an unsound member of it; "nemo sapiens nisi fidelis; nemo Christianus, nisi qui ad finem perseveraverit." Tertullian, Præscr. 3.

This saying of the Apostle gives no countenance to the predestinarian notions of final perseverance. The terms here used, viz., going out, and abiding, are significant of free will.

— ἀλλ' ἵνα φανερωθῶσιν] they went out—i. e., their going out was permitted—in order that they might be manifested that they are not all of us. The emphatic word is φανερωθῶσιν, and the use of ἐκ—denoting origin from, and appurtenance to—may be illustrated by 1 Cor. xii. 15, ὅτι οὐκ εἰμὶ χείρ, οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐκ τοῦ σώματος, and see below, iii. 12, Καὶν ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ ἦν. Compare the words of St. Paul (1 Cor. xi. 19), "There must also be heresies among you, in order that they, who are approved, may be made manifest among you;" where the conjunction ἵνα, as here, marks the design of God in permitting Heresies and Schisms to exist (cp. note above on 2 Cor. iv. 7), and suggests the uses which the faithful ought to make of heresies and schisms. Cp. Tertullian, Præscr. 3, where he cites these words of St. John.

A special benefit accruing from the going out of these Heretics, and from their overt opposition to the doctrine of Christ, and from the public manifestation of them to the world in their true character (as Simon Magus was made manifest in his opposition to St. Peter at Rome. Euseb. ii. 15. S. Cyril, Catech. c. vi. Arnobius, ii. p. 50. Maxim. Taurin., Hom. 54, p. 231. S. Epiphan. hær. 21. Philastr. c. 29. Tillemont i. p. 76), was this, that the Heathen were thus disabused of their notion, that the Christian Church herself was identified with these Heretics, and was accountable for their erroneous teaching and profligate living. St. Peter says, that through them the Way of Truth would be evil spoken of (2 Pet. ii. 2); and Theodoret asserts (hær. fab. ii. præf.) that "the Teachers of those heresies" (such as Simon Magus and Cerinthus, whom he specifies) "were called Christians, and that many persons imagined that all Christians were guilty of their enormities."

Some expositors suppose that οὐ πάντες here is equivalent to none: cp. Matt. xxiv. 22. But this appears to be an incorrect rendering, and is not authorized by the ancient Interpreters.

St. John says that their going out was the proof that they are not all of us: cp. 2 Thess. iii. 2. They all pretend to be of us, and the Heathen confound them with us. But their secession from us, and opposition to us, clearly prove that they are not all of us. Some false teachers there are still, who propagate heresies in the Church. They are Tares in the Field, but as long as they are in the field, it is not easy to distinguish them from the wheat. They are not of us, but they are not manifested as such by going out from us. But the going out of those who have left us, and who resist us, is a manifest token to all men, that they and their associates are not all of us, as they profess to be, and as the heathen suppose them to be; and as even some of the brethren in the Church imagine that they are, and are therefore deceived by them. By their going out they are manifested in their true light; and by their opposition to us Truth is distinguished from Error, and Error from Truth.

20. ὑμεῖς χρῖσμα ἔχετε] ye have an unction from the Holy One, Who is anointed with the oil of gladness above His fellows. See Heb. i. 9. Cp. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 178. His unction flows down on you His members, and therefore, when a name was to be given to the disciples to distinguish them from all others, they were called Christians. Acts xi. 26.

Ye have a chrism from the Christ. They, the heretical teachers, are members of Antichrist.

Ye are anointed in Him Who has consecrated you with His unction, and made you kings and priests to God. Rev. i. 6.

This language of St. John is the more remarkable, because it is addressed to παιδία, pueruli, children. Children have an unction from the Holy One, in their Baptism, when they were made members of Christ. "Eam unctionem spiritualem habent pueruli, namque cum baptismo conjunctum erat donum Spiritûs Sancti" (Bengel), and in their Confirmation, called χρίσις τελειωτική. See Bp. Wilson here.

— καὶ οἴδατε πάντα] and ye know all things. Ye, even though children in age, are the true Gnostics, for ye know Christ; whereas they who pretend to know every thing are mere babes. Cp. John xiv. 26. They, the so-called Gnostics, pretend to knowledge and to teach you; but they know nothing, and walk in darkness, v. 11. See above, 1 John ii. 3, and below, vv. 21. 27 of this chapter, and on Jude 5.

This language is adopted by St. John's scholars, S. Ignatius and S. Polycarp, in their Epistles, ὃν οὐδὲν λανθάνει ὑμᾶς. Ignat. ad Eph. 14. "Nihil vos latet," Polycarp, ad Phil. 12.

22. τίς ἐστιν ὁ ψεύστης] who is the liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? Who is the liar? Who is the Antichrist, in whom the lie, of which St. John speaks, is summed up? Who is he, that has that character, as distinguished from, and opposed to, those who hold the Truth? On this sense of the definite article, see on John iii. 10; xviii. 10; and Winer, § 18, p. 97. Compare the words of Tertullian, maintaining from these words of St. John the doctrine of the Trinity, against Praxeas, c. 27.

Ye who are true Christians have an unction from the Holy One; ye are God's anointed ones; ye are even called χριστοί, by virtue of your union with Christ (see Ps. cv. 15); ye make up one body in Christ, see on Gal. iv. 19; and Rev. xii. 5. They are ἀντί-χριστοι, they make up one body of Antichrist. Cp. Bp. Pearson, Art. ii. pp. 190—196.

— οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἀντίχριστος] This (i. e. he who denieth that Jesus is the Christ) is the antichrist, who denieth the Father and the Son. Cerinthus and his followers denied that Jesus was the Christ, dividing Jesus from Christ; and they denied the Son, because they did not acknowledge that Jesus was personally united with the Word, the Eternal Son of God; nor that the Word was the only-begotten of the Father; and so they disowned the divine Sonship of Jesus and Christ, and thus they denied the Father and the Son. See S. Irenæus, iii. 18, Grabe, and Dr. Waterland, v. p. 188, and above, Introduction, p. 100.

Ebion denied the divinity of Jesus. Simon Magus affirmed that he himself was the Father and the Son in different manifestations, and he denied the reality of Christ's humanity. See above on 2 Pet. ii. 1, and Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. iii. p. 301, note. Thus they were Antichrists, denying the Father and the Son.

Ye are members of Christ, ye are one body in Him. Ye are one man in Him (see John xvii. 11. 21. 1 Cor. x. 17); they are members of Antichrist, and make one body in him: they are the Antichrist. See on v. 18.

They are called Antichrists, who fall away from the Church of Christ, and teach what is false concerning Christ, in order to be leaders in Heresy. Didymus.

23. πᾶς ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν Υἱόν] Every one who denieth the Son hath not even the Father, because the essence of a Father is to have a Son; and if the filial relation of Jesus Christ to God is denied—as it is denied by these Antichristian teachers—the paternity of the Father is denied also. See above, Introduction, p. 160.

The words of the Apostle here manifestly refer to the dogmas of Cerinthus and Ebion. Bp. Bull, Jud. Eccl. ii. sect. 5.

— ὁ ὁμολογῶν—ἔχει] he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also. These words are printed in italics in the Authorized English Version; but they are found in the text of the oldest Greek MSS., e. g. A, B, C, and in many Cursives, and in Clement, Origen, Athanasius, Cyril, in the Syriac, Vulgate (many MSS.), and Arabic Versions: and are received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch.

25. τὴν ζωὴν τὴν αἰώνιον] On the apposition, see Phil. iii. 18. 2 Cor. x. 13. Winer, § 59, p. 469, note on John viii. 25.

28. καὶ νῦν, τεκνία] and now, my little children, abide in Him. He returns to the general term of address, little children (see ii. 12), and assures all his spiritual children that they have no need of learning any new doctrine (see vv. 21—27), but it is their duty to abide stedfast in the old. See Jude 3, and Rev. ii. 24.

— ἵνα—μὴ αἰσχυνθῶμεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ] in order that we may not be driven to shame from Him, and by Him, at His Coming; as He Himself says in the Gospel that the wicked will be. Mark viii. 38. On this force of ἀπὸ, see Winer, § 47, p. 332. Cp. the use of ἀπὸ in Ecclus. xxi. 22, and of ἐκ in Rev. xv. 2.

29. ἐὰν εἰδῆτε] if ye know that He is righteous, ye know that every one who hath been born of Him is righteous. If ye know (εἰδῆτε), as a doctrine of the Christian faith, that He is righteous, ye are sure by analogical inference, from your own personal experience and cognizance (γινώσκετε), that whoever has been really born of Him, whosoever is His genuine offspring, is also righteous; and consequently ye are sure, that the Gnostic teachers and their votaries, who profess to be children of Christ, and yet live ungodly lives, assert what is false. See below, iii. 7—9, ὁ ποιῶν δικαιοσύνην δίκαιός ἐστι, καθὼς ἐκεῖνος δίκαιός ἐστιν, κ.τ.λ.

On the distinction between the words εἰδέναι and γινώσκειν, see above, ii. 3.

Some Expositors render γινώσκετε by know ye, in the imperative mood; but this seems to be inconsistent with St. John's declaration above, vv. 20, 21.

CH. III. 1. ποταπὴν ἀγάπην δέδωκεν] what kind of love hath the Father given to us; to us, who were enemies to Him, Rom. v. 10. Col. i. 20, 21. 1 John iv. 10. Bp. Pearson, Art. i. p. 51. His love to us was a free gift, Rom. v. 16. He gave us power in Christ to become Sons of God, τέκνα Θεοῦ, John i. 12. On ποταπὸς, see Matt. viii. 27. Luke i. 29. 2 Pet. iii. 11. Cp. Clemens R. c. 35.

— ὁ κόσμος οὐ γινώσκει ἡμᾶς] the world knoweth us not. Do not therefore be surprised and dismayed, that you are hated and persecuted by it, see v. 13, and cp. our Lord's words, John xv. 19; xvi. 33.

2. ἐὰν φανερωθῇ] when He shall be manifested; i. e. Christ. On this use of ἐκεῖνος, see ii. 6, and cp. Col. iii. 4. The nominative to φανερωθῇ is contained in αὐτῷ, and cp. v. 5, ἐκεῖνος (i. e. Christ) ἐφανερώθη, and v. 8, ἐφανερώθη ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ.

— ὅμοιοι αὐτῷ ἐσόμεθα] we shall be like Him. See Phil. iii. 21. Col. iii. 4.

— ὀψόμεθα αὐτόν] we shall see Him appearing. On the sense of ὄπτομαι, see note on John xvi. 16. Rev. i. 7.

We shall then see Him as He is; that is, as God as well as Man, in all His glorious attributes of perfect holiness and love. We shall see His face (see Rev. xxii. 4), and therefore we know that we shall be like Him; for only they who are like Him will have the beatific vision of God. Matt. v. 8. 1 Cor. xiii. 12; xv. 49. 2 Cor. iii. 18. Col. iii. 4.

Let us therefore so live, that when He shall come again, we may be able to behold Him, as He is, in all the fulness of His grace and glory. Cassiodor.

The editions generally have ἐστί; but ἔστι, he is, or exists, in His own essence, seems preferable, as more emphatic.

3. ἐπ' αὐτῷ] upon Him, Christ Jesus, Who is our hope (1 Tim. i. 1). He is only the foundation, upon which our hope is built. Cp. Rom. xv. 12, and Heb. vi. 18, and the words of one of St. John's disciples, "Let us cleave continually to our Hope, which is Christ Jesus." S. Polycarp, Ep. ad Phil. 8.

— ἁγνίζει ἑαυτόν] halloweth Himself, as Christ is holy. Cp. John xvii. 19. 24, and Rom. xii. 1. 1 Pet. i. 16. Every one who hath the hope of beholding Him, halloweth himself, as He is holy; for "without holiness no man shall see (ὄψεται) the Lord," Heb. xii. 14.

4. ἀνομίαν] lawlessness; for where there is no law, there is no sin. See Rom. iv. 15, and cp. Bp. Pearson, Art. x. pp. 670, 671. Bp. Sanderson, iv. 74. 94. 190.

"Every one who worketh sin, worketh also lawlessness." This assertion is directed against the Ebionites (see Irenæus, p. 103, Grabe) and Cerinthian Gnostics, who professed a reverence for the Law of God. St. John argues, that it is vain for them to allege that they revere the Law, when they commit sin. Therefore, let them not deceive you by this allegation, see v. 7.

5, 6. καὶ οἴδατε] and ye know that He was manifested in order to take away our sins (see John i. 29), and in Him sin does not exist. Every one that abideth in Him sinneth not; does not live in sin; does not allow himself in the wilful and habitual practice of sin. See below, v. 9, and Bp. Wilson here: every one that sinneth hath not seen Him, nor known Him.

St. John's meaning here is illustrated by the language of his disciple, S. Ignatius. "No one who professeth faith, sinneth; and no one who hath love, hateth. They, who profess themselves Christians, will be manifested by what they do." S. Ignatius, ad Ephes. 14; and this is the sense assigned to St. John's words by S. Jerome in Jovinian. ii. c. 1, and contra Pelagianos, i. c. 3.

Here then is another caution against the Gnostic Teachers, who professed to believe in Christ, and pretended to superior knowledge of divine things, and yet indulged themselves in the commission of sin, and denied Him by their evil lives. Cp. Titus i. 16. 2 Tim. ii. 19; iii. 5.

7. τεκνία] my little children, let no one deceive you: as these Gnostic teachers endeavoured to do. Cp. ii. 26, "These things I write concerning those who are endeavouring to deceive you." Here is the clue to the interpretation of these verses, which cannot be understood without reference to their tenets and practices. See the next note, and the formula μὴ πλανᾶσθε, James i. 16.

— ὁ ποιῶν τὴν δικαιοσύνην] he that worketh righteousness is righteous, like as He (Christ) is righteous: a sentence directed against those deceivers, such as the followers of Simon Magus, who said that they could please God without righteousness; and that, whatever might be the case with others, who had not their spiritual gnosis, they themselves had no need to work righteousness, but that they would be saved by grace, whatever their works might be. "Liberos agere quæ velint; secundùm enim ipsius (Simonis) gratiam salvari homines, sed non secundùm operas justas." S. Irenæus, i. 20, Grabe. S. Hippolytus, Philos. p. 175. Epiphan. hær. xxi. Theodoret, hær. fab. i. c. 1, who testifies that on the presumption of the indefectibility of special grace within themselves, they fell into all kinds of lasciviousness.

8. ὁ ποιῶν τ. ἁμαρτίαν] he that worketh, or maketh sin: ποιῶν, a strong word describing habitual design and actual habit of life, not an occasional lapse on the road, but a wilful and presumptuous self-surrender to sin, as a trade or profession; like that of Ahab, "who sold himself to work wickedness." 1 Kings xxi. 25.

— εἰς τοῦτο ἐφανερώθη] for this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the Devil. A third argument against these Gnostic deceivers, who are doing the work of the Devil (v. 8), and opposing the purpose of the Advent of Christ, and thus proving themselves to be Antichrists. This use of the word λύειν, applied to the destruction of what is evil, is found in the Epistle of St. John's scholar, S. Ignatius, to St. John's Church of Ephesus (ad Eph. i. 3), λύεται δλεθρος, ἐλύετο πᾶσα μάγεια (ibid. c. 19).

9. πᾶς ὁ γεγεννημένος ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἁμαρτίαν οὐ ποιεῖ] Every one who hath been born of God doth not work sin, doth not work it as his habitual work, οὐ ποιεῖ, see v. 8; "doth not knowingly live in sin" (Bp. Wilson), because His seed (God's) abideth in him: a sentence directed against the deceivers who called themselves an elect seed, and incapable of sin. Cp. Irenæus, i. 12; Grabe, p. 31. Cp. note above, i. 7; below on Jude 19.

Observe the perfect γεγεννημένος, indicating that the filial state, which commenced when he was first regenerate, continues; cp. Winer, § 40, p. 243; above, 1 Cor. xv. 4. 2 Cor. i. 15; v. 17. Col. i. 16; and see the next note; and below, v. 18.

— καὶ οὐ δύναται ἁμαρτάνειν] and he cannot be a sinner, because he hath been born of God.

The supposed difficulty in this passage is to be removed by due attention to the tenses used. Such attention would have preserved the Church from much erroneous teaching and profitless controversy.

St. John uses the perfect tense here: he does not say ἐγεννήθη, he was born; but γεγέννηται, he hath been born, and the life given him at his birth abides in him. See the preceding note.

Observe also he uses here the present infinitive, not the aorist. He says, οὐ δύναται ἁμαρτάνειν, i. e. he cannot be a sinner. He does not say, οὐ δύναται ἁμαρτεῖν, he cannot fall into sin, by ignorance, error, and infirmity. Such an assertion would be inconsistent with the whole tenor of Scripture, for in many things we offend all (James iii. 2), and with St. John's own doctrine in this Epistle, where he says, "If we say that we have not sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us; but if we confess our sins, God is faithful and just in order to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness," i. 8, 9.

On this difference of the present infinitive and aorist infinitive, see Winer, § 44, pp. 296, 297, and Stallbaum there quoted, p. 295. Thus, for example, πιστεῦσαι is to make a profession of faith, or an act of faith, at a particular time; but πιστεύειν is to believe, to be a believer; δουλεῦσαι is to do an act of service; δουλεύειν, to be a slave; οὐδεὶς οἰκέτης δύναται δυσὶ Κυρίοις δουλεύειν, no servant can be a slave to two masters: so ἁμαρτεῖν is to commit a sin, but ἁμαρτάνειν is much more than this, it is to be a sinner.

He that hath been born of God, and liveth as a son of God, cannot be a sinner. It is inconsistent with the essential conditions of his spiritual birth, by which he is dead to sin. It is contrary to the nature which he has as a child of God. This is well expressed by Didymus here, who says, "St. John does not assert that the man who has been born of God will never commit sin; but he asserts that he does not work sin—Non scriptum est non peccabit, sed non peccatum facit: non idem est peccare et peccatum facere; a child of two days old, by reason of his natural childhood, cannot sin, but a child of God cannot be a sinner."

Therefore, they who commit sin, on the plea, that being elect children of God, they must be saved, whatever they do, contravene the fundamental law of their existence, and disinherit themselves. See this plea handled by St. Paul, Rom. vi. 1—4.

The word δύναμαι here, as often, does not signify a physical, but a moral impossibility. They that are evil cannot speak good things. (Matt. xii. 34.) Christ could not do any miracle at Nazareth because of their unbelief. (Mark vi. 5.) How can ye believe, who receive honour one of another? John v. 44. Cp. John vii. 7; viii. 43; xii. 39; xiv. 17. Gen. xix. 22; note on Luke xvii. 1; and on Heb. vi. 4. Compare also what St. John himself says below, v. 18, "We know that every one who hath been born of God sinneth not: but he that was born of God keepeth himself, and the Wicked One toucheth him not."

St. John's meaning here, which is of a controversial and polemical character, and must be viewed in reference to the errors which he is refuting, is well illustrated by the words of his disciple, S. Ignatius, speaking to St. John's Church, "Let no one deceive you. They who are carnal cannot do the things which are spiritual; nor can they who are spiritual do the things which are carnal. Faith cannot do the works of Unbelief, nor can Unbelief do the works of Faith. The works which ye do in the flesh are spiritual, because ye work all your works in Jesus Christ." S. Ignatius, ad Eph. 8.

The notions of the Gnostic Teachers and their Votaries are thus described by Justin Martyr (c. Tryph. p. 370), "Ye deceive yourselves and such souls as are like you, who say, that although they are sinners, and if they have knowledge of God, God will not count their sin to be sin." Compare Epiphanius, hær. xxi. and xxvi.

10. καὶ ὁ μὴ ἀγαπῶν] and he who loveth not his brother. This lack of love was noted by the earliest Christian writers as a distinguishing characteristic of these deceivers to whom St. John refers. Thus S. Ignatius says of them, "Observe those who are heterodox with regard to the grace of Christ, how contrary they are to the mind of God. They have no regard for love,—περὶ ἀγάπης οὐ μέλει αὐτοῖς, they do not care for the widow, or the orphan, or the hungry, or the thirsty." And he adds as a remarkable characteristic, that they abstain from the Feast of love, the holy Eucharist, because they did not believe in the reality of Christ's flesh; which was the heresy of Simon Magus and his followers. S. Ignatius ad Smyrn. 6. See S. Irenæus i. 20, Grabe, and cp. Dr. Waterland, viii. p. 31, ed. 1823.

12. οὐ καθὼς Κάϊν] not as Cain was of the wicked one, and slew his brother. Let it not be so with you. Be not ye imitators of Cain, whom some of these false teachers even extolled. See on Jude 11, and Theodoret, hæret. fab. i. 15, who testifies of some heresiarchs of sub-Apostolic times, that they asserted that Cain had been freed from the subjection to the higher power; and they asserted the same of Esau, Korah, and even the Sodomites, and Judas: and he says that in their practice of sins they invoked the names of Angels, to whom those sins were dedicated by them. Cp. Epiphan. hær. xxxviii.

14. μεταβεβήκαμεν] we have passed from death unto life: and abide in life. On this use of the perfect, see v. 9, and compare John v. 24, "He that heareth My word and believeth on Him that sent Me hath everlasting life, and hath passed from death into life."

Elz. has τὸν ἀδελφὸν after ἀγαπῶν, but this is not in A, B, and is rejected by Lach., Tisch.

16. καὶ ἡμεῖς ὀφείλομεν ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀδελφῶν τὰς ψυχὰς θεῖναι] and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren: a remarkable saying on the duty of Christian Martyrdom. It was probably suggested by the seductive tenets of the false teachers (οἱ πλανῶντες, mentioned by St. John ii. 26; iii. 7), who courted popularity in times of Persecution, by alleging that provided a man had knowledge of the doctrines of Christianity as delivered by them, and adopted their theories, it was not necessary for him to expose himself to any danger in the maintenance of the faith, much less to endure martyrdom, and to lay down his life for the brethren: but that he might freely associate with the heathen in their worship, and eat things offered to idols. This was particularly the doctrine of the Simonians (see Origen c. Cels. vi. p. 282. Euseb. ii. 13), and of the Nicolaitans (see Rev. ii. 15. S. Irenæus i. 23), and of the Cerinthians; see Philastr. hær. c. 36.

Tertullian wrote his book called Scorpiace against these notions, and he refers to this passage in St. John's Epistle, in proof of the duty of Martyrdom, c. 12.

— θεῖναι] So A, B, C, and Lach., Tisch. The aorist is on other accounts preferable to the present, τιθέναι, the reading of Elz. See on v. 9.

The words seem to be imitated in the Epistle of the Church of Vienne and Lyons in Euseb. v. 1, speaking of a Christian Martyr, εὐδοκήσας ὑπὲρ τῆς τῶν ἀδελφῶν ἀπολογίας καὶ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ θεῖναι ψυχήν.

17. τὸν βίον τοῦ κόσμου] the world's good things. See Mark xii. 44. Luke xv. 12. Remark the contrast between βίος and ζωή, and this world and the other. He who is not ready to bestow a part of the βίος τοῦ κόσμου in love to his brethren, has no reasonable hope of the ζωὴ αἰώνιος, mentioned v. 15.

— καὶ κλείσῃ τὰ σπλάγχνα αὐτοῦ ἀπ' αὐτοῦ] and shutteth his bowels of compassion from him; which he ought to open to him.

On the word σπλάγχνα, see Matt. ix. 36. Luke i. 78. 2 Cor. vi. 12. Phil. i. 8; ii. 1. Col. iii. 12. On the significancy of the preposition ἀπὸ here, cp. ii. 28. Rev. xv. 2.

This unmercifulness was a characteristic of these heretical teachers; see above, on v. 10, and cp. James ii. 15, 16.

18. τεκνία] Elz. adds μου. Not in A, B, C.

— μηδὲ τῇ γλώσσῃ, ἀλλ' ἐν ἔργῳ] nor in the tongue, but in deed. So the best MSS. and Edd. Elz. omits τῇ and ἐν.

19. καὶ ἔμπροσθεν αὐτοῦ πείσομεν τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν] and we shall assure our hearts before Him, in His sight, we shall satisfy them, and set them at ease, when we examine them, as in the presence of Him Who searcheth the hearts. On this use of πείθω cp. Matt. xxviii. 14. Acts xii. 20. Gal. i. 10. This assurance will be produced in us by the visible evidence of Love working in our lives. We may not reason from our hearts, and draw assurances from them as to the goodness of our lives; but the evidence which we see in our lives, when tested by the rule of God's law, may afford a comfortable assurance to our hearts; and such an assurance from our hearts will give us confidence towards God. See on Acts xxiii. 1. Rom. ii. 15.

When we find by experience that we love the brethren, not in word and in the tongue only, but in deed and truth, then we may assure our hearts before Him. If we forgive our brethren, we may be assured that God will forgive us. Cp. Bp. Andrewes, v. 437.

The word heart here is equivalent to Conscience; as is observed by Bp. Sanderson (Lectures on Conscience, Lect. i. § 3, vol. iv. p. 2), who remarks that the Hebrew language has no precise term for Conscience, but the Hebrew writers in the Old Testament generally use either לֵב (leb), heart, or רוּחַ (ruach), spirit (cp. 1 Cor. ii. 11), for Conscience. See Prov. iv. 23, Keep thy heart, i. e., watch over thy conscience: cp. Prov. xviii. 15, and Eccl. vii. 22, "thy heart knoweth;" i. e., "scit conscientia tua;" and so St. John here uses the word heart: and cp. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, chap. i. art. 8, and Bengel here.

20. ὅτι ἐὰν καταγινώσκῃ] because,—if our heart condemn us, —this is, because (ὅτι) God is greater than our hearts, and knoweth all things. The condemnation, which our Conscience pronounces, derives its force from the greatness of God, Who is Lord of our Conscience, and knoweth all things.

A remarkable declaration concerning the office of Conscience. The power of human Conscience proceeds from divine Omniscience. Conscience is God's oracle in the human soul. Its verdicts receive their force from His Law, which regulates Conscience; and from His judgments, of which the sentences of Conscience are but a rehearsal. Conscience speaks to man; but it hearkens to God, Who is greater than our heart, or Conscience, and knows all things; and because Conscience listens to the voice of the Omniscient, and is the obedient minister of the Almighty Lawgiver and Everlasting Judge, Who alone can save and destroy (James iv. 12); therefore it is, that (ὅτι) the judgments of Conscience have such weight.

Every man has received a Conscience from God, which acts as a Deputy and Vicegerent of the Almighty, and as a Preacher of His eternal Law, and as a Herald of His Judgments, and dictates what man ought to do, and calls him to a severe scrutiny for whatever he has done, and as a just Judge dispenses rewards and punishments, censures or approvals, according to the merits of men's actions, and rehearses to them the future verdicts of the Great Day of Assize.

The state of Conscience is this, that it is placed in the middle between God and man; as a servant to obey God, Who is greater than the heart, that is, Who is Lord supreme over the Conscience; and also as His minister, to issue His commands to man, and to take cognizance of his acts (see Bp. Sanderson, Lect. ii. vol. iv. pp. 22, 23).

Conscience is like the Centurion in the Gospel, a man under authority, and also having soldiers under him. (Matt. viii. 9.) So Conscience is under the authority of God, but it has man's actions under itself. Hence its Power.

These considerations may solve the difficulties which have been supposed by many to exist in this passage, and which some have endeavoured to remove by cancelling the second ὅτι, or by resolving it into ὅ, τι, or by reading ἔτι for it, or by supposing that the second ὅτι is redundant. See the notes of Wetstein, Bengel, De Wette, Lücke, Düsterdieck, and Huther, Winer, § 64, p. 513, note. Before the second ὅτι there is only a common ellipsis, instances of which may be seen in Mark iii. 20. Luke i. 25; xi. 18. John ii. 18. Cp. Winer, § 53, p. 395.

The word καταγινώσκειν is a middle term between κατηγορεῖν, to accuse, and κατακρίνειν, to pronounce a formal judicial condemnation; and is to be explained from γινώσκειν, to know and take cognizance of, and from its opposite συγγινώσκειν, to pardon. Cp. Gal. ii. 11, and Deut. xxv. 1, where it is opposed to δικαιοῦν, to pronounce just, to acquit. Ecclus. xiv. 2, "Blessed is the man whom his soul οὐ κατέγνω."

21. ἐὰν ἡ καρδία] if our heart, or Conscience, doth not condemn us, we have confidence toward God: because our Conscience is His Vicegerent within us, and pronounces judgment according to His Laws; and therefore its approval is a pledge to us of His favour. See the preceding note.

The word παῤῥησία, freedom of speech, expresses here the assurance which a suppliant, who has a powerful advocate and a good cause, has, that his request will be granted. See ii. 28; iv. 17; v. 14. Heb. iv. 16.

On the use of πρὸς here, cp. Rom. v. 1, εἰρήνην ἔχομεν πρὸς τὸν Θεόν.

23. αὕτη ἡ ἐντολὴ—ἵνα πιστεύσωμεν] This is the commandment, that we should believe the Name of His Son Jesus Christ. See our Lord's words recorded by St. John in his Gospel, vi. 29.

The Heretics to whom St. John refers, either separated Jesus from Christ, as the Cerinthians did, or denied that Jesus is the Son of God, as the Ebionites, Cerinthians, and Simonians, and Docetæ did. Cp. Waterland, v. p. 189, and Bp. Bull, Jud. Eccl. ii. 9, and note above on 2 Pet. ii. 1, and Introduction to this Epistle, pp. 98—102.

In opposition to these erroneous and strange doctrines, St. John declares that this is God's commandment, that we should believe the Name (observe the dative case, cp. iv. 1), that is, give credence to, and place our trust in, the Name of Jesus Christ His Son; i. e. in the man Jesus, acknowledged to be the Christ and the Son of God. See iv. 15, and v. 1.

CH. IV. 1. μὴ παντὶ πνεύματι πιστεύετε] believe not ye every spirit, but prove ye the spirits whether they are of God; for many false Prophets, or false Teachers (see Matt. vii. 15), have gone forth into the world; they have gone forth, not being sent as true Prophets are (see on John x. 8). He refers especially to the followers of Simon Magus, Ebion, Cerinthus, and the Nicolaitans. See Introduction, p. 98, and on 2 Pet. ii. 1, 2, and above, i. 1; ii. 18. 22; below, iv. 3, and 2 John 7.

St. John had just said, This is the commandment of God, that we should believe the Name of His Son Jesus Christ; he now warns them against believing those spirits which would seduce them from this belief.

— δοκιμάζετε] try ye the spirits. Test them and prove them (1 Thess. v. 21), as metals or coins are tried. False Prophets, false Christs, are to be expected to arise, and to work miracles, so as to deceive many (Matt. xxiv. 24. 2 Thess. ii. 9). The criteria, βάσανοι, or touchstones, by which they are to be tested, are these. Ye shall know them by their fruits —not only the fruits of their lives, but by the fruits of their doctrine. See above on Matt. vii. 16. Though they may have the gift of tongues and prophecy, and miracles, yet if they have not Charity, which proves itself by Unity, they are not to be received. (See 1 Cor. xiii. 1—5.) Even if they work miracles, and deliver prophecies, and the prophecies come to pass, yet if they would lead any of you astray, to worship idols or any being but God (Deut. xiii. 1—5), and even if they are Angels from heaven, but bring not this doctrine (2 John 10) which the Apostles brought, but add any thing to it, or take any thing from it, they are to be accursed, Gal. i. 8.

2, 3. ἐν τούτῳ] by this—that I am about to specify—ye know the Spirit of God: every spirit that confesseth Jesus Christ having come in the flesh, is of God: and every spirit that doth not confess Jesus Christ, is not of God. Observe μὴ here, bringing out the non-confession as the essence of alienation from God. And this is the spirit of Antichrist, of which ye have heard that it cometh; yea, now it is in the world already.

In v. 3 Elz. omits τὸν Ἰησοῦν, but τὸν is in A, B, G, and Ἰησοῦν is in A, B, and so Tisch. Some MSS., G, K, and several Cursives, add Χριστὸν after Ἰησοῦν, and so Elz.; but it is not in A, B, nor in Vulg., Coptic, Syriac, or Armenian Version, nor in Origen, Irenæus, and Cyril, who quote this passage; and is not received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch.

Some MSS., A, B, and a few Cursives and Versions, omit ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθότα, but these words are in G, K, and in most Cursives, and the Syriac Version, and they appear to be recognized by Polycarp, Origen, Cyprian, Œcumen., Theophylact.

Some ancient writers render γινώσκετε as if it were the imperative mood—know ye: and this translation has something to commend it. Cp. πιστεύετε, δοκιμάζετε, v. 1; but cp. also ii. 20. 29.

The words τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ τοῦ ἀντιχρίστου, are generally rendered,—this is the spirit of Antichrist. It is however to be observed, that πνεῦμα, spirit, is not in the text here; and the expression seems to be framed purposely to be as large and general as possible; this is the essence, character, work—of Antichrist. On this generalizing use of the article, cp. James iv. 14.

A question arises here, If "every spirit that confesseth Jesus Christ having come in the flesh," is of God,—may not some Teachers who preach erroneous and strange doctrines, but yet acknowledge that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, be said to be of God? To put the question in the words of S. Augustine, "Arius, and Eunomius, and Macedonius, and Nestorius, own that Jesus Christ came in the flesh; are not they therefore of God?"

To that question S. Augustine himself replies,—That those Heresiarchs did not in fact confess Christ to have come in the flesh, because, whatever they might do by words, they in their works denied Him. (Titus i. 16.) "They have not charity," he says, "because they have not unity; and therefore all their other gifts are of no avail." (1 Cor. xiii. 1—3.)

Similar to this is the exposition of Didymus here: "Sapiendo et agendo, quæ Christus in humanitate docuit et egit, hic Spiritum habet à Deo."

Another reply is made to the question by others, who say that St. John speaks only with reference to the heresies of his own age. See Estius and Bengel here.

Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθότα, ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστι· [3] [c] καὶ πᾶν πνεῦμα ὃ μὴ ὁμολογεῖ τὸν Ἰησοῦν ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθότα, ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐκ ἔστι· καὶ τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ τοῦ ἀντιχρίστου, ὃ ἀκηκόατε ὅτι ἔρχεται, καὶ νῦν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ ἐστὶν ἤδη. c 2 Thess. 2. 7. ch. 2. 18, 22.

Perhaps, however, the true answer is this: St. John does not say that every spirit is of God, which acknowledges that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh; but he says, that every spirit is of God which confesses Jesus Christ having come, and being come, in the flesh: that is, which confesses Jesus to be the Christ, and to be no ideal phantom, but a real Person,—which, in a word, confesses Jesus Christ, Very God and Very Man. Every spirit which makes this good confession, and lives in the spirit of this creed, is born of God. Jesus Christ, being confessed to be God and Man, is the Rock on which the Church is built. See Matt. xvi. 18. And this is what our Lord says to St. Peter, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-Jona: for flesh and blood did not reveal it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven."

The participle (ἐληλυθότα) is used in the same way as in the statement of St. Paul, "we preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified" (ἐσταυρωμένον, 1 Cor. ii. 2).

The doctrine of the passage is thus enforced by one of St. John's disciples, Bishop of Smyrna and Martyr. "Let us serve Him with fear and all reverence, as He Himself commanded, and His Apostles who preached to us; let us do this, being zealous for that which is good, and shunning the stumbling-blocks of false brethren, and of those who wear the Name of the Lord in hypocrisy, and seduce (ἀποπλανῶσι) foolish men from Him. For every one who does not confess that Jesus Christ is come in the Flesh, is Antichrist; and whosoever does not confess the testimony of the cross, is of the devil (cp. above, iii. 8—10); and whosoever wrests the Scripture according to his own lusts, and says that there is no Resurrection nor Judgment, is the first-born of Satan. Wherefore, avoiding the folly of the many, and the false doctrine, let us attend to the word that was delivered to us from the beginning." S. Polycarp, Ep. ad Phil. 6 and 7.

One of S. Polycarp's scholars, S. Irenæus, writes in similar terms against those who said that Jesus was a mere man, and that Christ was not the Everlasting Word of God, but only an Æon, who came forth from their ideal pleroma, and dwelt only for a season in Jesus, and suffered only in semblance; in opposition to the true doctrine of the Catholic Church of Christ, that the two Natures of God and Man are indissolubly united in the One Person of Jesus Christ, the Eternal Word, the Only-begotten of the Father, Who was made Man for us, and by dying for us in our stead, is the Saviour of the world.

Therefore, adds Irenæus, all they are without the pale of the Evangelical Dispensation, who, under a pretended show of knowledge, say that Jesus is one, and Christ is another, and that the Only-begotten is another, and that the Word is different from these; and that the Saviour is different also, whom some of them assert to be an Emanation; as those disciples of error feign, who appear outwardly like sheep—for in words they bear a likeness to us—but inwardly they are wolves: whom St. John, the disciple of the Lord, commands us in his Epistle to shun, where he says that many deceivers are gone forth into the world, who do not confess Jesus Christ as coming (ἐρχόμενον) in the flesh (2 John 7, 8). And again, in his Epistle, John says (iv. 1—3), By this know ye (cognoscite) the Spirit of God. Every spirit which confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: and every spirit which separates Jesus (solvit Jesum, i. e. divides Jesus from Christ) is not of God, but of Antichrist. And again, in his Epistle, John says (v. 1), Every one that believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God. S. Irenæus (iii. 18, ed. Grabe; iii. 16, ed. Stieren).

Irenæus—whose words here are preserved only in the old Latin Versions—appears to be quoting from memory and paraphrastically, for he cites these passages as from the same Epistle of St. John, and he inserts the words, "solvit Jesum;" and this paraphrase may have led to the opinion expressed by some ancient writers (see Socrat. Eccles. hist. vii. 32, and others in Tisch., p. 222), that the words λύει Ἰησοῦν were once in the text here, and they are found in the Vulgate. Cp. Tertullian, c. Marcion. v. 16, "Antichristi spiritus negantes Christum in carne venisse, et solventes Jesum." The heresy which denied Christ to have come in the flesh was that of the disciples of Simon Magus and of the Docetæ; the heresy which separated Jesus from Christ was that of Cerinthus. See also Tertullian, de carne Christi, c. 24, where he cites this passage (vv. 1—3) against those who in his own age denied the verity of Christ's flesh: and c. Marcion. iii. 8, and Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. iii. p. 301, note. Bp. Bull, Jud. Eccl. Cath. ii. 7; and above, Introduction to this Epistle, p. 98.

8. ἀγάπη] Love. The article ἡ is not prefixed, nor in v. 16.

9. τὸν Υἱὸν αὐτοῦ τὸν μονογενῆ ἀπ. ὁ Θ.] God hath sent His Son the Only-begotten—a statement of the true Faith against the heretical notion that "Jesus was not personally united with the Word, the Eternal Son of God, and that the Word was not the Only-begotten of the Father, but only a Son of the Only-begotten." See Bp. Pearson, Art. ii. p. 270. Buddæi Eccl. Apostol. p. 455. Dr. Waterland, v. p. 189.

Observe the perfect ἀπέσταλκε here, and in v. 14, indicating that the effect of that mission is permanent and operative. The aorist in v. 10, ἀπέστειλεν ἱλασμὸν, denotes that the propitiation was effected by one act, i. e. by the sacrifice on the cross. Christ, Who was once offered to bear the sins of many, dieth no more. Heb. ix. 28. Rom. vi. 9.

10. ἐν τούτῳ ἐστιν ἡ ἀγάπη—ἱλασμὸν περὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν] Herein consists Love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His own Son a propitiation for our sins. A statement of the doctrine of the Atonement; and a statement the more remarkable, because it anticipates the objections that have been made against it in later times.

These objections have taken the following form. God, it is said, is Love (1 John iv. 8). He loves us, and He loves His only-begotten Son. We are sinners; and as long as we are sinners, and without pardon from God, we have no hope of heaven. As sinners we owe an infinite debt to God, which we can never pay. But God is infinite in love; He willeth not that any should perish (2 Pet. iii. 9), but that all should be saved (1 Tim. ii. 4). He can forgive us the debt. He can do this freely. To suppose that He cannot do so, is to set limits to His Omnipotence. To imagine that He will not do so, is to disparage His Love. To allege, that He will require an equivalent for the debt, is to represent the God of mercy as a rigorous exactor. And to believe that He required such a price for our pardon as the blood of His own beloved Son, and that He exposed Him, Who is perfectly innocent, to the death of the Cross for our sakes, at the hands of wicked men, is to charge God with cruelty, injustice, and weakness; and to suppose Him to be angry with us, at the same time that we say that "He loved us," and gave His only Son to die for us (1 John iii. 16; iv. 10), is, it is alleged, to involve ourselves in inconsistency, and to misrepresent God, as if He were affected by human passions. And, lastly, to say that Christ shed His blood as a ransom to deliver us from the captivity of Satan, is, it is argued, to make the Son of God to be tributary to the Evil One.

Such are the objections, made by Socinians and others, to the doctrine of the Atonement.

These objections rest on fallacious grounds.

They proceed on the supposition, that as sinners we are only debtors to God. But in His relation to us, God is not only a Creditor, but He is our Lawgiver and Judge, our King and Lord; and He is perfectly just and holy.

Besides, as St. John teaches (iii. 4), the essence of sin is, that it is the violation of God's Law. And all are sinners (i. 10). And God represents Himself in Scripture as a Moral Governor, infinite in justice; and when we contemplate Him as He is represented by Himself in His own Word; and when we regard sin as it is in His sight, and as it is described in the Holy Scriptures, we must conclude that He is grievously offended by sin; and He has declared in His Word that He is angry with it, and will punish it. The wrath of God is revealed against all ungodliness (Rom. i. 18). The wages of sin is death (Rom. vi. 23).

But this proposition is not at variance—as has been alleged—with St. John's declaration, that God loved us, and sent His own Son, the only-begotten, that we might live through Him; and that herein consists Love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son a propitiation for our sins.

That which God loved in us was not our sin, but our nature. It was that nature which God Himself had made in His own likeness, and which we had marred, and which He desired to repair. And because He hates sin, and knows its consequences, even Death Eternal; and because He loved our Nature, which was exposed by it to everlasting perdition; and because, being infinitely just, He must punish sin, which He, Who is infinitely pure, must hate, and which He, Who is infinitely true, has declared that He will punish; and because the sins of the whole World are so heinous; and because they demand a satisfaction infinite in value; and because nothing, that is not divine, is infinite in value; and because without shedding of blood there is no remission (Heb. ix. 22); therefore, in His immense love for our Nature, which He had made, and which we had marred by sin, He sent His own Son, God of God, to take that Nature, the Nature of us all, in order to be the substitute of all, and Saviour of all, and to become our Emmanuel, God with us (Matt. i. 23), God manifest in the flesh (1 Tim. iii. 16), partaking of our flesh and blood, and to be the Lord our Righteousness (Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16), and to suffer death, the wages of sin, in our Nature, as our Proxy and Representative, and to appease God's wrath by an adequate propitiation, and to take away our guilt, and to redeem us from bondage and death by the priceless ransom of His own blood, and to deliver us by His death from him who had the power of it, even the Devil, and to reconcile us to God, and to restore us to His favour, and to effect our Atonement with Him, and to purchase for us the heavenly inheritance of everlasting life. See Heb. ii. 14—17.

As Origen says (in Matt. xvi.), "Homo quidem non potest dare aliquam commutationem pro animâ suâ (Ps. xlix. 9. Matt. xvi. 26); Deus autem pro animabus omnium dedit commutationem, pretiosum sanguinem Filii sui;" and he cites 1 Pet. i. 18. Origen also says (homil. 4, in Num.), "Si non fuisset peccatum, non necesse fuerat Filium Dei Agnum fieri; nec opus fuerat Eum in carne positum jugulari; sed mansisset hoc, quod in principio erat, Deus Verbum. Verùm, quoniam introiit peccatum in hunc mundum, peccati autem necessitas propitiationem requirit, et propitiatio non fit nisi per hostiam, necessarium fuit provideri hostiam pro peccato."

If it be said, that according to this statement the Just suffered for the unjust, and that the beloved Son of God was delivered to death for the offences of those who did not love Him, but were at enmity with Him, this is perfectly true; it is the assertion of God Himself in Holy Scripture, Christ hath suffered for us, just for unjust, to bring us to God (1 Pet. iii. 18). God made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be the righteousness of God in Him (2 Cor. v. 21). Ye were redeemed with the precious blood of Christ as of a lamb without blemish and without spot (1 Pet. i. 19).

The Just suffered for the unjust. Yes, suffered for a time. But this is not at variance with daily experience. Parents suffer for children; brethren for brethren; friends for friends; subjects for sovereigns; and sovereigns for subjects. And if we are to reject the Doctrine of the Atonement on the plea that vicarious sufferings are not reconcileable with Justice, we cannot stop short of Deism, nor even of Atheism. Cp. Bp. Butler's Analogy, Part ii. ch. v.

If any victim was to take away sin, that victim must be innocent. In order to take away infinite guilt, it must be infinitely innocent. The price paid for the satisfaction of Infinite Justice must be infinite in value. In order to suffer for men the victim must be human; and in order to satisfy God, it must be divine.

Be it remembered also that the Son of God suffered willingly. He gave Himself a ransom for all. (1 Tim. ii. 6.) The good Shepherd giveth His life for the Sheep. (John x. 11.) Cp. Matt. xx. 28. Gal. i. 4; ii. 20. Eph. v. 2. Titus ii. 14. Heb. ix. 14.

They also for whom He gave Himself are His own flesh and blood. He is their Head, they His members. They are one with Him.

Still further. By His meritorious sufferings in that human nature, which He has taken, and joined for ever in His own Person to the Nature of God, He has delivered that Nature from sin and death, and has exalted it to the right Hand of God. Therefore He suffered joyfully. To do evil is indeed evil; and to suffer evil in eternity, is dreadful; but to suffer evil in time, in order that others by our means may be happy in eternity, is not evil, but glorious. Earthly conquerors die with joy in the hour of Victory. Much more Christ. He knew, that suffering was His path to glory. He knew, that because He was obedient to death, even to the death of the cross, therefore God would highly exalt Him, and give Him a Name above every name. (Phil. ii. 8, 9.) He saw of the travail of His soul and was satisfied (Isa. liii. 11). Doubtless, in His human flesh He shrank from the cup of Agony, and from the anguish of the Cross. But even in the glorious hour of His Transfiguration He had talked with Moses and Elias of His Death. (Luke ix. 31.) His divine eye pierced through the cloud of suffering, and saw the visions of glory to which it would lead, victory over Satan, a World rescued from his grasp, God's justice satisfied, His wrath appeased, His love glorified; and so the Cross became a triumphal Chariot, in which the Conqueror rode in Victory (see Col. ii. 14), and mounted to heaven, and bore Mankind with Him through the gates of the heavenly Palace of the Everlasting Capital, and was greeted by the song of Angels, Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in. (Ps. xxiv. 7.)

It has been alleged, that if by sin we were prisoners to Satan, therefore the price of Christ's blood which He paid upon the cross for our liberation from Satan was paid to Satan. But this we deny; see Gregor. Nazianzen, Orat. xlv. p. 862, ed. Paris, 1778. It might as well be said, that the ransom paid for the delivery of prisoners from a king's prison, is paid to the gaoler in whose custody they are. We, by our sins, had made ourselves slaves of Satan; and as a just punishment for our sins, we were made prisoners of Satan. Satan was God's executioner against us. He was our gaoler. Tophet is ordained of old (Isa. xxx. 33), as one of God's instruments of death. (Ps. vii. 14.) But Christ, by dying for us, delivered us from death. He rescued us from the hands of Satan, and paid the price of our ransom, not to Satan, but to God. He delivered us from Satan by offering Himself to God.

Compare St. Paul's argument on this subject, Rom. iii. 23—26, and note above, ii. 2.

They who contravene the doctrine of the Atonement often claim the credit of exercising their Reason, and deny that the belief of the doctrine of the Atonement rests on the foundation of Reason. Nothing can be accepted by reasonable men which does not rest on the foundation of Reason. But a right use of Reason leads to a firm belief in the doctrine of the Atonement; and a denial of it proceeds from an abuse of Reason.

The doctrine of the Atonement cannot be discovered by Reason. No; but we can prove by Reason that the Holy Scriptures are from God; and we can prove by Reason, that the doctrine of the Atonement is clearly revealed in the Holy Scriptures. And thus this doctrine rests on the foundation of Reason. Being a portion of supernatural truth revealed by God in Scripture to the world, it is not to be discovered by Reason, or fully comprehended by Reason, but it is to be heartily embraced and surely held fast by Faith, which implies a right use of Reason. And Reason teaches us, that it would be very unreasonable to expect, that what is contained in a Revelation from such a Being as God to so frail a creature as man, in his present state upon earth, should be fully comprehended by Reason; and that, if Reason could understand every thing, there would be no use in Revelation, and no place for Faith. Right Reason itself teaches us, that to deny the Lord who bought us (2 Pet. ii. 1), because we cannot understand, why God allowed sin to prevail, which required the Sacrifice of the Death of His own Ever-blessed Son, would be to renew the indignities of the crucifixion, and to smite our Redeemer with a Reed—the Reed of our unregenerate Reason,—when we ought to fall down and worship in Faith. Reason itself teaches us, that it is very reasonable to expect mysteries in Revelation; and that they are our moral discipline, and exercise our humility, patience, faith, and hope, and teach us to look forward to that blessed time, when we, who now see through a glass darkly (1 Cor. xiii. 12), shall behold the clouds removed which now overhang these mysteries, and shall see God face to face, and rejoice for ever in the sight.

Thus Reason leads us to the door of the Holy of Holies; and then we pass within the veil by Faith; and there we stand, and with the eye of Faith we behold God enthroned on the Mercy-Seat, sprinkled by the blood of Christ.

Further, as reasonable men, looking at the cross of Christ, we see there the most cogent reasons for presenting ourselves, our souls and bodies, a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which is our reasonable service (Rom. xii. 1).

This doctrine of the Atonement is the root of Christian practice; and they, who impugn that doctrine, are not only undermining the foundations of Christian Faith, but also of Christian Morality. This was clearly evinced even in the Apostolic age, by the licentiousness and profligacy engendered by heretical doctrines, against which St. John contends in his Epistles, concerning the Incarnation and Death of Christ.

We cannot adequately estimate the moral heinousness of sin, without considering the sacrifice which it cost to redeem us from its power and guilt. We cannot duly understand the obligations of love and obedience, under which we lie to Christ, and the motives which constrain us to holiness, without remembering that we are not our own, but have been bought with a price—the blood of Christ—and are therefore bound to glorify Him in our bodies which are His. See 1 Cor. vi. 20.

Accordingly, St. John, having here stated the doctrine of the Atonement, proceeds, and continues to the end of the Epistle, to enforce the moral duties consequent on this doctrine. "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." He teaches us to contend earnestly for the doctrine of the Atonement, as the groundwork of Christian Duty to God and Man.

On this subject compare Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. x. pp. 670—688.

12. ἐὰν ἀγαπῶμεν—ἐν ἡμῖν] if we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and His love hath been perfected in us. His Love to us hath been ripened into Love to Him, and into Love to all men in Him; and thus His Love hath been perfected into its full maturity in us.

13. ὅτι ἐκ τοῦ Πνεύματος αὐτοῦ δ. ἡ.] because He hath given to us of His Spirit: the fruit of which is Love (Gal. v. 22). And by our acts of Love, we know that we have His Spirit, and that we dwell in God.

14. καὶ ἡμεῖς τεθεάμεθα] We have not seen God (see v. 12), but God dwelleth in us by Love (vv. 12, 13), and we have beheld, and do testify that the Father (in opposition to the heretical doctrine, see ii. 22) hath sent the Son to be Saviour of the World. John had beheld this personally, and to this he bears witness in his Gospel. See John xix. 35; xxi. 24.

15. Ἰησοῦς] Jesus. Observe the word Jesus thus placed, and stating the true doctrine, that Jesus—the Man Jesus—is not, as the Ebionites said, a ψιλὸς ἄνθρωπος, a mere man, nor, as the Cerinthians alleged, a mere temporary recipient of the indwelling of an Æon called Christ; nor as the Docetæ said, a shadowy unsubstantial phantom, but is the Son of God, such as St. John declares Him in the Gospel. Cp. Bp. Bull, Jud. Eccl. Cath. ii. 9.

The confession of this truth (viz. of the Manhood and Godhead of Christ) is, St. John declares, essential to our indwelling in God.

16. καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐγνώκαμεν] and we have known—known by our own personal experience (ἐγνώκαμεν), and we have believed, and do believe (πεπιστεύκαμεν, the perfect tense, cp. John vi. 69), the love which God hath in us. By a personal and experimental faith, that the same Jesus, Who is Man, having the common nature of us all, is also God, we dwell in God, and God in us. For, by the Incarnation of the Son of God, God is in us, He is our Emmanuel; and by this faith we know and realize the Love which God hath, not only to us, but in us. For, by virtue of the Incarnation, God unites us to Himself, and to each other in Him, in the closest bonds of Love. God sees us and loves us in Christ, who by virtue of His Incarnation and our incorporation in Him, dwelleth in us and we in Him (John vi. 56), and God loves us in the Beloved (Eph. i. 6), and as Christ Himself says in two sentences recorded in St. John's Gospel, which afford the best exposition of this text, "At that day (i. e. after the Ascension and reception of the Holy Ghost) ye shall know that I am in the Father, and ye in Me, and I in you," and "O Father, I made known to them Thy Name, and I will make it known, in order that the love with which Thou lovedst Me may be in them, and I in them" (John xvii. 26). Hence follows the relative duty, ἀγάπην ἔχειν ἐν ἀλλήλοις, John xiii. 35.

17. ἐν τούτῳ] By this hath love been perfected, and is perfected, with us. By our union with God, through the Incarnation of His Son, Who has taken the Nature of us all, and has knit us together as one man in Himself, and joined us to God, who were once aliens from Him, Love hath been perfected with us. Christ is μεθ' ἡμῶν Θεὸς, "God with us" (Matt. i. 23). By His Incarnation and Passion, God is at peace with us, and we with God, and with our own consciences; and by the Reconciliation and Atonement which Christ hath made, we have access to the Father. See St. Paul's words to the Ephesian Church, Eph. ii. 13—18, and Heb. x. 19—23, which supply the best comment on this passage.

It follows as a consequence, that we may now have assurance (see ii. 28) in the Day of Judgment, when Jesus Christ shall appear again; because as He (Christ) is, Who is our Head, even so we, who are His Members, are in this world. He is exalted to God's Right Hand by His Obedience and Suffering in our Nature: His Exaltation is our Exaltation. We, even now in this world, even in the midst of this evil world, which lieth in subjection to the Wicked One (v. 19), are citizens of heaven (Phil. iii. 20). He, our Divine Head, at God's Right Hand, is ever pleading the Virtue of His sacrifice, for us His Members. He ever liveth to make Intercession for us (Heb. vii. 25). We have already been made to sit in heavenly places in Him. See note above on Eph. ii. 6; and though we are in the world, and the world is ἐν τῷ πονηρῷ, yet the Wicked One toucheth not us (v. 18), for we are in Christ; and no one can pluck us out of His hand (John x. 28).

To be in this world, even as Christ is, implies the practice of charity, so that we love our enemies, as Christ loved us, and died for us, when we were enemies (Rom. v. 8—10); and it implies the practice of holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord (Heb. xii. 14), who says, "Ye shall be holy, for I am holy" (1 Pet. i. 16), and every one that hath this hope (of glory) settled upon Him (Christ), purifieth himself even as He is pure (1 John iii. 3), and walketh as He walked (ii. 6), upon whom the Prince of this world had no hold (John xiv. 30).

18. φόβος οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ] Fear—which is the opposite of the παῤῥησία or assurance just described—doth not exist in Love, but the Love that is perfect casteth out Fear: as Sarah the true wife cast out the bondwoman and her son; for the son of the bondwoman must not be heir with the son of the free-woman (Gen. xxi. 10. 12. Gal. iv. 30). Love that is perfect casteth out Fear, because Fear hath punishment: but he who is fearing—he whose characteristic is fear, and not love—hath not been perfected in love.

"Fear is the beginning of wisdom" (Ps. cxi. 10. Cp. on Matt. viii. 34). Fear first enters, and opens the door for Love, and prepares the house for its reception; but, when Love has taken up its abode in the house of the heart, Fear leaves it. Fear is the παιδαγωγὸς to bring us to Christ, in Whom we receive, not the spirit of servile fear (πνεῦμα δουλείας εἰς φόβον, Rom. viii. 15), but the spirit of filial adoption, by which we cry, Abba, Father (Gal. iv. 6). When we have been brought to Him, and dwell in Him, the work of Fear is done, and we are perfected in Love. See Augustine here, and Epistle 140, Sect. 21.

Fear hath punishment (κόλασιν). It has punishment as its moving principle, and as that which is ever present with it. "Mala conscientia tota in desperatione est, sicut bona in spe." Augustine, in Ps. 31. Fear is like a slave, who lives and moves with the sight of the whip ever before his eyes. He that is fearing (ὁ φοβούμενος), he whose moving principle is fear (on which use of the present participle with the definite article, so as to become almost a substantive, see Matt. iv. 3. Eph. iv. 28. Winer, § 45, p. 316), the fearer (as opposed to ὁ ἀγαπῶν, the lover) hath not been perfected in love. But when he has been perfected in love, he will no longer act from constraint, and from fear of punishment, as a bondservant; he will no longer be an Ishmael who is cast out of the house; but he will live and move with the joyful alacrity of an Isaac, who abideth in the house for ever (John viii. 35).

19. ἡμεῖς ἀγαπῶμεν] we love because He first loved us. The Vulg., Syriac, and other Versions render ἀγαπῶμεν as an imperative, "Let us love:" compare vv. 7 and 11; and so Lange, Lücke, De Wette, Besser, Düsterdieck, Huther, and others; see Huther, p. 186. But the ἡμεῖς prefixed to the verb, and the general tenor of the argument, seems to favour the other rendering, that of the indicative. We should be only like those who fear, like slaves, if God had not loved us; but now we are they who love, as dear children, because He first loved us, as our reconciled Father in Christ.

Elz. adds αὐτὸν, Him, after ἀγαπῶμεν, but it is not in A, B, and is not received by Lach. and Tisch., and the sense seems better without it. Here is the ground of our love generally; first to God, and then to man in God. He first loved us.

The main difference between the old, or Levitical, and the new, or Evangelical, Law is this—Do it, says the one, Servus meus es tu; Do it, says the other, Filius meus es tu: here is the perfect law of Love and liberty (James ii. 12); and the Law of Fear, which prepared the way for the Gospel of Love, hath now given way to the Gospel of Love which abides for ever in God's house (1 Cor. xiii. 8—13), the Church of Earth and Heaven; for Love that is perfected casteth out Fear. See Bp. Andrewes, i. p. 291.

CH. V. 1—4. πᾶς ὁ πιστεύων] every one who believeth that Jesus is the Christ, hath been born of God. A doctrine opposed to the heresy of the Cerinthians who separated Jesus from Christ. Because of the growth of that Heresy, the Apostle specially inculcates this faith, that Jesus is the Son of God. Bp. Bull, Judic. Eccl. ii. Sect. 9.

St. John adds, that every one who loveth Him that begat, loveth Him that has been begotten of Him: and (v. 5) he asks, Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?

Thus our Regeneration is derived from the Generation of the Son of God, and His Incarnation. We cannot be born of God, unless we believe that the Jesus, Who is really and truly Man, is personally united to the Christ—the begotten of the Father—the Son of God.

St. John himself, in his Gospel, has developed his own argument. He has there affirmed that the Logos, or Word, is God, and that He gave power to all who receive Him, to become children of God, and that He was made Flesh, and took up His abode in us, and that of His fulness we all receive (John i. 1—16). He has also declared, that it is necessary for us to be born again (John iii. 3), and that the instrumental means by which we are to be regenerate, or born anew, as sons of God, are Water and the Holy Spirit (John iii. 5); and that the benefits of our union with Christ, and of the grace of His Unction, and the fruits of His Incarnation, and communion with God the Father in Him, are to be maintained by feeding on Him, and that "except we eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood, we have no life in us" (John vi. 53). See the Introduction to St. John's Gospel, pp. 258, 259, and the Notes at the end of the Third and Sixth chapters of that Gospel.

Thus St. John in his Gospel has prepared us to understand the doctrine of his Epistle.

3. καὶ αἱ ἐντολαὶ] and His commandments are not grievous: because His Grace makes His yoke to be easy, and His burden to be light. See Matt. xi. 30. Phil. iv. 13. 1 Cor. xv. 10, and S. Augustine's saying, "Da quod jubes, et jube quod vis" (Confess. x. 29); and Ausonius (ad Theodos. 13), "Juvat qui Jubet;" and Bp. Sanderson, Sermon iii. p. 316.

4. πᾶν τὸ γεγεννημένον ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ] every thing that hath been begotten of God, and continues to energize by the principle of the new life imparted in Regeneration. This is the force of the perfect tense γεγεννημένον, as usual. See above, iii. 9.

— αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ νίκη] this is the Victory which conquered the world, your Faith. The Faith which you professed in Christ not only does conquer (νικᾷ), but did conquer (ἐνίκησε) the world; for by it the Elders conquered, as has been shown in the eleventh chapter to the Hebrews; see especially Heb. xi. 33. Faith is called the Victory, as Christ is called "the Resurrection and the Life" (John xi. 25); because Faith is the only way to Victory, and the instrument by which it is gained, and whosoever has Faith, has Victory; whosoever believed in Christ, conquered by belief in Him.

τοῦ Θεοῦ; 6 Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἐλθὼν δι' ὕδατος καὶ αἵματος, Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς, e John 19. 34.
οὐκ ἐν τῷ ὕδατι μόνον, ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ ὕδατι καὶ ἐν τῷ αἵματι· καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμά ἐστι

6. οὗτος ἐστιν ὁ ἐλθὼν δι' ὕδατος καὶ αἵματος, Ἰησοῦς Χριστός] This is He Who came by Water and Blood, Jesus Christ.

He Who came is He Who proved Himself to be "the Coming One;" ὁ ἐρχόμενος, the Messiah; see Matt. xi. 3; whence our Lord says, "all who came before Me were thieves and robbers." See note on John x. 8.

Jesus Christ came, as the Messiah and Son of God, in various ways.

1. He came, in all the purifications that were made by Water and Blood under the Old Law, which was dedicated with Blood and Water, Heb. ix. 22; because all those purifications were typical of, and preparatory to, His Sacrifice on the Cross, and derived all their efficacy from it.

It was the Water and the Blood afterwards shed on Calvary which imparted all the virtue to the Water and Blood poured out in the sacrificial rites of the Temple at Jerusalem, and of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness; and also to the Patriarchal Sacrifices at Bethel, at Mamre, and on Ararat; and even to the sacrifice of Abel on the borders of Paradise. Thus this is He Who came by Water and Blood; the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world. Rev. xiii. 8.

2. Again; Christ came by Water in His Baptism; and by Blood in His Circumcision, and especially in His agony and Bloody Sweat in Gethsemane, and by the blood shed in His scourging before His Passion, and in the Crown of Thorns, and the piercing of His Hands at the Crucifixion.

3. Further; Christ came both by Water and Blood at once, in a special manner, on Calvary after His Death. St. John saw, and bare witness of what he then saw. "One of the soldiers pierced His side, and forthwith there came out Blood and Water; and he that saw it hath borne, and beareth, witness (μεμαρτύρηκε, perfect tense), and his witness is true, and he knoweth that he speaketh truth, in order that ye also may believe. For these things were done, in order that the Scripture might be fulfilled, A bone of Him shall not be broken (Exod. xii. 46, concerning the Paschal Lamb). And again, another Scripture saith, They shall see Him whom they pierced;" Zechariah xii. 10, speaking of JEHOVAH Himself. See John xix. 34—37.

Thus St. John in his Gospel prepares us to understand the words of his Epistle; and in his Epistle also he elucidates what had been recorded in his Gospel. His words therefore may be thus paraphrased. This is He Who came—that is, proved Himself to be what He was pre-announced to be by the Types and Prophecies of the Old Testament, and what He proclaimed Himself to be in the New—the "Coming One," "The Comer" (ὁ ἐρχόμενος), the Messiah, the true Paschal Lamb, and Very Man, a true Sacrifice for sin; and yet Very God, the Everlasting Jehovah, of Whom the Prophet Zechariah spoke, when he prophesied of His being pierced at His death.

He came by Blood and Water. He proved thereby the reality of His Humanity and of His Death; and thus He has given a practical refutation—which St. John himself saw with his own eyes—to the heretical notions of those in the Apostolic age, such as Simon Magus, and the Docetæ, who alleged that Jesus Christ had not a real human body, but was merely a spectral phantasm, crucified in show; and therefore S. Irenæus in the next age after St. John, urges this fact of the piercing of the side, and the flowing out of the blood and water, recorded by St. John, as conclusive against their heresy. S. Irenæus, iv. 32. 23, ed. Stieren; p. 357, Grabe. Cp. Bp. Pearson, Art. iv. p. 405, and Dr. Waterland, v. p. 190.

In the words, "not by water only," there seems also to be a reference to another heresy of the Apostolic age, that of Cerinthus, who said that Christ came in the water of Baptism, and descended into the man Jesus; and afterwards departed from Him, when He shed His blood on the Cross. In opposition to this notion St. John says, "This is He Who came by Water and Blood; not by Water only, but by Water and Blood." Cp. Dr. Burton's Lectures, pp. 188—190.

4. Further it is to be observed, that in this passage of his Epistle St. John is speaking of Christ's Generation, and of our Regeneration.

Every one who believeth that Jesus is the Christ hath been born, and is born, of God; i. e., is regenerate; and every one who loveth Him that begat, loveth Him that is begotten of Him; i. e., whoever loveth God the Father, loveth Him Who by Generation is the only-begotten Son of God; and every thing that is born of God (i. e., is regenerate) overcometh the World; and who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus—the Very Man Jesus—is also the Son of God?

St. John then proceeds to describe the means by which our Regeneration, or New Birth, is communicated to us from God, through His Son Christ Jesus, Very Man, and Very God; and how the new life so communicated is sustained in us. He does this by saying, This is He Who came—came to us—by Water and Blood, Jesus Christ; not by Water only, but by Water and Blood.

The natural life which was imparted to Eve—the Mother of all living, the type of the Church, the Spouse of the Second Adam, Jesus Christ—was derived from the First Adam's side, opened when he was asleep in Paradise. In like manner, the spiritual Life is given to the Spiritual Eve, the Church, and to all her faithful members, from the side of the Second Adam, Jesus Christ, sleeping in death on the Cross; and it is communicated through His death by means of the Water and Blood of the two Sacraments, which derive their quickening, cleansing, and invigorating virtue from the Divinity, Incarnation, and Death of our Crucified Lord and Saviour, and by which the benefits of that Death is applied to our regeneration and revivification; and which were visibly exhibited in the Water and Blood flowing from His precious side, pierced on the Cross.

This doctrine is implied by the Church of England in her Office for the Ministration of Baptism,—"Almigbty, everliving God, whose most dearly Beloved Son Jesus Christ, for the forgiveness of our sins, did shed out of His most precious side both Water and Blood; and gave commandment to His disciples, that they should go teach all nations, and baptize them . . . sanctify this Water to the mystical washing away of sin;" a formulary adopted from Ancient Liturgies; see Palmer, Origines Liturgicæ, ii. 187.

It is observable, that our Lord Himself has assured us of this truth by the instrumentality of the same Apostle, St. John, who testifieth these things, and who alone of the Apostles saw our Lord's side pierced, and the Water and Blood coming forth from it.

It is in the Gospel of St. John that Christ says, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of Water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John iii. 5). Again, it is in the Gospel of St. John that Christ declares, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the Flesh of the Son of Man, and drink His Blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my Flesh and drinketh my Blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last Day. For My Flesh is meat indeed, and My Blood is drink indeed" (John vi. 53—55).

This therefore "is He Who came to us by Water and Blood, Jesus Christ; not by Water only, but by Water and Blood."

He came by Water, which is our λουτρὸν, and by Blood, which is our λύτρον. His Baptism of Blood is our λύτρον, or ransom from death; and His Baptism by Water is our λουτρὸν, or laver of Birth. And the Water of the λουτρὸν derives its efficacy from the Blood of the λύτρον, shed on the Cross, which works in and by the Water of Baptism. He has washed us from our sins in His own blood (Rev. i. 5). His blood cleanseth us from all sin (1 John i. 7). In Baptism we pass through the Red Sea of His Blood, and are delivered from our enemies thereby.

"Hæc sunt gemina Ecclesiæ Sacramenta," says Augustine (in Joann. tract. 120). Here are represented the Two Sacraments of the Church, in which Christ comes. By them He came to us, He is ever coming in them.

At the first Institution of the Sacrament of the Eucharist, the pitcher of water and he that carried it, were not in vain given for a sign by Christ (see on Mark xiv. 13), it went not before for nothing. Cp. Bp. Andrewes, iii. p. 359.

Christ is ever coming by the Water and Blood of the Sacraments, to quicken and cleanse all of every age in the Church (see Titus iii. 5), and animates and unites them all in the bonds of holiness and love, as fellow-members communicating with Him their Head, and knit and woven together by veins and arteries, in One Body, the Body of Christ.

Some ancient Testimonies to the above Exposition may be seen in note above, on John xix. 34, to which may be added S. Augustine, Serm. v., referring to this passage, as follows: "Quid profluxit de latere nisi sacramentum quod acciperent fideles? Spiritus, sanguis et aqua; Spiritus quem emisit; et sanguis et aqua quæ de latere profluxerunt; de ipso sanguine et aqua significatur nata Ecclesia; cùm jam dormiret Christus in cruce, quia Adam in Paradiso somnum accepit, et sic illi de latere Eva producta est." Compare Cassiodorus here, and Bp. Andrewes, Serm. xiii. vol. iii. pp. 345—360.

Father to the Church, in consequence of the Passion, Resurrection, and Ascension of Christ, bare witness by His own descent on the Day of Pentecost, and by the supernatural powers of Tongues and Prophecy which He then bestowed on the Apostles, and on others who believed and were baptized in Christ's Name, that all which Jesus Christ had preached was true: and that He is, what He declared Himself to be, the Son of God. And the Holy Spirit by His presence and operation in the Water of Baptism, and in the Blood of the Holy Eucharist, bears witness to the Verity and Virtue of the Incarnation and Death of Christ, the Son of God, from which the efficacy of the Sacraments is derived.

7. ὅτι τρεῖς εἰσιν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες] because three are they who are bearing witness.

After these words Elz. has this addition, ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ ὁ Πατὴρ, ὁ Λόγος, καὶ τὸ ἅγιον Πνεῦμα· καὶ οὗτοι οἱ τρεῖς ἕν εἰσι, καὶ τρεῖς εἰσιν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες ἐν τῇ γῇ, in heaven the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit, and these three are one (i. e. one substance, neuter, cp. John x. 30), and there are three who are bearing witness on earth.

But this addition is not found in A, B, G, K, or in the cursive MSS. of this Epistle – with the exception of three MSS. of comparatively recent date—nor in the Lectionaries, nor in the far greater majority of Versions, nor in the Greek Fathers of the first Four Centuries, nor in the Latin Fathers of those centuries, with the exception of a single passage in S. Cyprian de Unit. Eccl. c. 5, the tenor of which is doubtful.

The earliest Author by whom these words are clearly cited is Vigilius Thapsensis at the close of the Fifth Century. See the statement of the evidence on this subject in the editions of Wetstein, Griesbach, Scholz, and Tischendorf.

The words in question are not received by Griesbach, Scholz, Lachmann, Tischendorf. Nor need any one be disturbed by their non-appearance in the text. It is certain, as has been observed by Dr. Bentley (Correspondence, vol. ii. p. 530), that the Ante-Nicene and Nicene Fathers confuted Arianism without the aid of this passage, to which they never refer, because it was not in their copies of this Epistle; and the doctrine of the Trinity has been clearly established by other Scriptures, and by the consentient voice and concurrent practice of the Church, especially in the administration of the Sacrament of Baptism, with which every child of God has been admitted into the Church of Christ by His express command, in the Name of the Ever-Blessed Trinity (see above, on Matt. iii. 16. Cp. 2 Cor. xiii. 14. Eph. ii. 18), and also in her Liturgical formularies in the Administration of the Holy Communion, and in her solemn Doxologies and Benedictions.

The passage therefore according to the best authorities stands thus, Because three (τρεῖς, masculine, not τρία, neuter) are those who are bearing witness, the Spirit, and the Water, and the Blood, and these three (τρεῖς, masculine, not τρία, neuter) are (joined) into the one (τὸ ἕν, the one substance, neuter; not masculine ἕνα).

The gender of the words here used is very remarkable.

St. John speaks of three Persons (τρεῖς) and one substance (ἕν), and affirms that these three Persons bear witness, and these three Persons (τρεῖς) are united into the one substance. He uses the masculine τρεῖς, before the three neuter substantives; and after them also.

This declaration may be best explained by our Lord's words as recorded by St. John himself, in the Gospel, "I and My Father are one:" where one is expressed, as here, by the neuter ἕν; and our Lord there affirms that He and His Father, being two Persons (masculine) are one substance (neuter). See the note there, and compare our Lord's words, John xvii. 11. 22, in which the unity of the Persons is described by the neuter gender.

So St. John declares here that there are three Persons (τρεῖς, masculine) who are bearing witness (μαρτυροῦντες, masculine), and that these three (Persons) who are bearing witness are joined into one (ἕν one substance, neuter).

There is therefore good ground for the ancient opinion that St. John in this passage is declaring the Unity of the Three Persons of the Trinity in one substance. This appears to be the meaning of Tertullian (c. Prax. 25), where he says, that "the union of the Father in the Son, and of the Son in the Father, makes three Persons joined in one: which three Persons are unum (one substance) non unus (not one Person), as Christ says, 'I and My Father are One;' declaring Oneness of substance, and not singleness of number." And his scholar, S. Cyprian (de unit. Eccl. c. 5), writes thus, "The Lord says, I and the Father are one (unum), and again it is written" (i. e. in the passage now before us of St. John's Epistle), concerning the Father and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, "three are one" (tres unum sunt).

And so the ancient Scholium in Matthæi says that "John uses the number three in the masculine gender, because those three are symbols of the Trinity," and by using the word ἕν, "he designates the unity of the Godhead;" and so S. Augustine (c. Maximin. 22) says, "If we desire to examine what is signified by these words, the Trinity itself may reasonably occur to us; which is One God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, concerning which it may be most truly said, 'Three are the Witnesses,' and 'Three are one substance (unum).'"

St. John himself appears to authorize this exposition, by adding, "If we receive the witness of men (especially of three men, see Matt. xviii. 16. 2 Cor. xiii. 1. Heb. x. 28), the witness of God is greater," thus intimating that the testimony of the three witnesses here mentioned is the witness of God in three Persons.

Our Lord Himself in St. John's Gospel has prepared the way for this exposition. He thus speaks to the Jews, "In your Law it is written that the witness of two men is true. I am He that beareth witness (ὁ μαρτυρῶν) concerning Myself; and the Father who sent me beareth witness (John viii. 18).

This was spoken by Christ before His Ascension; but He promised that after He Himself had gone away He would send a third witness. "When the Comforter is come whom I will send unto you from the Father, namely, the Spirit of Truth who proceedeth from the Father, He shall bear witness of Me" (John xv. 26).

By that Coming of the Holy Ghost, the testimony of the three Witnesses was completed.

Therefore St. John, writing in this Epistle after the Ascension of Christ, and the Giving of the Holy Spirit, might well say that Three are those who are bearing witness, and these three are united into One . . . and this is "the witness of God."

These three are designated here as "the Spirit, the Water, and the Blood."

Firstly, the Spirit; who begins the Work of Regeneration by applying all quickening grace to Man.

Secondly, the Water; the symbol and instrument of the New Birth derived from God the Father, Who is the Original Wellspring and Fountain of all Life and Grace to man. The natural heavens and earth were formed out of the Water. There was their Origin (see on 2 Pet. iii. 5). So it is with the spiritual Life; it is formed from out of Water. Water therefore is a proper symbol of the Paternity of God.

And thirdly, the Blood, symbolizing the Incarnation and Passion of God the Son, through Whom all grace descends from the Father, by the Holy Spirit. See on 2 Cor. xiii. 13.

These Three Persons are joined consubstantially into one Godhead; and their Witness is the witness of God. Cp. Fp. Andrewes, iii. p. 354, who observes that "Water notes Creation; Blood notes Redemption by Christ; the Spirit notes Unction, to complete all."

There is an image of the Trinity in the Christian Sacraments. There is, baptismus fluminis, the Baptism of Water, the work of Creation by the Father; there is baptismus sanguinis, the Baptism of Blood, the work of Redemption by the Son; but these are not enough, unless there be also the baptismus flaminis, the Baptism of the Spirit. Thus the work of the Ever-Blessed Trinity is done in the soul. Cp. Bp. Andrewes, iii. 248.

The above considerations may explain the addition which has found its way into the text of some few Manuscripts here, "in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one, and three are they who are bearing witness on earth." These words were probably originally only an expository gloss. They are a correct exposition of St. John's meaning, and there is no reason to suspect that they were interpolated designedly. They were probably written originally by some expositor on the margin of his manuscript; perhaps they were derived by him from S. Cyprian, and were adopted by some subsequent transcriber, who supposed them to belong to the Text; as was sometimes the case with marginal glosses; cp. Valcknaer, de Glossis in N. T. [1]

[1] Dr. Bentley's opinion concerning the genuineness of this passage, is matter of interest on account of the special attention which that celebrated critic gave to it. It is thus expressed in a letter dated Jan. 1, 1716-17:—

"In my proposed work" (his edition of the Greek Testament) "the fate of that verse will be a mere question of fact" (i. e. it will depend on the testimony of the MSS.). "You endeavour to prove (and that's all you aspire to) that it may have been writ by the Apostle, being See John i. 4; iii. 15. 36; v. 26; vi. 33. 35. 40; x. 28; xi. 25; xiv. 6; xvii. 3.

13. ὑμῖν] Elz. adds here τοῖς πιστεύουσιν εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ—but this addition is not in A, B, and in the majority of Versions, and is rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch.

— ἵνα εἰδῆτε] in order that ye may know. Observe the word οἴδαμεν, we know, repeated five times in the following verses, contrasting strongly the nature of true Christian γνῶσις, or knowledge, with that of the ψευδώνυμος γνῶσις of the Gnostics. See the like use of οἴδαμεν, we know, at the close of St. John's Gospel, xxi. 24.

— οἱ πιστεύοντες] So A.—B has τοῖς πιστεύουσιν—and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch.—Elz. has καὶ ἵνα πιστεύητε.

14. παῤῥησία] confidence, especially in prayer. See iii. 21, 22.

— ἐάν τι αἰτώμεθα] if we pray for any thing, observe, according to His Will, He heareth us, and if we know that He heareth us, we know that we have the things which we have prayed for; for, either we receive the very things themselves, or, something better than the things which we ourselves desire; and since our prayers are always framed according to His will, we do receive the things for which we pray. See the case of St. Paul's prayer, notes above on 2 Cor. xii. 9.

16. ἔστιν ἁμαρτία πρὸς θάνατον] there is a sin unto death. I am not speaking concerning that, in order that he, the Christian brother, should ask (ἐρωτήσῃ).

The distinction between sins unto death, and sins not unto death, is grounded on Hebrew Law and Language (Lev. xvii. 6. Schoettgen, Horæ, here), but it takes a spiritual form under the Gospel; and death is not used in the sense of capital punishment, but as opposed to the ζωὴ, or life, of the soul.

Observe the change of the word from αἰτεῖν, petere, to ἐρωτᾶν, rogare: the one signifying to pray, as an inferior suitor to a superior, the other expressing rather a general act of an inquirer. See John xi. 22, and on xvi. 23, and Bengel here, and Dean Trench, Synonym. N. T. xl.; sometimes, however, implying a request. See 2 John 5.

By using the word ἐρωτήσῃ here, and by placing the word emphatically at the end of the sentence, St. John appears to intimate, that not even any interrogatory questions are to be addressed to God, concerning the person who is sinning a sin unto death, and that this would be to tempt God.

Clemens Alexandrinus (Strom. ii. p. 389) cites this passage in treating of the difference between sins of infirmity, and sins of presumption. The sin unto death is wilful resistance of the Holy Ghost, presumptuous sin (such as that described in Matt. xii. 31. Heb. vi. 4—8; x. 28–30), deliberately and obstinately persisted in, after warnings and censures of the Church. He who continues obstinately in such sin, is not a fit subject for any inquiries of God; God has spoken clearly concerning him; he is to be separated from the holy offices of the Church, in order that by excommunication—which is a rehearsal of future and eternal judgment—he may learn not to blaspheme, and be alarmed and terrified, and so his soul may be saved in the day of the Lord. See above on Matt. xviii. 17. 1 Cor. v. 5. 1 Tim. i. 20, and Bp. Wilson here.

God Himself has declared His will that prayers should not be made for certain desperate sinners (see Jer. vii. 16; xi. 14; xiv. 11); and if a man is deprived of the prayers of the Church, this very denial may have a salutary influence with him in such a case, where no milder medicines will avail.

Besides, the bodily afflictions and other temporal chastisements which may overtake him in consequence of such suspension consonant to his other doctrine. This I concede to you; and if the fourth century knew that text, let it come in, in God's name; but if that age did not know it, then Arianism in its height was beat down without the help of that verse; and let the fact prove as it will, the doctrine is unshaken." Ric. Bentley.

Bentley delivered his famous Prælectio on this verse, May 1, 1717, four months after the date of this letter. See Whiston's Memoirs, p. 314. Bentley's Works, iii. 485. Bp. Monk's Bentley, ii. pp. 16—19. What the tenor of that Prælection was—which is lost—may be gathered from the remarks on the subject in Casley's Preface to his Catalogue of the Royal Library, p. xxi, ed. Lond. 1734, where, from conversations with Dr. Bentley, he vindicates Bentley's assertions on this and other questions of Biblical Criticism. The person who speaks as follows is surely not Casley, but Bentley, p. xxi, —"But how to account for this verse being first inserted is the difficulty; and some have not stuck to call it a forgery. But I hope better things, and that it may be made to have appeared by a mistake of a Latin Scribe, in the eighth or ninth century, on the following occasion; S. Cyprian, a famous Latin father, has the words of that verse in his works; and it is no wonder if they were transcribed thence into the margin, or between the lines of the eighth verse, of a book of some one who had a great veneration for that Father, as a gloss, which is very common in MSS.; as it is not improbable that Cassiodorus in his Complexiones in Epistolas, and others who have the words, took them from Cyprian. Next, a copyist, being employed to write out this particular book, and finding the words so inserted, imagined that the former copyist, by mistake, had omitted them, and therefore put them in the text. Such insertions of explanatory words or sentences from the margin into the text are common in MSS. Jerome, in one of his letters, says, that an explanatory note, which he had made himself in the margin of his Psalter, had been incorporated by some transcriber into the text. And thus this insertion might rest till a long time after, and then the sham Preface to the Catholic Epistles must be made, complaining of the unfaithful Translators for leaving it out! Whereas, it is matter of fact, that no Greek Copies of this Epistle had that verse, save one at Berlin, which is discovered to have been transcribed from the printed Biblia Complutensia, and another modern one at Dublin, probably translated or printed from the Latin Vulgate, neither the Author of the Preface, nor any friend for him, having searched for it in any Greek copy." See also p. xxiv, "To return to 1 John v. 7, when the foresaid Preface was made, then was the Text also inserted in other copies that had it not, several of which are now to be found in Libraries."

Some few unimportant omissions and alterations have been made in the above extracts.

and privation, when by the withdrawal of God's good Spirit for a time Satan may chastise and torment him (see 1 Cor. v. 5), may have a wholesome effect in making him feel "how bitter a thing it is to forsake God" (Jer. ii. 19), and may bring him under the operation of fear and anguish, and soften his heart, and lead him to repentance, and by repentance to pardon and grace, and in the end to everlasting salvation.

Therefore St. John does not prescribe prayer in such a case; but he implies that other means are to be used.

18. οὐχ ἁμαρτάνει] he sinneth not, is not a sinner; see on iii. 9. He that was born of God, keepeth himself, takes heed to his ways (1 Tim. v. 22. James i. 27). That is his true character and proper condition; and the Evil One layeth not hold of him, —οὐχ ἅπτεται αὐτοῦ. On the sense of ἅπτομαι, to grasp and cling to, see above on John xx. 17.

19. ἐν τῷ πονηρῷ κεῖται] lieth in the dominion of the Wicked One, v. 18; ii. 13; it lieth as a captive beneath his feet. On the use of ἐν, see Winer, § 48.

There is a contrast here between τοῦ Θεοῦ and τῷ πονηρῷ. The saints are born of God and stand firm and erect ἐν Θεῷ, ἐν Χριστῷ (cp. on Rom. xvi. 9), and we are in Him, have our life in Him, Who is the true One, ἐν τῷ ἀληθινῷ, see v. 20; but the world lieth ἐν τῷ πονηρῷ.

20. τὸν ἀληθινόν] Him that is true: the true God as opposed to the so-called, and false gods, the idols of the heathen, mentioned below, v. 21.

On ἀληθινὸς, as used in this sense, see above on John xvii. 3. Cp. 1 Thess. i. 9.

— καί ἐσμεν ἐν τῷ ἀληθινῷ] and we are in Him that is true, in His Son Jesus Christ. By being in His Son Jesus Christ we are in Him Who is the true God.

— οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἀληθινὸς Θεός] He—namely, Jesus Christ—is the true God and Life eternal. Thus St. John closes his Epistle, as he had begun his Gospel, with asserting that Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is Himself the true God, and Life Eternal. See John i. 1—4, which is the best exposition of this passage, and there St. John says expressly that the "Word was God, and that in Him was Life." Cp. above, v. 11, and Dr. Waterland, v. p. 193, who says, "The title of the true God is here given to Christ;" and observes, "every word here is aptly chosen to obviate the heresy of Cerinthus, and of other the like false teachers of those times."

The Son of God, not of Joseph and Mary, nor the Son of the Only-begotten as some said, but the Son of God His Father, is come in the flesh; not merely to reside in it for a season, as the Cerinthians held, and then to fly off from it, but to abide in us, to be clothed for ever with the humanity He has taken: and we are in Him that is true, the true God, by Jesus Christ Who is the true God, not an inferior power or Angel, such as Cerinthus supposed the Demiurge, or Creator of the world to be, nor a created Æon, the offspring of the Monogenes or Only-begotten, or of Silence, as Cerinthus imagined the Logos or Word to be; but the true God, one with the Father. See also Bp. Pearson, Art. ii. p. 247, who says, "Christ is not only here termed God, but the true God;" and cp. p. 259, and Bengel here.

21. τεκνία—εἰδώλων] My little children (see ii. 12), guard yourselves from idols. Ye are in Him Who is the true God, and cannot therefore have any communion with false gods. "What concord hath Christ with Belial? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? Ye are the temple of the living God." (2 Cor. vi. 16.) Those so-called gods are dead. Do not therefore be led astray by the false teachers, the Nicolaitans, who would inveigle you to eat things offered to idols (Rev. ii. 2. 15), and lead you into idolatry; or by the followers of Simon Magus, who even worship idols (see Irenæus, i. 20, Grabe, and Euseb. ii. 13); or by others, such as the Cerinthians (Philastr. hær. 36), who would persuade you that you need not bear witness to God and Christ, but may safely offer incense to the idols of the heathen, rather than suffer martyrdom. Therefore, little children, keep yourselves from idols.

Here is a farewell admonition from St. John to the Church of every age. He warns her against that danger, of which later generations have had mournful experience, and which he foresaw and foretold in his Apocalypse. See Rev. ix. 20.

This admonition of St. John, keep yourselves from idols, is the more remarkable, on account of its juxtaposition with his teaching here that Jesus Christ is God. If Jesus Christ is not God, then the Christianity, which St. John himself teaches, is idolatry. But Jesus Christ is the true God, and therefore that form of religion which hath not the Son, as the Son is revealed by St. John, hath not the Father. (1 John ii. 23.) "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii. 36.

TO

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF ST. JOHN.

THE method adopted by St. Peter and St. Paul in their teaching on the Nature and Person of Christ, is employed also by St. John. First, they established the Truth; next, they refuted Error. The work of construction was effected by St. Peter in his First Epistle; in his Second Epistle he denounced the heresies of false Teachers. St. Paul performed the first of these Apostolic acts in his Epistle to the Ephesians; the latter [1] was done by him in his Epistle to the Colossian Church.

St. John had executed the former of these tasks—that of establishing the Truth—in his Gospel. He afterwards proceeded to complete his plan by accomplishing the latter—that of censuring and correcting Heresy—in his Epistles [2].

This Second Epistle of St. John, brief as it is, is ministered to this end; and it conduces to it even by its brevity.

Let us consider how this appears to be the case.

This Second Epistle opens with the words ὁ πρεσβύτερος Ἐκλεκτῇ Κυρίᾳ καὶ τοῖς τέκνοις αὐτῆς, "The elder to an elect Lady and her children;" and it ends with the words, "The children of thy sister who is elect greet thee." In the former case the word elect has not the definite article; in the latter it has.

The question here arises,—Who is this ἐκλεκτὴ κυρία, to whom St. John writes?

Many Expositors are of opinion, that St. John is writing here to a private person; and it has been supposed by some [3], that her name was Kυρία, Kyria, and by others [4], that her name was Electa.

But it appears more probable that under this title St. John is addressing a Christian CHURCH.

This interpretation is suggested by the words used by St. John's brother Apostle St. Peter, at the close of his Epistle, "The co-Elect [5] with you, that is at Babylon, saluteth you [6]." There the word "co-elect" signifies "a Church [7]," and it is probable that the word ἐκλεκτὴ (elect) here used by St. John, has a like meaning.

Besides, at the end of the present Epistle, we read a salutation which seems to be formed on that of St. Peter. St. Peter's words at the end of his Epistle are Ἀσπάζεται ὑμᾶς ἡ ἐν Βαβυλῶνι συνεκλεκτή. Let us compare St. John's final salutation, sent in this Epistle to the Elect one, whom he addresses from the Children of her Elect sister: Ἀσπάζεταί σε τὰ τέκνα τῆς ἀδελφῆς σοῦ τῆς ἐκλεκτῆς, "The children of thy sister, who is Elect, greet thee."

St. Peter had written from Babylon to the elect in Asia [8], and saluted them in the name of a co-elect one at Babylon; and that co-elect one at Babylon was a Church.

St. John, whose residence was in Asia, writes to an Elect one, and sends to her the greetings of an elect sister. Hence it appears probable that the elect one and her elect sister are not private individuals, but Churches.

The word Ἐκλεκτὴ, elect, is used by the Septuagint in the Canticles as the characteristic of Christ's spouse, the Church [9]. And in an ancient painting at St. Maria in Trastevere, at Rome, Christ is represented as enthroned with the Church as the Queen on His right hand [10], and in

His right hand a book with the words inscribed "Veni, Electa Mea, et ponam te in thronum Meum."

The word Κυρία, Lady, here used with ἐκλεκτῇ, elect, is descriptive of a Church. Jesus Christ, the Lord, is Κύριος; His Spouse, a Church, is Κυρία[1]. This is declared by the very name Church (Κυριακή).

In the Old Testament the Churches of Israel and Judah are designated as sisters[2].

Besides, it is not likely that St. John should have written to a private woman and to her children, and have sent a salutation from the children of a woman, and not have made any mention of the Husband of either of these two women. They may have been both Widows: but there is no evidence of this.

Still further, St. John does not say, "Thy elect sister and her children greet thee." He would probably have written so, if he had been writing from the household of one woman to another woman. But he says, "The children of thine elect sister greet thee."

This circumstance also confirms the opinion, that the sister is a Church. Her children are the members of the Church. They are the Church. And if the Elect sister whose children's salutations are sent, is a Church, the Elect Lady whose sister she is, is probably a Church also.

Besides, St. John describes the children of her to whom he writes as "loved by all persons, who have known the truth[3]." This could hardly be applicable to the children of a private woman—particularly a widow: but it might be true of the spiritual children of a Church[4].

To personify a Church, is also in harmony with the manner and mind of St. John. In his Apocalypse, the Christian Church is represented as a Woman[5], and the Church triumphant is described as "the Bride, the Lamb's Wife[6]."

Accordingly, we find that in early times this Epistle was supposed by some Interpreters[7] to be addressed to a Church, or to the Church.

This exposition has also been adopted in recent times by many learned writers[8].

If this Epistle was addressed to a Church, it may be next inquired;—

To what Church?

For a reply to this question, let us consider the brotherly relation of St. Peter to St. John[9]; and that it is a distinguishing characteristic of the Catholic Epistles, that they are interwoven[10] with one another, in thought and language; and that there was an intimate connexion and sympathy between the Jewish Christians of Asia, where St. John resided, and those of Babylonia, from which St. Peter wrote[11]; and that the Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, and dwellers in Mesopotamia, that is, the inhabitants of Babylonia and its neighbourhood, are mentioned the first among those who were evangelized by the Apostles on the day of Pentecost[12], and that almost immediately after them are mentioned the dwellers in Asia; and that the Parthians then occupied the second place among the nations of the world, and that they inhabited the region of Babylon and the adjacent countries.

Let us also bear in mind, that St. Peter's First Epistle was written to the elect of St. John's own province, Asia, and that he sends in it the greetings of a co-elect Church[13].

When these circumstances are duly weighed, it will not appear improbable, that St. John's Epistle, which was written to an elect Lady, and that Lady a Church; and which conveys the salutations of the children of an elect Sister, and that sister a Church; was of the nature of an Apostolic reply from a sister Church of Asia,—such as that of Ephesus the capital of Asia and the residence of St. John,—to that other Church, from which his brother Apostle, St. Peter, had written to the Churches of Asia,—namely, the Church at Babylon.

Such a sisterly communication, from one Church to another, would come with peculiar grace from a Church of St. John to a Church of St. Peter. St. John and St. Peter had been united by the tenderest and most endearing ties of love, as brother Apostles in Christ. They had been together with Christ in His Transfiguration and Agony; they were together at His sepulchre; they were together at the Sea of Galilee after His Resurrection; they were together at the day of Pentecost, and in the Temple after His Resurrection[1]; they were together in Prison at Jerusalem; they went together from Jerusalem to Samaria to lay hands on those who had been baptized[2].

And this interpretation is mentioned also by Œcumenius (ad finem Epist.), and in Cramer's Catena, p. 146, and Cassiodorus in the sixth century (Complexiones, p. 136) says here, "Joannes electæ Dominæ scribit Ecclesiæ filiisque ejus." And at the end of this Epistle the elect sister (in v. 13) is described by some MSS. as the Church at Ephesus. See Tischendorf, p. 233.

Some confirmation is afforded to this opinion by the following facts.

This second Epistle, as well as the first[3] Epistle of St. John, is described by some ancient authorities[4] as addressed to the Parthians.

It seems probable, therefore, that this Epistle was addressed to the Church at Babylon.

There would be a peculiar interest and beauty in such an address as this from St. John to a Church at Babylon.

The City of Babylon had said, in the day of her heathen pride, "I shall be a Lady for ever[5]," and she had been called the Lady of Kingdoms[6]. Babylon had fallen from her high estate; but St. Peter had preached on the Day of Pentecost to the Parthians, the inhabitants of Babylonia, and they had been baptized into Christ[7]. Thus there was an elect Church at Babylon; a Sion even at Babylon[8]. And there would be a happy coincidence in the circumstance, that the great Assyrian Babylon, that persecuting city which had boasted that she should be "a Lady for ever," and was rejected, and then fell, should have risen again in Christ, and have been espoused to Him as a Church, and become an Elect Lady in Him, and be addressed as such by the Apostolic brother of St. Peter, the beloved disciple, St. John.

If the above opinion is well grounded, we may recognize here a special use of this Epistle. It is indeed a very short one, but it serves an important purpose.

St. Peter, in his two Epistles addressed to the Christians of Asia, had inculcated those Articles of the Christian Faith which St. John laboured to defend; and St. Peter had delivered a prophetic warning against those Heresiarchs, who in the age and country of St. John, were endeavouring to destroy the foundations of the Faith in the Incarnation of the Son of God, and in the Godhead of Jesus Christ: and who, as St. Peter had predicted, were denying the Lord that bought them[9], and were walking after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness[10].

In the present Epistle St. John delivers a clear statement of the truth on those great articles of Christian Faith and Morals; and pronounces a stern condemnation of those heretical and antinomian Teachers who assaulted them, and whom he calls Antichrist[11].

This profession and protest would be more easily transcribed, and be more readily circulated, on account of the brevity of this Epistle, in which they are contained. It may seem surprising at first, that so short an Epistle should be received into the Canon of the New Testament. But, under the circumstances of the case, one of its strongest recommendations was, that it was short. It was a symbol of Faith, and safeguard against Error,—from the hands of St. John.

The Christians of Asia, and of the East, would be confirmed in their Faith and Practice by receiving the Apostolic witness of St. John to the same truths as those which they had heard from St. Peter. And the Church of every age may derive comfort from seeing the two Apostles, St. Peter and St. John, associated for ever in their writings, as they had been associated in their lives, in preaching the Truth, as it is in Jesus Christ, and faithfully feeding His flock, and guarding it valiantly against the wolves, who endeavour to destroy it[12].

The facts and considerations now submitted to the reader have some bearing on the question which was briefly mentioned at the close of the Introduction to the First Epistle of St. John.

That Epistle also, as we have seen[13], is described by some Ancient Writers and Manuscripts as having been addressed "to the Parthians."

[4] Cp. Tisch. p. 233. In the Latin Translation of S. Clement's Adumbrationes (p. 1011) we read "Secunda Joannis Epistola, quæ ad Virgines inscripta est, simplicissima est." Here the word Virgines is a translation of Παρθένους, which was probably only a corruption of Πάρθους, the Parthians, who had the rule of Babylonia in the age of St. Peter and St. John (see Kirchofer, p. 289). Indeed, S. Clement himself seems to have preserved something of a tradition to this effect. For while he says that this Second Epistle is written to a Babylonian, he says that the word Electa signified the Election of a Church.

[5] Isa. xlvii. 7.

[6] Isa. xlvii. 5. The word for Lady there is גְּבֶרֶת (gebereth), which is often rendered Κυρία (the word here used by St. John) by the LXX, as in Gen. xvi. 4. 8, 9. Isa. xxiv. 2.

[11] See vv. 7—11.

[12] John x. 10—12.

There is nothing improbable in this statement. In the Apostolic age, as has been already observed, the Parthians were second only to the Romans among the nations of the world. Many Jews dwelt in Parthia. The Parthians are placed first in the catalogue of the Jews who heard St. Peter preach at Jerusalem[1]. Babylon was in Parthia. St. Peter, it is probable, had gone thither in person, and had thence written an Epistle to the Churches of St. John[2].

Bearing in mind these circumstances, and considering the testimony of some ancient writers and Manuscripts specifying the Parthians in the inscription of the Epistle, and that there is no evidence to the contrary, and that no other name is mentioned by any ancient writer in that inscription, we cannot reject that testimony as altogether incredible; and we may at least be permitted to suppose it probable, that the First Epistle of St. John, written in all likelihood from Asia, was addressed to the same country as that in which his brother Apostle, St. Peter, was, when he wrote his first Epistle, which he sent to the Churches of Asia.

1. ὁ πρεσβύτερος] The elder. The beloved Disciple and Apostle, St. John, thus designates himself in modesty; so St. Peter calls himself συμπρεσβύτερος, 1 Pet. v. 1. Cp. 3 John 1. St. John was eminently "the elder," because it is probable, when he wrote his Epistles, he was the only survivor of those who had been ordained by Christ; and this title may also have been adopted by him because he was advanced in years. Christ had declared His will, that St. John "should tarry till He came" (John xxi. 21; see also on 1 John ii. 6); and his life was continued to upwards of a hundred years, so that there was a peculiar significance in this appellation, as applied to him. Here also is an evidence of genuineness. A writer personating the Apostle would not have withheld the Apostolic title, which the true Apostles sometimes do: see James i. 1. Jude 1. In the Apocalypse St. John in his modesty calls himself only John: i. 1. 4. 9; xxii. 8.

— ἐκλεκτῇ κυρίᾳ] to the elect Lady and her children. On the sense of these words, see above, Introduction to this Epistle.

— οὓς ἐγὼ ἀγαπῶ ἐν ἀληθείᾳ] whom I love in Christian truth, which is the only genuine foundation and element of Christian love; cp. 3 John 1. Truth is here opposed to the deceits of the false Teachers who are called liars, ψεῦσται (see 1 John ii. 22; cp. ibid. ii. 4; iv. 20), and whose heresies impugn the doctrine of Christ's Divinity and Incarnation, and are destructive of Christian Love and Christian Morality; see above, p. 102. Observe, therefore, how St. John dwells on the word ἀλήθεια, truth, Truth of Christian doctrine. That word Truth is repeated five times in this short Epistle; and six times in the Third Epistle, consisting only of thirteen verses.

3. χάρις, ἔλεος, εἰρήνη] Grace, Mercy, Peace. Both St. Peter's Epistles begin in like manner with the salutation, χάρις καὶ εἰρήνη: and so St. John, Rev. i. 4.

— παρὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ] from Jesus Christ the Son of the Father—a profession of the true Faith against the heretical doctrines of the Gnostic Teachers; see above, Introduction to the First Epistle; on 2 Pet. ii. 1; and on 1 John i. 1—3; and iv. 9.

4. ἐχάρην λίαν] I rejoiced exceedingly: on this use of λίαν see 3 John 3. Matt. ii. 10; xxvii. 14. Luke xxiii. 8. Cp. Barnabas, Epist. c. 1; Avete, filii et filiæ, in nomine Domini Nostri Christi in pace, supra modum exhilaror beatis et præclaris spiritibus vestris.

— εὕρηκα ἐκ τῶν τέκνων σου] I have found some of thy children. Here is another evidence in favour of the opinion—stated above in the Introduction—that he is writing to a Church. He had said that "all men love the Elect Lady and her children" (v. 1), and he now says, that he himself has found some of them walking in the truth. These assertions are hardly applicable to the children of a private woman, but they are suitable to the case of a Church. The Church to which he writes was known as a Church to all, and some of its members had come to the place where the Apostle was, and he had found them to be walking in the truth.

5. οὐχ ὡς ἐντολὴν γράφων σοι καινὴν] not as writing to thee (who art already well instructed) a new commandment: see above on 1 John ii. 8; iii. 11.

6. αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ ἀγάπη] this is love, that we walk according to His commandment. A protest against the false teachers who pretended to gnosis, but set at nought praxis: see on 1 John i. 5—8; ii. 6—10.

7. πολλοὶ πλάνοι] many deceivers went forth into the world. Even from out of the Church herself, the house of God, some have gone forth into the World, which "lieth under the Wicked one" (1 John v. 19); and have made the World more wicked than it was. See on 1 John ii. 18, 19.

Elz. has εἰσῆλθον, but A, B have ἐξῆλθαν and ἐξῆλθον, and so the Syriac, Vulgate, and Irenæus (iii. 16. 8), who quotes these words as from the First Epistle of St. John, and applies them to the Gnostics, who, under pretence of superior intelligence, separated Jesus from Christ (as the Cerinthians did), and separated Christ from the only-begotten of the Father, and from the Eternal Word.

— οἱ μὴ ὁμολογοῦντες] those who do not confess—but deny—Jesus Christ coming in the flesh. See above on 1 John iv. 3.

He says ἐρχόμενον, coming, because Jesus Christ is ever coming in the flesh to those who receive the benefits of His Incarnation by their baptismal Incorporation into Him, and by the reception of the Holy Sacrament of His Body and Blood; by which, when received with faith, their bodies as well as souls are preserved unto everlasting life. See above on John vi. 54—56; and 1 Cor. x. 16—20. 1 John v. 6.

This the Gnostics denied: see Ignatius, ad Smyrn. 6, and note on 1 John iv. 2.

— οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ πλάνος] this is the deceiver and the Antichrist: who now specially desires and endeavours to seduce you, and against whom I specially warn you: see above, 1 John ii. 22. 26; iv. 3.

8. ἵνα μὴ ἀπολέσητε] in order that ye may not lose what ye wrought, but may receive a full reward. Elz. has these verbs in the first person plural, "in order that we may not lose;" but the second person, "Ye," is authorized by A, B, and Irenæus (iii. 16. 8), and by many Cursives and Versions; and so Lach., Tisch. As to the meaning of the words, see above, 2 Cor. v. 10. Eph. vi. 8. Col. iii. 25, and note on 1 Cor. iii. 12—15.

9. πᾶς ὁ προάγων] every one who goeth before, and doth not abide in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. Every one that goeth before, προάγων: so A, B, and Vulgate, and so Lach., Tisch. Elz. has παραβαίνων.

There seems to be a gentle touch of irony in the word προάγων. These False teachers are not content to abide in the doctrine of Christ, but they set themselves up as leaders; and on the specious plea of making progress they carry men away from their stedfastness (2 Pet. iii. 17), and lead them astray (πλανῶσιν) from the right path. They who are wolves, set themselves up as shepherds, and lure Christ's sheep away from those spiritual pastures in which they ought to abide, and from the spiritual fold in which alone they can have rest and safety: προάγων is a pastoral word. Mark x. 32, and John x. 4. Cp. Matt. xxvi. 32; xxviii. 7.

10, 11. εἴ τις ἔρχεται πρὸς ὑμᾶς] If any one cometh to you and bringeth not this doctrine, do not receive him into your house, nor bid him God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed communicateth in his evil deeds.

St. John here treats heresy as an ἔργον πονηρόν, a wicked work; as sound faith is a good work, see John vi. 29. Vain therefore is the notion of those who separate practice from faith, and say that a man may lead a good life without a sound belief. A sound faith is the only root of virtuous practice; and heresy is the source of immorality. Cp. 2 Pet. ii. 1—14, and the remarks of Dr. Waterland on the Trinity, chap. v. St. John, the beloved disciple, the Apostle of love, and who (as Dr. Waterland expresses it, v. p. 108) was all love, meekness, and charity, yet severely condemns the heretics of his own times, either such as denied Christ's Humanity, or impugned His Divinity. He calls them Antichrists (1 John ii. 18. 22; iv. 3. 2 John 7), liars (1 John ii. 22), seducers (1 John ii. 26), false prophets (1 John iv. 1), deceivers (2 John 7). See above, Introduction, pp. 102, 103. And St. John here forbids to entertain or salute a man who perverts the doctrine of Christ as these heretics did.

This precept may be illustrated by St. John's own example, who one day—as is recorded by S. Irenæus—having met Cerinthus at the bath, retired without bathing, "for fear lest the bath should fall, because Cerinthus, the enemy of the truth, was there." Iren. iii. 3. Euseb. iii. 28. Theodoret, Hær. fab. ii. 3; and Bede here.

A like story is told by S. Irenæus of S. Polycarp, St. John's disciple; who, when he was accosted by Marcion, the Arch-heretic, and was asked by him, "Dost thou not know me?" replied, "Yes, I know thee the first-born of Satan" (S. Irenæus iii. 3. Euseb. iv. 14). So cautious (adds Irenæus) were the Apostles and their followers to have no communication, no not so much as in discourse, with those who adulterated the truth. Dr. Waterland on the Trinity, ch. iv. vol. v. p. 91; see also p. 108; and compare note above on 1 Cor. v. 11.

12. χάρτου] paper. It therefore seems that the original of this Epistle was not written on parchment (pergamena).

On the ancient materials of writing, see Jer. xxxvi. 18. 23. Isa. viii. 1. 2 Cor. iii. 3. Cp. Jahn, Archæol., §§ 86—88. Winer, R. W. B. ii. p. 421.

— ἐλπίζω γενέσθαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς] I hope to come and stay with you. Elz. has ἐλθεῖν, but γενέσθαι, which is more expressive, and not likely to have been introduced by a copyist, is in A, B, and many Cursives, and received by Lach., Tisch. On the idiom in γενέσθαι πρός, literally "fieri apud," cp. John x. 35. Acts xxi. 17; xxv. 15. 1 Cor. xvi. 10.

On the supposition that this Epistle is addressed to a Church, and that the Church to which it is addressed was a Church in Babylonia (see above on v. 1), there is no reason for surprise that St. John should intend a journey thither. The inhabitants of that country had come up to Jerusalem, and had been evangelized by the Apostles there on the day of Pentecost (Acts ii. 9). St. Peter in his old age had gone to Babylon, and thence to Rome; see pp. 37—40. And if St. John was now in Asia, as is probable, he was at about a middle point between Babylon and Rome; and if he had "many things to write" he would not consider a journey from Asia to Babylon as long.

13. ἀσπάζεταί σε] The Children of thine elect sister greet thee. See on v. 1.

St. John calls his own spiritual children his τέκνα, 3 John 4. Cp. 1 John ii. 1.

TO

THE THIRD EPISTLE OF ST. JOHN.

THIS Epistle is of a moral and disciplinarian character. In it the holy Apostle, who has revealed to the Church the sublimest mysteries of Christian doctrine, applies those principles to matters of practical detail in the regimen of the Church.

Gaius, or Caius, the beloved is commended for walking in the Truth, and for bringing forth the fruits of the Truth, in a life of love to the brethren and to strangers. Especially does St. John confide in the Christian charity of Gaius towards the Ministers of the Gospel, who go forth preaching to the Gentiles, without claiming maintenance from them.

The character of Gaius is contrasted with that of Diotrephes who had resisted the authority of St. John, and would not receive the brethren, who were probably recommended by the Apostle himself, but even ejected from the Church those who received them.

But St. John announces his intention of bringing Diotrephes to a sense of his duty by a speedy visitation, and by an exercise of his Apostolic authority.

Even in Apostolic times, the spirit of pride and the lust of power made themselves felt in the Church of Christ. God suffered His holy Apostles to be tried by the unruly temper and refractory conduct of false brethren. St. Paul had to contend with an Hymenæus, an Alexander, a Philetus[1], an Hermogenes, and a Phygellus[2]; even St. John had a Diotrephes. No wonder that a like spirit should show itself in later days. Here is the test of loyalty and love. "Beloved, do not imitate that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God, but he that doeth evil hath not seen God[3]." The Divine Lord and Master of St. John will come and call all men to account, who, in despising those whom He has sent, have despised Him[4]; and He will salute "His friends by name," with a greeting of everlasting peace.

1. ὁ πρεσβύτερος] The elder: on this title adopted by St. John, see 2 John 1.

— Γαΐῳ τῷ ἀγαπητῷ] to Gaius, or Caius the beloved. He seems to have borne much resemblance in character and acts (see v. 5) to Gaius of Corinth (Rom. xvi. 23), and to Philemon the Colossian friend of St. Paul (Philem. 7). A Gaius was appointed by St. John to be Bishop of Pergamum. Constit. Apost. vii. 46.

The word ἀγαπητός, beloved, is repeated four times in this short Epistle; the word ἀγαπᾶν, to love, occurs twenty-eight times, and the word ἀγάπη, eighteen times in St. John's First Epistle. The sternness of his language in condemnation of the Heretics of his age, is made more striking by its contrast with this inculcation of the duty of love; which shows that the words of rebuke are uttered in a spirit of love for the souls of those committed to his care, and of those also whom he reproves. Cp. St. Stephen's language, Acts vii. 60, and above, pp. 102, 103.

2. περὶ πάντων] in all respects. This translation seems preferable to the other rendering, "above all things;" for which sense of περί there is no authority in Prose writers. Cp. Winer, § 47, p. 334. Lücke (2nd ed.), and Huther, p. 246.

— εὐοδοῦσθαι] prosper, literally, on a journey (ὁδός). Cp. Rom. i. 10. 1 Cor. xvi. 2. St. John wishes that in all things the affairs of Gaius may go well, as they do in spiritual respects.

3. ἐχάρην γὰρ λίαν] for I rejoiced greatly. See 2 John 4.

4. μειζοτέραν] On this form of the comparative, see Eph. iii. 8. Winer, § 11, p. 65. Greater joy have I not, than these things, that I hear my children are walking in the truth. On the use of ἵνα, compare Luke i. 43. Cp. John xv. 8. 13; xvii. 3. 1 John iv. 17. Winer, § 44, p. 303.

5. πιστὸν ποιεῖς] thou art doing a faithful part, in whatever thou mayest have wrought (ἐργάσῃ, the reading of B, C, G, K) towards the brethren, and that also towards persons who are strangers to thee.

This is the only example of πιστὸν ποιεῖν in the New Testament. Cp. τὸ καλὸν ποιεῖν, Rom. vii. 21; xiii. 3, 4. Gal. vi. 9; and the combination used by St. John of ποιεῖν with a substantive, such as δικαιοσύνην: 1 John ii. 29; iii. 7. 10; and Rev. xxii. 15, ποιῶν ψεῦδος.

St. John expresses his confidence that whatever labours Gaius may have performed, or may be performing, toward the brethren, they are done by him as a faithful workman and servant of Christ.

The tense of ἐργάσῃ, thou mayest have wrought, implies, that though St. John has heard enough of the good deeds of Gaius to justify his general confidence in his character, yet he is aware that Gaius may have done much more good than has reached his ears.

The words καὶ τοῦτο, and this too (the reading of A, B, C—Elz. has καὶ εἰς τοὺς), enhance the praise of Gaius. He was affectionate and helpful toward the brethren, and that also to strangers who were unknown to him. On this use of καὶ τοῦτο and καὶ ταῦτα, see Rom. xiii. 11, and on 1 Cor. vi. 6. 8, καὶ τοῦτο ἀδελφούς. Matthiæ, Gr. Gr. § 471. 7.

6. ἐνώπιον ἐκκλησίας] in the presence of the Church; in the public congregation; probably at Ephesus, where St. John dwelt: see Introduction to his Gospel, pp. 266, 267.

— οὓς καλῶς ποιήσεις] whom if thou speedest on their journey in a manner meet for God (whose servants they are), thou shalt do well. On προπέμπειν, cp. Titus iii. 13; on ἀξίως τοῦ Θεοῦ, cp. 1 Thess. ii. 12. Col. i. 10.

7. ὑπὲρ γὰρ τοῦ ὀνόματος ἐξῆλθον] for they went forth on behalf of the Name—the adorable NAME of Jesus Christ, "the Name that is above every Name," Phil. ii. 9. See on Acts v. 41, ὑπὲρ τοῦ ὀνόματος ἀτιμασθῆναι, and the words of St. John's disciple, S. Ignatius, to St. John's Church of Ephesus, εἰώθασι γάρ τινες δόλῳ πονηρῷ τὸ ὄνομα περιφέρειν, ἄλλα τινὰ πράσσοντες ἀνάξια Θεοῦ, and then he proceeds to declare the Person and Natures of Christ. Ignat. ad Eph. 7. These words of S. Ignatius seem to have been suggested by St. John's language in these two verses, vv. 6, 7.

— μηδὲν λαμβάνοντες] taking no wages from the Gentile (plural, adjective); i. e., the Gentile Christians. Elz. has ἐθνῶν, but ἐθνικῶν is in A, B, C, and received by Lach., Tisch.

On the purport of these words—intimating that they, to whom St. John refers, demanded no ministerial maintenance from the Gentile Christians, to whom they ministered the Word and Sacraments—see note above, on 1 Cor. ix. 6.

8. ὑπολαμβάνειν] to receive, entertain, and treat them hospitably, with reverence and love. There seems to be a slight paronomasia between λαμβάνοντες and ὑπολαμβάνειν: cp. Philem. 20. Elz. has ἀπολαμβάνειν; but ὑπολαμβάνειν is in A, B, C*, and is received by Lach., Tisch.

— ἵνα συνεργοὶ γινώμεθα] in order that we may be fellow-labourers with them in the Truth. By receiving God's Ministers we become fellow-workers with them in the Truth which they preach, and "he that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward." Matt. x. 41.

9. ἔγραψά τι] I wrote somewhat to the Church. Elz. omits τι, which is in A, B, C, and so Lach., Tisch.

The purport probably of this writing was to exhort those of δέχεται ἡμᾶς· 10 διὰ τοῦτο, ἐὰν ἔλθω, ὑπομνήσω αὐτοῦ τὰ ἔργα ἃ ποιεῖ, λόγοις πονηροῖς φλυαρῶν ἡμᾶς· καὶ μὴ ἀρκούμενος ἐπὶ τούτοις οὔτε αὐτὸς ἐπιδέχεται τοὺς ἀδελφούς, καὶ τοὺς βουλομένους κωλύει, καὶ ἐκ τῆς ἐκκλησίας ἐκβάλλει.

11 [b] Ἀγαπητέ, μὴ μιμοῦ τὸ κακὸν, ἀλλὰ τὸ ἀγαθόν. Ὁ ἀγαθοποιῶν ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστιν· ὁ κακοποιῶν οὐχ ἑώρακε τὸν Θεόν. 12 Δημητρίῳ μεμαρτύρηται ὑπὸ πάντων, καὶ ὑπ' αὐτῆς τῆς ἀληθείας· καὶ ἡμεῖς δὲ μαρτυροῦμεν, καὶ οἴδατε ὅτι ἡ μαρτυρία ἡμῶν ἀληθής ἐστι.

[b] Ps. 37. 27. Isa. 1. 16. 1 Pet. 3. 11. 1 John 3. 6, 49.

13 [c] Πολλὰ εἶχον γράψαι σοι, ἀλλ' οὐ θέλω διὰ μέλανος καὶ καλάμου σοι γράφειν· 14 ἐλπίζω δὲ εὐθέως σε ἰδεῖν, καὶ στόμα πρὸς στόμα λαλήσομεν.

15 Εἰρήνη σοι· ἀσπάζονταί σε οἱ φίλοι· ἀσπάζου τοὺς φίλους κατ' ὄνομα.

[c] 2 John 12.

the Church, of which Gaius was a member, to receive the brethren who laboured in the Gospel. But Diotrephes, who aspired to have the pre-eminence there, took advantage of St. John's absence, and conducted himself in a very different temper to that of Gaius (see v. 5), and would not obey St. John's commands, and would neither receive the brethren commended by St. John, nor would he allow others to receive them, and was casting out of the Church those who did receive them. Wherefore, says the Apostle, if I come, as I intend to do very soon (see v. 14), to the place where you and he are, I will call to remembrance (see John xiv. 26) his works which he doeth, prating vainly against us with wicked words.

On the word φιλοπρωτεύων, see Wetstein, p. 731; and on φλυαρῶν, see ibid., p. 343, and on 1 Tim. v. 13. It has properly a neuter sense, to prate idly, but like some other neuter verbs in the New Testament, it is here put intransitively (Winer, § 38, p. 225); and so it implies that the idle words are uttered by the speaker in a contemptuous tone against another person.

What St. John wrote to the Church is no longer extant. Cp. note on 1 Cor. v. 9, where St. Paul refers to an Epistle written by himself which is not now in existence.

10. ἐκ τῆς ἐκκλησίας ἐκβάλλει] he casteth out of the Church, by excommunication. S. Hippolytus, Bishop of Portus, speaks of some who were ἐκβλητοι τῆς ἐκκλησίας, by his own spiritual authority. Philosoph. p. 290.

It seems that Diotrephes was a Minister of the Church in which Gaius resided; and that this Epistle was written to maintain in that Church the authority of St. John as an Apostle and Metropolitan of Asia, in which character he was commissioned by Christ to write the Epistles to the Asiatic churches in the Apocalypse, Rev. i. 11, and chaps. ii. and iii.

11. μὴ μιμοῦ τὸ κακόν] Do not imitate that which is evil, as the example of Diotrephes is; but that which is good. Cp. Heb. xiii. 7. 1 Pet. iii. 13, and Martyr. Polycarp. 19, τὸ μαρτύριον μιμεῖσθαι.

12. Δημητρίῳ] A good testimony has been given to Demetrius by all men, and by the Truth itself. A contrast to Diotrephes. St. John, as their spiritual superior, dispenses praise and blame to each respectively.

The Truth here is no other than the Spirit of Truth abiding in St. John. Christ promised to send to His Apostles "the Spirit of Truth to guide them into all Truth" (John xvi. 13), and He did send the Spirit to them on the Day of Pentecost, and that Spirit enabled them to discern the spirits of men (1 Cor. xii. 10), as St. Peter discerned the spirit of Ananias (Acts v. 3), and to pronounce judgment upon them.

The Spirit, says St. John, is Truth (1 John v. 6). And since St. John himself had the Spirit, he asserts, that "whoever knoweth God heareth us; and whoever is not of God heareth not us." (1 John iv. 6.) Hence St. John was able to bear testimony to Demetrius, who perhaps carried the Epistle, and the testimony which St. John bears, was the testimony of the Truth itself.

— καὶ ἡμεῖς δὲ μαρτυροῦμεν] and not only so, but we bear testimony, and ye know that our testimony is true.

The Spirit of Truth in us bears testimony, and we, the human ministers by whom the Spirit speaks, bear testimony. So the Apostles speak at the Council of Jerusalem, "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us." Acts xv. 28.

13. διὰ μέλανος καὶ καλάμου] with ink and pen, properly reed. Cp. above, 2 John 12. It does not follow from these expressions that St. John wrote his Epistle with his own hand. He may have done so. Cp. note above on Gal. vi. 11. 2 Thess. iii. 17. Col. iv. 18.

— γράψαι σοι] to write to thee now at this time.

So A, B, C.—Elz. has γράφειν; and vice versâ, at the end of the paragraph Elz. has γράψαι, and A, B, C have γράφειν, which expresses a habit.

I had many things to write to you now, but I am not willing to write them with ink and pen, under such circumstances as these, when I hope very soon to see you to whom I am writing. Cp. 2 John 12.

15. ἀσπάζονται—ὄνομα] salute the friends by name. The good pastor imitates that Good Shepherd, who "calleth His sheep by name." John x. 3.

INTRODUCTION

TO

THE EPISTLE GENERAL OF ST. JUDE.

THE Epistle of St. Jude bears a remarkable resemblance in matter and language, and also in order of arrangement, to the Second Epistle of St. Peter; as will appear from the passages placed at the foot of this page [1].

From a comparison of these passages it seems most probable that the Epistle of St. Jude was subsequent to that of St. Peter.

For example, St. Peter speaks prophetically of the false Teachers who would "privily bring in destructive heresies, denying the Lord that bought them [2]." But St. Jude describes these false Teachers as already in existence and full operation. "Certain men (he says) crept in, who were long ago foreordained to this condemnation [3]."

Besides, St. Jude appears to make a special reference to St. Peter's Second Epistle. "Beloved, remember the words that were spoken before by the Apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ, that they told you, that in the last time there shall be scoffers walking according to their own lusts of unholiness [4]."

Hence, as was observed by Œcumenius [5] in ancient times, this Epistle appears to have been written after the Second Epistle of St. Peter.

This opinion has been adopted by many learned men of later days [6]. If it is correct, then the Epistle of St. Jude cannot have been written before A.D. 66 or 67, the date of St. Peter's Second Epistle.

Indeed, on an examination of internal evidence, it seems to be later than that time. The picture which is drawn in this Epistle, of the heretical doctrines and licentious practices of the false Teachers, represents them as developed in the fulness and boldness of inveterate and dominant malignity, after a previous growth of some years.

At first sight, it may perhaps seem surprising, that an Epistle should have been written so similar to the Second Epistle of St. Peter, as this Epistle of St. Jude is; and have been received into the Canon of the New Testament.

But, on consideration, it will be perceived, that such a procedure as this is in perfect harmony with the general structure of Holy Writ.

It would be erroneous to assert, that St. Jude had merely copied a large portion of the Epistle of St. Peter. It ought rather to be said, that the Holy Spirit often repeated by one Prophet what He had said by another, and that He often repeated by a third Evangelist what He had written before by the other two[1]; and that He does this for greater confirmation of what He has said, and in order to authenticate the writings in which His words are contained, and to show their great importance to the world, and to inculcate them more forcibly on the mind of the Church; and so, for like reasons, He repeats by St. Jude, not however without some modifications and additions, what He had already declared by St. Peter. He has thus set His seal on St. Peter's Second Epistle, and has shown that the prophecies, which He Himself there uttered, have been fulfilled.

Besides, in opposition to the various forms of false and conflicting doctrines, which are there condemned, He has displayed to the world an exemplary pattern of Apostolic unity in confuting heresy and maintaining the Truth.

The forms of heretical Teaching and Practice which were present to the mind of St. Jude, when he wrote this Epistle, have already been described in the Introduction to the Second Epistle of St. Peter[2], and in the notes on the parallel passages of that Epistle.

On the authorship of this Epistle, it may be observed, that the writer calls himself "Jude the brother of James[3]."

He would not have used such a designation, unless James had been a well-known person, and unless the James to whom he refers was the person who was best known by that name at that time.

It has therefore been rightly concluded by ancient and modern authors[4], that the James who is here mentioned by St. Jude, was James "the Lord's brother" or cousin[5], the Bishop of Jerusalem.

This conclusion is confirmed by the testimony of the Gospels, where we find that our Lord had a brother called Jude, as well as a brother called James[6].

The question, whether James the Lord's brother, or cousin, was also an Apostle, and the same person as "James, the son of Alphæus," in the catalogue of the Apostles, has been already considered[7]; and an opinion has been expressed that the balance of probabilities is in favour of their identity.

This conclusion is confirmed by the fact, that, after the mention of "James the son of Alphæus," in the catalogue of the Apostles, we have two persons placed next in order, Simon Zelotes, or the Cananite (a word which has the same sense as Zelotes), and Jude—of James.

A question has been raised, what word is here to be supplied after Jude—whether it is to be son, or brother, of James?

But on this point there seems little reason for doubt. The James who is connected in the Apostolic Catalogue with Jude, cannot be a different person from "James, the son of Alphæus," who is mentioned just before in the catalogue. And none of the Apostles of Christ, as far as we find, were far advanced in years when they were called to the Apostleship; and it is not probable that James the son of Alphæus (who is probably the same as Clopas, whose wife was living, and a follower of our Lord[8]), was old enough, when he was called to the Apostleship, to have a son of sufficient age to be an Apostle. It is therefore most likely that the words Ἰούδας Ἰακώβου signify, as our Translators render them, "Jude brother of James[9]."

Accordingly, we find that Jude, the author of this Epistle, is designated as an Apostle by very early Christian writers [1], and this Epistle is described as the Epistle of St. Jude the Apostle, in the Vulgate and Syriac Versions; and St. Jude is designated as an Apostle by the Church of England, in common with the rest of the Western Church, and the majority of the Greek Fathers [2].

This being the case, it would follow from a comparison of the catalogues of the Apostles in St. Matthew and St. Mark, with the catalogue in St. Luke's Gospel and the Acts [3], that St. Jude had two other names, Lebbæus and Thaddæus.

Accordingly, we find in ancient writers that Jude, the author of this Epistle, is sometimes called trinomius, or trionymus, i. e. bearing three names [4].

The belief in the identity of St. Jude the Apostle and Jude the Lord's brother, is strengthened by the sameness of temper evinced in the only speeches recorded in Holy Scripture, as uttered respectively by Jude the Apostle, and by the brethren of our Lord.

St. John relates [5] that Jude the Apostle said to Christ, "Lord, how is it that Thou wilt manifest Thyself to us, and not to the world?" St. Jude was eager for the public display of Christ's earthly glory; in which, probably, he himself, as an Apostle, expected to share.

Compare this speech with that of our Lord's brethren, recorded also by St. John [6], "His brethren said unto Him—If Thou doest these things, show Thyself to the world."

This coincidence confirms the opinion that Jude the Apostle was one of our Lord's brethren.

It is observable, that in St. Luke's catalogue of the Apostles, both in the Gospel and the Acts, James is separated from his brother Jude by an intervening name, that of Simon Zelotes, or Cananite; and that in the lists of the Apostles, in the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Mark, James is separated from Simon, the Cananite, by an intervening name, that of Thaddæus or Jude.

This is remarkable.

What can be the reason of this arrangement?

May it not be, that St. James, St. Jude, and St. Simon, were three brothers?

It is not likely, that in a list of Apostles a brother should be parted off from a brother by a person who was not a brother. The separation of St. Peter from his brother St. Andrew by the two brothers St. James and St. John, who were eminently distinguished by Christ, does not invalidate this statement. That severance is only made by St. Mark, who justifies it by a suggestion of the reason [7]; and in the Acts of the Apostles [8], after the evidence of Christ's special favour to James and John,—but not in St. Luke's Gospel [9]. In all the lists of the Apostles, James, Jude, and Simon are grouped together.

We find also that "our Lord's brethren" were called "James, and Joses, and Simon, and Jude," as the names are arranged by St. Matthew [10]; or, according to the order in which the names stand in St. Mark's Gospel [11], "James, and Joses, and Jude, and Simon." In the one Gospel Simon stands before Jude, in the other Gospel he stands after him; in both Gospels James stands first of the three brothers. James, being the first Bishop of Jerusalem, would rightly have the precedence among the Lord's brethren.

Here, then, are precisely the same three names as in the Apostolic catalogues; here also one name, that of James, stands always first in order; and there is precisely the same modification in the arrangement of the other two names, Simon and Jude, as in the catalogues of the Apostles.

We have, therefore, some ground for supposing, that the three persons who are called James, Jude his brother, and Simon, who were Apostles, are the same persons as the James, Jude, and Simon who are called "brethren of our Lord [12]."

This consideration is confirmed by the fact recorded by ancient Writers, that after the martyr-

[12] In the Festivals of the Church of England, and of the Western Church, "Simon and Jude, Apostles," are commemorated together in one day. There is a propriety in this union; the more so, if they were brothers by blood, as well as brother Apostles.

dom of James the Lord's Brother, and Bishop of Jerusalem, the person who was chosen to succeed him was Symeon, or Simon[1], a son of Clopas, and therefore brother of James, and also brother or cousin of our Lord; and that he was chosen on account of this relationship, in addition to other considerations; as was the case even with the grandsons of St. Jude, who were chosen to fill Episcopal chairs for a similar reason[2].

This Symeon, or Simon, the successor of St. James, lived to the age of 120, and suffered martyrdom under Trajan[3].

If Simon Zelotes, the Apostle, was, as we have reason to believe, the same as this Simon or Symeon, cousin of Our Lord, and brother of James the Bishop of Jerusalem, and of Jude the Author of this Epistle, then in this double connexion with Christ, both by virtue of Apostleship and kindred, and in the long duration of his life and Episcopate at Jerusalem, where St. James had lived and died, and finally, in his faithful vigilance and courageous martyrdom[4] for Christ, we have an assurance, that the Epistles which have come down to us, bearing the names of his brothers James and Jude, were carefully kept by him and his Church, and are genuine and authentic writings of those whose names they bear.

St. Jude himself was married and had children[5]; and he is probably one of those to whom St. Paul refers, when he says, "Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as the other Apostles, and the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas[6]?" Some of St. Jude's grandchildren are mentioned by Hegesippus[7], as having borne testimony to the truth in the presence of the Emperor Domitian; and as having had spiritual rule over Christian Churches, and surviving to the time of Trajan.

This continuation of ecclesiastical eminence, and of faithful confession, in that holy family affords a further guarantee to the integrity of those writings of which they were the depositaries and guardians.

1. Ἰούδας] Jude, a servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James: probably the same person who is called Thaddæus and Lebbæus, and one of the Lord's brethren; and he is called Thaddæus and Lebbæus at the end of the Armenian Version of this Epistle; and so Bede and Estius here. See above on Matt. x. 3. 12; xii. 46, and 1 Cor. ix. 5, and Introduction, pp. 133, 134.

He calls himself "brother of James;" but neither he nor St. James call themselves "brethren of the Lord," but both call themselves "servants of Jesus Christ." Clemens Alexandrinus says (Adumbrat. p. 1007, ed. Potter), "Judas extans valdè religiosus, quùm sciret propinquitatem Domini (i. e. his own relationship to Christ), non tamen dixit seipsum fratrem Ejus esse: sed quid dixit? Judas, servus Jesu Christi."

Nor do either of them call themselves Apostles. Nor does St. John in his Epistles or Apocalypse. See above on James i. 1. But the writer of this Epistle is expressly called "an Apostle" by Tertullian in the second century (de Cultu femin. i. 3), and by Origen (on Rom. lib. v. p. 549, and on Matt. tom. i. p. 223), who says, "Jude wrote an Epistle consisting of a few lines, but full of the words which are empowered by heavenly grace."

— ἡγαπημένοις] beloved. So A, B, and Origen, iii. p. 607, and Lach., Tisch.—Elz. has ἡγιασμένοις. The sense is, to those who have been, and are, beloved in God the Father; that is, beloved in God the Father, Who is the original of all blessing, and in Whom ye are, as His children by adoption in Christ. Ye were sometimes alienated from Him (Eph. iv. 18), but now ye are beloved in Him. Ye are all one in the Father and the Son. John xvii. 21, 22.

The perfect participles here, ἡγαπημένοις and τετηρημένοις, not only express a past act, but a present state. See above, 1 John ii. 29; iii. 9; iv. 7; v. 1. 4. 18.

— καὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ τετηρημένοις] and who have been and are preserved, or kept, for Jesus Christ. The evil Angels are preserved or kept (τετηρημένους) for judgment (2 Pet. ii. 4); the heavens are preserved or kept for fire (2 Pet. iii. 7); but ye are preserved and kept for Jesus Christ, as a peculiar people (1 Pet. ii. 9), and there is an everlasting inheritance preserved or kept in heaven for you (1 Pet. i. 4).

Hence he says at the close of the Epistle, v. 21, "Keep yourselves (ἑαυτοὺς τηρήσατε) in the love of God, waiting for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life."

2. εἰρήνη—πληθυνθείη] peace be multiplied. A salutation found in this Epistle and in both St. Peter's Epistles, and in them only; and designed perhaps to call the reader's attention to those two Epistles, and to connect this Epistle as a sequel with them.

3. ἀγαπητοί] Beloved, when I was exercising all diligent desire to write to you concerning the common salvation, I was constrained to write to you, exhorting you to contend earnestly for the Faith that was once for all delivered to the Saints.

St. Jude here states the cause of the controversial character of this Epistle.

He had been earnestly desirous to write to them concerning the common salvation; and he would have been glad to have confined himself to that subject; but he was forced to write against those who were trying to lead them to destruction.

He was constrained by the prevalence of false doctrines, to frame his address in such a manner, that it should take the form of an exhortation to his readers to contend for the faith which had been once for all delivered to the Saints; and which was assailed by the false Teachers. For (he adds) "some men crept in unawares," and are now endeavouring to corrupt the faith.

Hence his Epistle is written in an antagonistic tone; but he does not forget the hortatory portion of his design. He commands his disciples here to fight for the faith; but he also exhorts them in the sequel to build themselves on it. See v. 20.

St. Jude does compendiously, and in one short Epistle, what had been done by other preceding Apostles more at large in several longer Epistles. St. Paul, and St. Peter, and St. John, had written with a twofold design; first to establish the Truth, secondly, to refute error. See above, Introduction to St. Peter's Second Epistle, p. 70, and Introduction to St. John's Second Epistle, p. 123. St. Jude refers to their labours, and reiterates their admonitions and warnings (v. 17), and sums them up in one concise and energetic address.

"The faith had been once for all delivered to the Saints;" and for this faith St. Jude's disciples are earnestly exhorted to contend. Here therefore is an Apostolic protest against all subsequent additions to it, such as those of the Gnostic systems in earlier times, and of the Trent Creed of the Church of Rome in later days. Cp. note above on Gal. i. 8, 9.

"To contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the Saints." Divine words, few in number, but rich in meaning. If rightly understood and duly obeyed, these words would put an end to all modern controversies, and restore Peace to the Church. Do we desire to know what the true Faith is? St. Jude here tells us—that which was once, and once for all, delivered to the Saints. Every doctrine, which can be shown to be posterior to that Faith, is new; and every doctrine that is new is false. Isaac Casaubon (Dedication to his Exercitationes Baronianæ).

On this use of ἅπαξ, "once for all," "semel et simul," see Heb. ix. 7. 26—28. 1 Pet. iii. 18, and Bengel, Stier, Passow, Huther, and others here.

Ἐπαγωνίζεσθαι, "super-certare" (Vulg.), is to fight, standing upon a thing which is assaulted, and which the adversary desires to take away; and it is to fight so as to defend it, and to retain it. See Loesner.

On this use of the word πίστις, for the faith received, the deposit of sound doctrine, see Eph. iv. 5, and note above, on Rom. xii. 6. Cp. S. Polycarp, ad Phil. c. 7, ἐπὶ τὸν ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἡμῖν παραδοθέντα λόγον ἐπιστρέψωμεν. "The faith once for all delivered to the saints," is set down by S. Irenæus (i. 2, 3. Grabe, pp. 45, 46). Tertullian, de Virg. Vel. c. 1; de Præscr. hæret. c. 13. S. Jerome, c. Joann. Hieros. § 28. Cp. Hooker, II. i. 5. Bingham, Eccl. Ant. x. 3, 4.

4. παρεισέδυσαν] they crept in privately, as it were, by a side-door, and with a stealthy purpose. On this use of παρὰ in composition see 2 Pet. ii. 1, παρ-εισάξουσιν αἱρέσεις. Gal. ii. 4, παρ-εισάκτους ψευδαδέλφους. Cp. 2 Tim. iii. 6, ἐνδύνοντες εἰς τὰς οἰκίας.

St. Jude here announces the fulfilment of the prophecy of the Apostle St. Peter, who had foretold in his Second Epistle that false Teachers would arise, and "would bring in privily destructive heresies." See 2 Pet. ii. 1. Here is an evidence of the priority of that Epistle. See above, Introduction, p. 132. Cp. below, vv. 17, 18.

— οἱ πάλαι] they who were long ago publicly declared in the writings of the Holy Scriptures to be destined for this punishment; of which St. Jude is about to speak in what follows.

On the sense of προγράφω, to write before, or to display publicly, as in a writing or picture, see Rom. xv. 4. Eph. iii. 3. Gal. iii. 1, where see note. The πρὸ may have, and probably has here, the sense, previous designation.

The word κρῖμα does not signify sin, but punishment (see 2 Pet. ii. 3), and what St. Jude says, is, that these men were publicly warned beforehand of the punishment (κρῖμα) they would incur, if they were guilty of the sins which they are now committing. The words τοῦτο τὸ κρῖμα signify this punishment, which he is about to specify in the sequel; a frequent use of οὗτος. See Kühner, § 626. Matthiæ, § 470.

The doom which they would incur had been προγεγραμμένον, written publicly beforehand, in the prophecy of Enoch (v. 14), and visibly displayed in the punishment of the Israelites (v. 5), and in that of the rebel Angels (v. 6), and had been graven indelibly in letters of fire on the soil of Sodom and Gomorrha (v. 7).

Since God is unchangeably just and holy, all who sin after the manner of those who have been thus punished, must look for like punishment to theirs. They have been publicly designated beforehand for it, by the punishment of those whom they imitate in sin. Therefore, these false Teachers cannot plead ignorance of the consequences of their sin; and you will be without excuse, if you are deceived by them.

The false Teachers here specially noted were the Simonians, Nicolaitans, and Ebionites. See Œcumen. and Theophylact, and cp. below, v. 7, and above on 2 Pet. ii. 1.

— τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ] turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness: as the Gnostic Teachers did, by perverting the doctrine of Christian liberty into a cloke of maliciousness. See on 1 Pet. ii. 16. 2 Pet. ii. 19; and cp. the words of S. Augustine, quoted on 2 Pet. iii. 16. He refers specially to the Nicolaitans and disciples of Simon Magus. See Didymus here in Bibl. Patr. Max. iv. p. 336.

— καὶ τὸν μόνον Δεσπότην καὶ Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἀρνούμενοι] and denying our only Master and Lord Jesus Christ. The word δεσπότης, Master, here designates Christ; as may be inferred from the place in St. Peter's Epistle (2 Pet. ii. 1), where it is said that these false Teachers deny the Master (δεσπότην) Who bought them: that is, they deny Him Who purchased them with His own blood, 1 Pet. i. 19. Cp. Rev. v. 9, ἠγόρασας τῷ Θεῷ ἡμᾶς, and the note above, 2 Pet. ii. 1, for a detailed account of the various modes in which the Gnostic and other false Teachers of the Apostolic times "denied the Lord who bought them."

After δεσπότην Elz. writes Θεόν; but this is not in A, B, C, and is cancelled by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch. It is found in G, K, and many Cursives, and in the Syriac, Arabic, and Æthiopic Versions, and in Theophylact and Œcumen. Cp. note above on 2 Pet. ii. 1.

5. ὑπομνῆσαι δὲ ὑμᾶς βούλομαι] but I am desirous to remind you who know all things once for all; εἰδότας has a present sense, "who know;" not "who knew."

The reading πάντα, all things, is that of A, B, C, and of Vulg., Copt., Syriac, and several Cursives and Fathers; and is preferable on many accounts to τοῦτο, this, the reading of Elz.

St. Jude wrote this Epistle against the Gnostics, who (as their name declares) professed superior gnosis or knowledge; and under pretence thereof beguiled their hearers into corrupt doctrines and licentious practices. See above on 2 Pet. i. 2, 3.

St. Jude assures his disciples that they themselves have all necessary knowledge, that they know all things. Compare 1 John ii. 20, οἴδατε πάντα.

Ye need not any new doctrines from these Teachers; nor do ye require any further teaching from me, since ye have been fully instructed already by the other Apostles. But (δὲ) my desire is to remind you of what ye already know, and therefore I now write. Cp. 2 Pet. i. 12, μελλήσω ὑμᾶς ἀεὶ ὑπομιμνήσκειν περὶ τούτων καίπερ εἰδότας.

They knew all things once for all (ἅπαξ), for they had received "the faith once for all delivered to the Saints," v. 3. The sense of ἅπαξ is precisely the same here as there. Cp. Bengel, Stier, Huther.

— ὅτι ὁ Κύριος] that the Lord having saved the people (of Israel, cp. 2 Pet. ii. 1) out of the land of Egypt.

It is observable that A, B have Ἰησοῦς, Jesus, here for Κύριος. According to this reading, Jesus Christ is represented as having delivered the Israelites And this reading is supported by several Cursives, and the Vulg., Coptic, Sahidic, Æthiopic, and Armenian Versions; and by Didymus, Cyril, Jerome, Cassian; and is received by Griesb. and Lachmann.

This doctrine had been already taught by the Apostle St. Paul, in his commentary on the history of the Exodus, where he speaks of Christ as present with the Israelites in the wilderness. See 1 Cor. x. 1—11. Heb. iii. 7—19; iv. 1, 2.

St. Jude "the servant of Jesus Christ" (v. 1), refers to the deliverances of the Exodus, described by Moses, as the act of the Lord; and to the prophecy of Enoch concerning the future Advent of the Lord (v. 14), and also to the Apostles of the Lord (v. 17), and thus he reminds his readers, against the allegations of the false Teachers, that the God of both the Old and the New Testament is One; and that in both Christ is the Lord. Cp. Theophylact here.

This passage is cited by S. Clement of Alexandria, in the second century. Pædag. ii. p. 239.

— τὸ δεύτερον] the second time. The first thing that God did was to deliver them; the second thing was to destroy them; the first time that they needed His aid, He delivered them; the next time that they needed it, He destroyed them (cp. Winer, p. 547); so soon did destruction follow deliverance, even of His own people. Let this be a warning to those false Teachers, and to you.

6. ἀγγέλους τε] and not only men did He thus punish, but Angels also, namely, those who did not keep their own first estate (their original bliss in heaven which He gave them as their own), but left their proper habitations, He hath kept under darkness with everlasting chains until (and for) the Judgment of the great Day.

"Proprium principatum; scilicet quem acceperant secundum profectum; sed deliquerunt suum habitaculum, cœlum videlicet ac stellas, et apostatæ facti sunt." Clemens Alex. l. c. p. 1008.

The Fall of the Angels is here declared to be due to their own deliberate will and deed; it was due to pride. See 1 Tim. iii. 6.

Their chains may well be called ἀΐδιοι, everlasting; for, though their chain now permits them to visit this nether region, yet they always carry that chain with them, and are restrained from injuring God's servants; and by attempting to do so they are aggravating their sin and punishment; and they are kept for ever from recovering their first estate, and original habitation; and at the Judgment of the great Day they will be cast into the Lake of Fire. Cp. Rev. xx. 2, 3.

On the present condition, and future destiny of Evil Angels, see above, note on 2 Pet. ii. 4.

S. Clement of Alexandria says here (p. 1008), that the chains in which the evil angels are now confined are the darkness of the air near this earth of ours ("vicinus terris locus, caliginosus aër"), and that they may well be said to be chained, because they are restrained from recovering the glory and happiness they have lost. The phrase, "chain of darkness," occurs in Wisd. xvii. 17.

This passage is cited by Origen in Matt. tom xv. p. 693, and in Rom. lib. 3, vol. iv. p. 510, where he calls this Epistle "scriptura divina," ibid. lib. v. p. 549.

7. Σόδομα καὶ Γόμορρα] Sodom and Gomorrha are also set before you as warnings in Holy Writ. Gen. xix. 24. Deut. xxix. 23. Isa. xiii. 19. Jer. l. 40. Ezek. xvi. 49. Hosea xi. 8. Amos iv. 11. Zeph. ii. 9; and in the New Testament, Luke xvii. 28, 29. Rom. ix. 29. 2 Pet. ii. 6.

— αἱ περὶ αὐτὰς πόλεις] the cities around them, Admah, and Zeboim. Deut. xxix. 23. Hos. xi. 8.

— τὸν ὅμοιον τρόπον τούτοις] having given themselves over to fornication, in like manner to that of these men (on this use of ὅμοιος see Rev. xiii. 11). These Gnostic Teachers and their votaries were guilty of harlotry, and their sins were also like those of the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, going after strange flesh (cp. Rom. i. 27). See the description of the Nicolaitans, S. Iren. i. 20. Theodoret, hær. fab. i. Epiphan. hær. xxv.; and cp. note above, on 2 Pet. ii. 2, and below, on v. 8.

It is observed in the valuable Ancient Catena on this Epistle, published by Dr. Cramer, p. 157, that St. Jude, in this and the following passages, is warning his readers against the false doctrines, and licentious practices, of the following heretics of the Apostolic, and sub-Apostolic age, namely, the Simonians, Nicolaitans, Ebionites, Cainites, Borborites, Valentinians, Sethians, Marcionites, Manichæans. The Epistle cannot be rightly understood without reference to their tenets.

— πρόκεινται δεῖγμα πυρὸς αἰωνίου] are set forth as an example of everlasting fire. Cp. 2 Pet. ii. 6, πόλεις Σοδόμων καὶ Γομόρρας κατέκρινεν, ὑπόδειγμα μελλόντων ἀσεβεῖν τεθεικώς. Cp. 1 Maccabees ii. 5. Wisdom x. 7, and S. Irenæus, iv. 70, "pluerat Deus super Sodomam et Gomorrham ignem et sulphur de cœlo, exemplum justi judicii Dei."

St. Jude does not say, that these Cities are suffering the penalty of everlasting fire, but that by their punishment and perpetual desolation (δίκην ὑπέχουσαι), they are a specimen of that fire which awaits the ungodly, and which is everlasting. Cp. Cassiodorus, Estius, Stier, and Huther here.

Or, if, with the English Version, De Wette and others, we render the words thus, "are set forth for example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire," then they are to be thus expounded; "As Sodom and Gomorrha suffer the vengeance of a fire that consumed them finally, so that they will never be restored, as long as the World lasts, so the bodies and souls of the wicked will suffer, as long as they are capable of suffering; which, since they are immortal, will," as Tertullian says, "be for ever," "erimus iidem, qui nunc, nec alii post resurrectionem; Dei quidem cultores, apud Deum semper, profani verò in pœnam aequè jugis ignis, habentes ex ipsâ naturâ ejus, divinâ scilicet, subministrationem incorruptibilitatis." (Apol. 48.)

Cp. notes above, on Matt. xxv. 46. Mark ix. 44—48. 1 Cor. xv. 26, and see Bp. Taylor, Serm. iii., on Christ's Advent to Judgment, Part iii. § 6, where will be found a complete and conclusive argument on the Eternity of Future Punishment, and Dr. Horbery on the Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment, chap. ii. Num. xciv.

8—16.] This passage is referred to by Clemens Alexandrin. Strom. iii. p. 431, where he speaks of this description as prophetic, and as applicable to false Teachers also of the age after the Apostles.

8. ὁμοίως μέντοι] in like manner however, notwithstanding these warnings, these false Teachers proceed, with wilful and presumptuous recklessness, in the same course as those, whose example of suffering ought to have deterred them from sinning. The Sodomites are specially mentioned by St. Jude, because some of the Gnostics in their unclean recklessness of living even honoured them as free, and as proficient in superior knowledge! A fearful warning against the flagitious results of Heresy. See Irenæus i. 35, and above, Introduction to St. Peter's Second Epistle, p. 72, and to St. John's First Epistle, p. 102, and 1 John i. 6, and below, note on v. 11.

— ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι] dreaming, they dream evil things, and fondly deem them to be good. Clem. Alex. They profess superior knowledge, and yet they live like men in a dream, from which they will awake to woe.

On this word see the fearful comment and recitals of Œcumenius and Epiphanius, hæres. xxvi.

— σάρκα μὲν μιαίνουσι] they defile the flesh with filthy lusts, in which they are led to indulge by their denial of Christ's Incarnation and Passion, and of the Resurrection of the flesh. See above, on 2 Pet. ii. 2. 10—12.

The μὲν, indeed, on the one side, with its correlative δὲ, which follows (σάρκα μὲν μιαίνουσι, κυριότητα δὲ ἀθετοῦσι) suggest by a slight but significant touch, that there is a moral and metaphysical connexion between sensual defilements of the flesh, and contumelious outrages against lordship. The reason is obvious. They who pollute the flesh, which has been consecrated by Christ's Incarnation, will not scruple to revile His dominion and dignity, and that of those who are His Representatives. Sensuality and Lawlessness are joined together in the same manner by St. Peter (2 Pet. ii. 10).

— κυριότητα δὲ ἀθετοῦσι] they reject lordship. See on 2 Pet. ii. 10.

— δόξας δὲ βλασφημοῦσιν] and speak evil of glories or dignities. See on 2 Pet. ii. 10.

9. ὁ δὲ Μιχαὴλ] but (in a very different spirit from that of these men, who imitate the rebel Angels and the men of Sodom), Michael the Archangel, when contending even with the devil, he was disputing about the body of Moses.

Michael = מִיכָאֵל = who is as God? who is like God? Cp. Rev. xiii. 4, with Dan. x. 13. 21; xii. 1, and Rev. xii. 7; and the word Archangel occurs 1 Thess. iv. 16.

The Gnostic false Teachers, against whom St. Jude writes, professed to revere Angels: they said that the World was made by Angels; and they even worshipped them. See above, on Col. ii. 8. 18, and 2 Pet. ii. 1. 10.

St. Jude therefore refers to the example of an Archangel, and thus puts them to shame. These false Teachers despised lordships and reviled dignities. But the Archangel Michael, although contending even with a fallen Angel, the leader of fallen Angels, the Devil,—διαβόλῳ, the calumniator, or railer,—and disputing with him concerning the body of Moses, which God had buried and concealed (Deut. xxxiv. 6), in order, as is probable, that it might not become an object of worship to the Israelites; and which, it seems, the Devil desired to possess, in order that God's purpose in this respect might be frustrated, and that the mortal remains of that faithful servant of God might be made to be an occasion of creature-worship to the Israelites,—as the brazen serpent set up by Moses was made to be (2 Kings xviii. 4), and as the relics of holy men have been made in later times,—yet even against him, the Arch-enemy of God, and even on such an occasion, the Archangel Michael did not venture to bring a railing sentence, but reserved all Judgment to God, and said, The Lord rebuke thee.

The Archangel was courteous in his language even to the Devil; so was Abraham to Dives in torment (Luke xvi. 25), and Christ to Judas the traitor (Matt. xxvi. 50).

The Jews themselves, from whom the Gnostics for the most part arose (see Introduction to St. John's First Epistle, p. 98, and on 2 Pet. ii. 1), had a tradition, that Sammael, the prince of the Devils, had a contest with the Archangel Michael, concerning the body of Moses, at the time of his death and burial (Liber de Morte Mosis, p. 161, and the Rabbinical testimonies in Wetstein, p. 735, and Origen de princip. iii. c. 2, where he says that St. Jude is here citing a book called the "Ascension of Moses." Compare Œcumenius here). That the devil's design was to defeat God's purpose with regard to that body, may be concluded from Michael's words, as recorded by St. Jude, "The Lord rebuke thee!" words like those which God Himself addressed to Satan, when he stood at the right hand of the Angel to resist him, when he was about to clothe Joshua with fair raiment, instead of filthy garments (Zech. iii. 2, 3).

δὲ, ὅσα μὲν οὐκ οἴδασι, βλασφημοῦσιν· ὅσα δὲ φυσικῶς, ὡς τὰ ἄλογα ζῶα, ἐπίστανται, ἐν τούτοις φθείρονται.

11 [k] Οὐαὶ αὐτοῖς, ὅτι τῇ ὁδῷ τοῦ Κάϊν ἐπορεύθησαν, καὶ τῇ πλάνῃ τοῦ Βαλαὰμ μισθοῦ ἐξεχύθησαν, καὶ τῇ ἀντιλογίᾳ τοῦ Κορὲ ἀπώλοντο.

12 [l] Οὗτοί εἰσιν ἐν ταῖς ἀγάπαις ὑμῶν σπιλάδες, συνευωχούμενοι ἀφόβως, ἑαυτοὺς ποιμαίνοντες· νεφέλαι ἄνυδροι ὑπὸ ἀνέμων παραφερόμεναι· δένδρα φθινοπωρινὰ, ἄκαρπα, δὶς ἀποθανόντα, ἐκριζωθέντα· 13 [m] κύματα ἄγρια θα-

Hence some ancient Expositors conjecture, that Satan claimed the body of Moses, on the plea that he had killed the Egyptian (for which they refer to the testimony of some Apocryphal books), and that Satan resisted Michael, when he was about to divest Moses of his garment of mortality, and to clothe him in that glorious brightness in which he appeared at the Transfiguration. Matt. xvii. 3. Mark ix. 4. Luke ix. 30. See Theophylact, Œcumen., and, in particular, Catena, pp. 160—163; and cp. Philo de Sacrif. Abel, p. 102.

10. ὅσα μὲν οὐκ οἴδασι] ὅσα quæ et quanta, what and how great things—namely, God, and Christ, and the Holy Angels—they know not, they revile. On this use of ὅσα, see Rev. i. 2, ὅσα εἶδε.

These false teachers boast of their superior knowledge, but they revile such things as they know not, spiritually and intellectually; and as many things as they have experience of, and sensible acquaintance with, such as the objects of the carnal appetite, "Comedere et bibere, et rebus venereis indulgere, et alia perpetrare quæ sunt communia cum animalibus ratione carentibus" (Clem. Alex., p. 1008), in these things they corrupt themselves.

11. οὐαὶ αὐτοῖς] Woe unto them! cited by S. Clemens Alexandrin., Pædag. ii., p. 239.

— τῇ ὁδῷ τοῦ Κάϊν] in the way of Cain: specially applicable to some classes of the Gnostics, who dared impiously to affirm, that "Cain was made by a Power superior to that of the Creator; and who acknowledged Esau, Korah, and the Sodomites, and all such, as their own kindred." See Irenæus, i. 31 (Stieren), i. 35, p. 113 (Grabe). Cp. Tertullian, Præscr. c. 47. Clem. Alexandr., Strom. vii., p. 549. S. Hippolyt., Phil. p. 133. Epiphan., Hær. 38. Theodoret, Hæret. fab., c. 15; Philastr., c. 2. Tillemont, ii. p. 21. These false Teachers destroy, like Cain; they love lucre, and allure to sin, like Balaam; they make divisions in the Church of Christ, like Korah. Caten., p. 164: and cp. Bede, and note above, on 1 John i. 6.

— τοῦ Βαλαάμ] of Balaam.

On the resemblance of the Gnostic Teachers to Balaam, see on 2 Pet. ii. 18, and Didymus here, p. 333.

— μισθοῦ] for reward: the genitive of the object. Winer, § 30, p. 183; or price, ibid., p. 185.

— ἐξεχύθησαν] they poured themselves out in a torrent: they rushed in a foul, headlong cataract of sin and recklessness. Compare the metaphor in 1 Pet. iv. 4, ἀσωτίας ἀνάχυσιν. On this use of the word, see the examples in Loesner, p. 503.

— τῇ ἀντιλογίᾳ τοῦ Κορὲ ἀπώλοντο] and they perished in the gainsaying of Korah: that is, in gainsaying, like that of Korah and his company (Numb. xvi. 33). "The doom of those who rise against the True Faith, and excite others against the Church of God, is to be swallowed up by the Earth, and to remain in the gulph below, with Korah, Dathan, and Abiram." Irenæus (iv. 43, Grabe).

This warning of St. Jude, a Christian Apostle, is a proof that the sin of Korah and his company, rising in schismatical opposition to their Rulers temporal and spiritual, may be committed in Christian times. And the words of S. Irenæus explain what that sin is, and what its punishment. Cp. Dr. W. H. Mill's Sermon, "On the Gainsaying of Korah;" preached on the 29th of May. Cambridge, 1845.

Some of the Gnostics professed even to regard Korah with admiration. See Iren. i. 34, Grabe. Theodoret, Hæret. fab., c. 15; and above, on v. 11, and on 1 John i. 6.

12. ἐν ταῖς ἀγάπαις ὑμῶν] in your love-feasts, provided at the common cost of the Churches in the exercise of charity and hospitality. See above, on 2 Pet. ii. 13. Tertullian, Apol. 39. Lightfoot, in 1 Cor. xi. 31. Bingham, xv. c. 7.

St. Jude here adds a new circumstance to what had been before said on this matter by St. Peter. See 2 Pet. ii. 11. 13, and the next note. S. Hippolytus (Ref. Hæres., p. 175) describes the Simonians as saying that their promiscuous μίξεις were τελείαν ἀγάπην, and μακαρίζοντας ἑαυτοὺς ἐπὶ τῇ μίξει: cp. what he says of the Nicolaitans, p. 258.

— σπιλάδες] rocks, shoals. So Œcumen. Theophylact., Etymol., where the word is explained by rocks under the surface of the sea, ὕφαλοι πέτραι; and this sense has been adopted by Lightfoot, Wetstein, Whitby, Meyer, De Wette, Schleusner, Huther, Peile, the American Revisers, and many other recent Expositors. Indeed, this is the only sense in which the word σπιλὰς is found in ancient authors; and it is a word of frequent occurrence. See Homer, Odyss. iii. 298; v. 401. 405; and the authorities in Wetstein, p. 736.

Besides, St. Jude is comparing these false Teachers to objects in the natural world, viz., clouds, trees, waves of the sea, wandering stars. Therefore the word rock, reef, or shoal, seems to harmonize better with the context than spots, which is indeed the sense of σπῖλοι (2 Pet. ii. 13), but not of σπιλάς. False Teachers in a Church may well be called σπιλάδες, shoals or rocks, as well as waves and wandering stars; and this figurative expression seems to add completeness to the picture. In Heretical Teaching there are the wandering stars above, beguiling the mariners in the ship of the Church, from the right course; there are the raging waves dashing against it; and there are the hidden shoals on which it may strike unawares, and be wrecked.

It is probable that these false Teachers introduced themselves clandestinely into the Love-feasts (ἀγάπας) provided by the Churches in the exercise of hospitality for strangers, and thus inculcated their errors (Lightfoot, ii. p. 776). And so they were like dangerous reefs and shoals, on which some made shipwreck of the faith: cp. 1 Tim. i. 19.

These σπιλάδες may be well said to be ἐν ταῖς ἀγάπαις, where the Church looks only for peace and safety, as in a deep and placid harbour. The words scopulus, φάραγξ, Charybdis, Euripus, barathrum, &c., are thus applied frequently to persons. See Florus iv. 9, where Antony is called a scopulus: and Aristoph., Equites 248, φάραγγα καὶ Χάρυβδιν ἁρπαγῆς, and Anthol. ii. 15. 1, εἰς δολίους, where treacherous persons are compared to ὕφαλοι πέτραι. Horat., Ep. i. 15. 31,—

> Pernicies et tempestas barathrumque macelli,
> Quicquid quæsierat ventri donabat avaro.

This passage of St. Jude affords another specimen of the characteristic of this Epistle, adopting, or alluding to, what had been said by St. Peter in his Second Epistle; and also adding some new feature to it. As St. Peter's word ἀπάταις may have suggested St. Jude's ἀγάπαις, so St. Peter's word σπῖλοι may have produced St. Jude's σπιλάδες. Thus St. Jude shows his knowledge of that Epistle; he recognizes, illustrates, and confirms it; and he also contributes to it new incidents of his own. See above, on 2 Pet. ii. 11. 13, and note here on v. 12, and pp. 132, 133.

After εἰσιν A, B, G insert οἱ, and so Lach., Tisch. And this reading is confirmed by the identification of the persons with the emblems which represent them in what follows, viz. Trees, and Waves, and Stars. See the notes there.

— ἑαυτοὺς ποιμαίνοντες] feeding themselves—not the flock. Ezek. xxxiv. 2. 8. 10.

— παραφερόμεναι] borne along: so A, B, C, and Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch. Elz. has περιφερόμεναι.

— δένδρα φθινοπωρινά] autumnal trees—trees in the fall of the year (Didymus, Vulgate, Bede, &c., Hammond, Bengel); as they appear in the season called φθινόπωρον, when the autumn is verging into winter. It means, therefore, trees without fruit, or even leaves (Œcumen. and Catena, p. 166). These Teachers are too reckless in sin even to be hypocrites, like the barren leafy fig-tree; cp. Matt. xxi. 19, 20. Mark xi. 13. 20. Cp. Plutarch, Symp. viii. 10, φθινοπωρινὸς ἀὴρ, ἐν ᾧ φυλλοχοεῖ τὰ δένδρα. Wetstein, p. 736; and Dean Trench on the authorized Version, p. 125. This translation seems preferable to that which renders the words δένδρα φθινοπώρινα, trees, whose fruit withereth; from φθίνω, to perish, and ὀπώρα, fruit. St. Jude does not, it seems, mean to say that their fruit perishes, but that they have no fruit.

— ἄκαρπα] not only without fruit, but unfruitful, incapable of bearing fruit.

— δὶς ἀποθανόντα, ἐκριζωθέντα] which died twice, and have been uprooted. St. Jude applies to the Trees what is true of the 17 Ὑμεῖς δὲ, ἀγαπητοὶ, μνήσθητε τῶν ῥημάτων τῶν προειρημένων ὑπὸ τῶν

Persons represented by the Trees, as our Lord in cursing the Fig-tree spoke to Jerusalem, represented by the Tree, which He cursed. See on Matt. xxi. 19. Mark xi. 13—20.

In like manner, in the verse following, St. Jude speaks of these false Teachers as Waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; not that Waves do this, but the Men do it, who are likened to the Waves. He also calls them Stars, to whom the gloom of the darkness has been reserved for ever; and he applies to the Stars what is true of the men who are represented by the Stars. Cp. Catena here, p. 165; and Clem. Alex., p. 1008, "apostatas significat."

So these men are Trees which died twice, because these men having been once dead in trespasses and sins, and raised to life in baptism, have relapsed and apostatized into the death of sin, and so have died twice; and because by their sins they have incurred the second death. See Rev. ii. 11; xx. 6. 14; xxi. 8, where it is said that the second death is the penalty of the unbelieving, abominable, and fornicators.

They are uprooted, because Christ has said, "Every tree which My Father hath not planted shall be rooted up" (ἐκριζωθήσεται), Matt. xv. 13. Their doom is described as already executed, because it is certain. Compare in v. 14 here, ἦλθε Κύριος, "the Lord came." His coming is certain: cp. Isa. xxi. 9. Jer. li. 8. Babylon is fallen. Rev. x. 7. Winer, § 40, p. 248.

14. προεφήτευσε δὲ καὶ τούτοις] but Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied also to those. His warning is addressed to them, as well as to those of his own and future ages; let them then profit by it. And it was for these, that is for their warning and benefit, as well as for those of Enoch's own time.

St. Jude here notes, that Enoch was the seventh from Adam. The Jewish doctors say, "The number seven is sacred above all; Enoch is seventh from Adam, and walks with God; Moses is seventh from Abraham; Phineas is seventh from Jacob our father, as Enoch was seventh from Adam; and they correspond to the seventh Day which is the Sabbath, the day of rest. Every seventh age is in the highest esteem." See the Rabbinical authorities cited by Wetstein, p. 737.

Seven is the sabbatical number, the number of Rest. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, having finished his course after the labours of this world, in an evil age, was like a personified Sabbath. God rested in him, and he rested in God. Cp. notes above, ὄγδοον Νῶε, 2 Pet. ii. 5.

Enoch, the seventh from Adam, walked with God in a corrupt age (Gen. v. 22), and pleased God, and, as St. Jude here states, delivered a Prophecy concerning the Second Coming of Christ to Judgment, and the Sabbath of Eternity; and he was translated and taken to his rest (Gen. v. 24. Heb. xi. 5). He was a personal type of those holy men, who will be found alive at that Second Coming, and will be caught up, to meet the Lord, in the air; and so be ever with the Lord (1 Thess. iv. 17).

Almighty God created the World in Six Days, and rested on the Seventh Day. Enoch, in the seventh Generation of Mankind from the Creation of Adam, was taken up by God to his rest. And some of the Fathers supposed that the World will run its course for Six millenary periods, and then have its rest in the Seventh Millennium. See above, on 2 Pet. iii. 8.

It is worthy of remark, that Enoch lived as many years as there are days in a Solar year, viz., 365, and was then translated (Gen. v. 24). Cp. the description of Enoch in Milton, Par. Lost, 665;—

> "Of middle age one rising, eminent
> In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong,
> Of Justice, of Religion, Truth, and Peace,
> And Judgment from above; him old and young
> Exploded, and had seized with violent hands,
> Had not a cloud descending snatched him thence > Unseen amid the throng; so violence > Proceeded."

— λέγων] saying, Behold the Lord came with His holy myriads, to execute judgment.

He says "the Lord came," because the Lord's Coming is certain. Enoch, who lived 5000 years ago, saw in the spirit Christ's advent as an event that had already happened. A noble specimen of divine Inspiration. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, saw Christ—who is the True Rest of the Righteous (Matt. xi. 28, 29)—already come to Judgment. Cp. the prophetic use of the aorist on Rev. x. 7, ἐτελέσθη, and note above, v. 12.

This citation is found in the second chapter of the Book of Enoch, which was probably compiled by a Jew, in the first century of the Christian era, from traditionary fragments, ascribed to Enoch (compare Origen here, in Num. 28; c. Cels. v. p. 267. Augustine, de Civ. Dei, xv. 23. S. Jerome, Script. Eccl. c. 4), and appears to have been seen by Tertullian, de idol. 4, de cultu fam. i. 3, where he refers in a remarkable passage to this citation, by "Jude the Apostle" (ii. 10). The "Book of Enoch" has been translated into English from the Æthiopic by Dr. Lawrence, Oxford, 1821, who published the Æthiopic Text, Oxf. 1838, which corresponds with the Greek Fragments cited by the ancient Fathers. An analysis of the Book of Enoch may be seen in Fr. Lücke's Commentary on the Apocalypse, erste Abtheilung, pp. 89—144. Cp. Winer, R. W. B. i. 477; and note above on 2 Pet. iii. 13.

This citation by St. Jude from the Book of Enoch, which was not canonical, was probably a reason why some persons had doubts concerning the authority of this Epistle. See Jerome, Script. Eccl. c. 4; but S. Jerome says that in his age this Epistle was authorized by general reception among the Holy Scriptures; and he observes in another place, that St. Paul also, in his canonical Epistles, cites from books not canonical. See 2 Tim. iii. 8, concerning Jannes and Jambres; and that he also quotes heathen poets. See S. Jerome in Tit. c. i.; in Ephes. c. v.; and note above, 1 Cor. xv. 33.

16. γογγυσταὶ, μεμψίμοιροι] murmurers, against God's providence; querulous, discontented with their own lot. Cp. Theophrast, char. xvii., περὶ μεμψιμοιρίας; and contrast this character with St. Paul's spirit and language in Phil. iv. 11, 12. 1 Tim. vi. 6—8. Heb. xiii. 5.

— ὑπέρογκα] swelling words. On the boastful vaunting of these false teachers, see 2 Pet. ii. 8.

— ὠφελείας χάριν] for the sake of advantage. On their covetousness, see 2 Pet. ii. 3. 14.

17. ὑμεῖς δέ] But, beloved, remember ye the words which have been spoken before by the Apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ: that they told you, that in the last time there should be scoffers, walking according to their own lusts: words spoken by the Apostle St. Peter in his Second Epistle, iii. 2, and confirming the proof of the priority, authenticity, and genuineness of that Epistle. See note there, and Hengstenberg on the Apocalypse, Introd. p. 19 (Berlin, 1849), who observes that this verse is decisive on the question of the priority of St. Peter's Epistle.

There seems also to be a reference here to the description of the Last Days in St. Paul's last Epistle, 2 Tim. iii. 1—6, ἐν ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις ἔσονται ἄνθρωποι φίλαυτοι κ.τ.λ. There is a special propriety in this admonitory reference in this Epistle—one of the last of the Catholic Epistles—to the last warning in the Epistles, of the Apostles of the Circumcision, and of the Gentiles, St. Peter and St. Paul. Cp. Œcumen. on v. 1. Compare the admonition in Hebrews xiii. 7, "Remember your Rulers, who spoke to you the word of God," where St. Paul appears to be exhorting the Hebrews to remember especially St. James, the Bishop of Jerusalem (see note there); and St. Jude, the brother of James, here appears to be exhorting his readers to remember St. Peter and St. Paul.

On these verses, 17—21, see Hooker, Sermons v. and vi. vol. iv. pp. 819—870.

18.] See S. Hippolytus de Consummatione Sæculi, § 10, ed. Fabric., p. 9, who cites this verse.

19. οἱ ἀποδιορίζοντες] the separatists. The definitive article joined with the participle describes more than an act, it represents a habit and state. Cp. ὁ πειράζων, Matt. iv. 2, and note. ὁ βαπτίζων, Mark vi. 14, and Luke iii. 14, οἱ στρατευόμενοι.

St. Jude uses an active verb here, because these false teachers seduced and separated others from the Church, as well as themselves: cp. Winer, § 38, p. 225, and note above, on Mark xiv. 72. Cp. the precept in Barnabas, Epist. c. 4, "Non separatim debetis seducere vos, sed in unum convenientes, inquirite, quod communiter dilectis conveniat et prosit." And see also the ancient Catena, p. 168, where this word is expounded, "making schisms and rending the members of the Church." Cp. Hooker, Sermon v. § 12.

— ψυχικοί] animal; not πνευματικοί, spiritual, as they professed to be; and they branded others as merely animal, and not spiritual. They are πνεῦμα μὴ ἔχοντες, not having πνεῦμα, i. e. the influence of the Holy Spirit. See Clem. Alex. p. 1398, "non habentes spiritum, qui est per fidem secundum usum justitiæ superveniens," and Bp. Middleton on Matt. i. 18; and John iii. 6. Acts vi. 3. Gal. v. 5 16. 18. 25, 26.

Some of the Gnostics of the sub-Apostolic Age said, as S. Irenæus relates, "that animal men (ψυχικοί) are conversant only with animal things (ψυχικά), and have not perfect gnosis; and they describe us who are of the Church, as such; and they say that as we are only such, we must do good works, in order to be saved; but, they assert, that they themselves will be saved, not by practice, but because they are spiritual (πνευματικοί) by nature: and that as gold, though mingled with mire, does not lose its beauty, so they themselves, though wallowing in the mire of carnal works, do not lose their own spiritual essence. And therefore, though they eat things offered to idols, and are the first to resort to the banquets which the heathen celebrate in honour of their false gods, and abstain from nothing that is foul in the eyes of God or man, they say that they cannot contract any defilement from these impure abominations; and they scoff at us who fear God, as silly dotards (cp. v. 10), and hugely exalt themselves, calling themselves perfect, and the elect seed; and they even make lust a virtue, and call us mere animal men (ψυχικοὺς), and say that we stand in need of temperance, in order to come to the pleroma, but that they themselves, who are spiritual and perfect, have no need thereof." S. Irenæus i. 6. 2—4.

20. ἐποικοδομοῦντες ἑαυτοὺς τῇ ἁγιωτάτῃ ὑμῶν πίστει] building yourselves upon your most holy faith. Faith is the foundation laid by God, and it is for you to labour in raising the superstructure upon it. Cp. 2 Pet. i. 5, ἐπιχορηγήσατε τῇ πίστει ὑμῶν τὴν ἀρετήν.

He had exhorted them to contend earnestly upon and for the Faith once for all delivered to the Saints (v. 3), he now exhorts them to build themselves up upon it. The Christian Soldier must also be a Christian Builder. He must have a sword in one hand and a trowel in the other. See above, Introduction to 2 Peter, p. 70, 71.

This Faith is called most holy in opposition to the unholy doctrines and practices of the heretical Teachers. Cp. v. 14. Compare Hooker, Sermon vi. §§ 13—15.

20, 21. ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ προσευχόμενοι] praying in the Holy Ghost, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, unto life eternal. See above, v. 2. A testimony to the Trinity of Persons in the Godhead, and a remarkable parallel to that of St. Paul, "The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all." 2 Cor. xiii. 14, where see note; and cp. 1 Pet. i. 1—3.

22. οὓς μὲν ἐλέγχετε—φόβῳ] and some indeed who are contentious (διακρινομένους) reprove ye; but others save ye, plucking them out of the fire; and on others have compassion with fear. So Lach., Tisch., with a preponderance of the other Manuscripts.

Elz. has οὓς μὲν ἐλεεῖτε διακρινόμενοι, οὓς δὲ ἐν φόβῳ σώζετε ἐκ τοῦ πυρὸς ἁρπάζοντες. Against this reading it may be also observed that διακρίνομαι in the New Testament never signifies to make a difference, or to discriminate one thing or person from another, with a view to the preference of the good; but it always signifies either to doubt (see Acts x. 20; xi. 12. Rom. xiv. 23. James i. 6), or to contend, and dispute, as in this Epistle, v. 9, and Acts xi. 2: cp. note above, on James ii. 4; and often in the LXX. Jer. xv. 10. Ezek. xx. 35. Joel iii. 2; and it is therefore expounded in this sense here by the ancient Greek Interpreters Œcumenius, Theophylact, and Catena, p. 170.

The phrase, plucking from the fire, seems to be from Zech. iii. 2, "Is not this as a branch plucked from the fire?" words spoken by the Lord to Satan. It is observable that St. Jude refers to that passage above, v. 9, The Lord rebuke thee! Perhaps there may be an allusion also in what follows (hating even the tunic that has been spotted by the flesh) to the filthy garments which are taken from Joshua as a sign that his iniquities are taken away (v. 4), and in order that he may be clothed with a new priestly tunic reaching to the feet. See Zech. iii. 4, in LXX.

— μισοῦντες—χιτῶνα] hating even the tunic that has been spotted by the flesh.

Ye have put on Christ (Gal. iii. 27); ye have received from Him a wedding garment (see Matt. xxii. 12) white and clean, and ye must walk in white (see Rev. iii. 4, 5. 18; vi. 11; xix. 14), and not stain your garments (Rev. iii. 4) with the mire of lust and sin (see 2 Pet. ii. 22); and though ye must, in your Christian charity, endeavour to pluck sinners out of the fire, yet your love for the erring must not tempt you to love their errors. While ye strive to rescue the sinner from the flame, ye must abhor the garb of sin in which he is clothed; ye must hate the tunic, the inner robe, soiled by the stains of the flesh, "animæ videlicet tunica maculata est spiritus concupiscentiis pollutus carnalibus." Clem. Alexandr.

24, 25. τῷ δὲ δυναμένῳ] A remarkable sentence, declaratory of the true doctrine against the Gnostics. But, to Him that is able to keep you from stumbling, and to set you blameless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy, to the only God our Saviour, through Jesus Christ our Lord, be Glory, Majesty, Strength, and Authority before all Eternity, and now and for evermore. Amen. The δὲ, but, at the beginning of the sentence, is not to pass unnoticed. False teachers may seek for glory elsewhere. But you will ascribe it all to God through Christ.

24. ὑμᾶς] you. So Elz., Lach., and C, G, and Vulg., Syriac, Arabic, Æthiopic, and many Cursives.—Tisch. reads αὐτοὺς, them.

25. μόνῳ] Elz. adds σοφῷ, not in A, B, C, and rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch.

Χριστοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν δόξα, μεγαλωσύνη, κράτος καὶ ἐξουσία πρὸ παντὸς τοῦ αἰῶνος καὶ νῦν καὶ εἰς πάντας τοὺς αἰῶνας, ἀμήν.

— διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν] through Jesus Christ our Lord,—cancelled by Elz.; but in A, B, C, G, and received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch.; and having a peculiar propriety in this Epistle, directed against Heretics who separated Jesus from Christ, and did not acknowledge Him as the Giver of all grace from God. Cp. on 2 Pet. ii. 1.

— πρὸ παντὸς τοῦ αἰῶνος] before all eternity: also omitted by Elz., but found in A, B, C, G, and received by Scholz, Lach., Tisch., and also very appropriate in this Epistle, as asserting the Eternal Pre-existence of Christ against the false Teachers. Cp. Introduction to St. John's First Epistle, pp. 98—101.

TO

THE BOOK OF REVELATION.

On the Design and Structure of the Apocalypse.

To understand the design of the APOCALYPSE or Book of REVELATION, we must consider the circumstances of the Author at the time when it was written.

The writer was the beloved disciple, St. John, the Apostle and Evangelist[1] of Christ. At the date of the Apocalypse he was left, as is most probable, the last survivor of the Twelve. Many of his brother Apostles had died as martyrs of Christ. Jerusalem had been destroyed by the armies of Rome, according to the prophecies that he had heard from his Divine Master[2]. Thus the Truth of Christ's words had been manifested; and the Majesty of His Power in that Judgment, executed on those who rejected and crucified Him, had been displayed.

But now the Roman Power, which had been employed by Almighty God to punish Jerusalem for its sins, was persecuting Christianity. Under the Emperor Nero, it had slain the Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul; and now in the last years of the reign of Domitian it was raging against the Church with greater violence. It had banished St. John in his old age to the Isle of Patmos, "for the word of God and for the testimony of Jesus Christ[3]." Other conflicts were at hand. The faith of the Church was to be tried in a succession of Persecutions breaking forth at intervals for the space of more than two centuries.

When these Persecutions had ceased, Christianity would have to pass through a severer ordeal. In the fourth and fifth Centuries, the Church would be distracted by dissensions, and the True Faith would be depraved by heretical adulterations. Intestine Discords and Corruptions would expose it to the assaults of adversaries from without, who would be suffered by Almighty God to chastise Christendom.

Such calamities as these might perplex many. Many might be tempted to faint and falter in the faith, and to sink into despondency and despair. Century after century would pass away. The darkness would seem to be growing thicker and thicker around the vessel of the Church, and the tempest to be rising higher and higher; and Christ would not yet be seen walking on the waves, coming to the ship, and stilling the storm.

We, who live at a distance of more than seventeen hundred years from the date of the Apocalypse, and look back from our own age to that of St. John, know what the prospect was, which was seen by Him who dictated the Apocalypse—"the Revelation of JESUS CHRIST[4]."

We also know, that some things lie still beyond us, which were foretold by Patriarchs and Prophets, and were clearly foreseen by Christ. His Second Advent, the General Resurrection, the Universal Judgment, the joys of Heaven, and the pains of Hell, these things lay open to His eye.

If now we proceed to examine the contents of the Apocalypse, we find that it is adjusted in a remarkable manner to these circumstances.

An uninspired Christian writer, living at the date of the Apocalypse, the end of the First Century, and contemplating the divine Origin of the Gospel, and the miracles wrought by Christ and His Apostles; and reflecting on the Destruction of Jerusalem, and on the Dispersion of the Jews for their rejection of Christ according to His prophecies, and observing the marvellous extension of the Gospel at that time, would have augured for the Christian Church a speedy and complete Victory. He would have anticipated, that after a short struggle it would have triumphed over Heathenism, as Christ had triumphed over Jerusalem. And if such a writer had also been informed, that after a conflict, of little more than two centuries, with the Heathen Power of Rome, Christianity would have been accepted by the Imperial Masters of the World, he would have been strongly confirmed in that cheering anticipation.

But this is not the tone of the Apocalypse.

It reveals a long train of future sufferings, failings, and chastisements in the History of the Church. And yet it cheers the reader with the consolatory assurance, that Christ is mightier than His enemies; that He went forth in the first age of the Gospel like a royal warrior, "conquering and to conquer[1];" and that He enables all His faithful servants to overcome[2]; that they who die for Him, live; that they who suffer for Him, reign[3]; and that the course of the Church of Christ upon Earth is like the course of Christ Himself; that she is here as a Witness of the Truth, that her office is to teach the world; that she will be fed by the Divine hand, like the Ancient Church[4] with manna in the wilderness; that she will be borne on eagles' wings in her missionary career throughout the world; and yet that she must expect to suffer injuries from enemies and from friends; that she too must look to have her Gethsemane and her Calvary, but that she will also have her Olivet; that through the pains of Agony and Suffering, and through the darkness of the Grave, she will rise to the glories of a triumphant Ascension, and to the everlasting joys of the new Jerusalem; that she, who has been for a time "the Woman wandering in the wilderness[5]," will be for ever and ever "the Bride" glorified in heaven[6].

It will be readily acknowledged by those who contemplate the course of the Church from the days of St. John to the present age, that such a representation of it is in perfect accordance with the facts of the case; that it bears evidence of divine foresight; and that it was well adapted to serve the purpose of rescuing the minds of Christians in every age from the dangers of despondency and unbelief, and also from the snare of indulging in illusory hopes and visionary dreams of perfect spiritual unity, and religious purity upon earth; and that it was admirably framed to instruct and prepare them to encounter trials and afflictions with constancy and courage, and to endure hardness as good soldiers of Christ; and to strengthen their faith, and quicken their hope even by those trials and afflictions, as having been foretold by Christ in this Book; and that it thus affords a pledge that the other predictions of this same Book, which reveals the full and final Triumph of Christ and the eternal Felicity and Glory of all His faithful servants, and the destruction of all His Enemies, will not fail of their accomplishment.

The Apocalypse is therefore a Manual of Consolation to the Church in her pilgrimage through this world to the heavenly Canaan of her rest.

In another respect also it is fraught with spiritual comfort and edification.

At the time when the Apocalypse was written, Jerusalem was trodden under foot by the Heathen. Her temple had been burnt by Roman armies; her Sacred Vessels had been carried to Rome; no sacrifices were offered on her altars, the sound of her holy songs had ceased; her Festivals were no more frequented by Jews from every region under heaven; her inhabitants had been scattered abroad among the nations of the earth. Almighty God seemed to have hidden His face from His people, and to have rejected them for ever. Here then was an urgent need of comfort to those who mourned, in the spirit of Jeremiah, amid the ruins of their Sion, and wept over her desolations, and remembered the city of their solemnities[7], and all the pleasant things that she had enjoyed in the days of old[8].

This comfort is supplied by the Apocalypse.

It carries the reader back to the first ages of Israelitish history. It places him in Egypt[9], and teaches him to recognize there, in the Ancient Church of God, a type and figure of the Church of Christ. Or rather, since there is but one Church of God from the beginning of the world to the end, we may boldly say that the Apocalypse identifies the Catholic Church of Christ with God's ancient People in Egypt. It takes up the history of the Plagues of Egypt, and teaches the true Israelites of the Christian Sion to regard them as prophetical shadows of those judgments which Christ, Who was typified by Moses, and who acted by the hand of Moses, will execute on all the Pharaohs of this world, who persecute His Church.

The Apocalypse adopts the scenery of the Exodus, and renews the Song of Moses [1], the servant of God, and puts it into the mouth of the Israel of God, standing in safety on the shore of a sea of glass, the calm sea of everlasting peace. It appropriates the History of the Ancient Church in the Wilderness, and teaches us to regard it as a prophetic representation of the pilgrimage of Christ's Church on Earth on her way to her land of promise; it takes the trumpets of the Priests, and blows a prophetic blast against the Jerichoes of this world; and makes us hear, with the ear of faith, the last trump of the heavenly Joshua coming to judge the earth, and leading the armies of Israel to their heavenly inheritance.

The Apocalypse also dwells on a later period of the Jewish History, the captivity of Babylon [2]; it also christianizes that.

The Assyrian Babylon was taken by Cyrus in the hour of its pride and revelry, and of its sacrilegious contempt of God; the waters of its great river Euphrates were drained off, and the besieging armies entered into the city by the dry channel of the stream; and in consequence of the Fall of Babylon, the People of God were delivered, and were restored to their own land.

Here was another prophetic intimation of what the true Israelite might expect to see in the History of the Church.

Many of the Jews returned to Jerusalem after the fall of Babylon, and the Temple was rebuilt. But the Ten Tribes were still scattered abroad. They have not returned to this day. But there is comfort for them in the Apocalypse. The Gospel is preached to all Nations [3]. The true Jerusalem is every where. The Christian Sion is "the Mountain of the Lord's House, which shall be established in the top of the Mountains, and shall be exalted above the Hills, and all Nations shall flow into it; for out of Zion shall go forth the Law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem [4]." That Word, that Law, has gone forth from Sion; it has been carried by the Apostolic Patriarchs of the true Israel unto all Nations. The true Israelite finds a home every where in the true Sion, the Catholic Church of Christ. Therefore, God hath not cast off His People [5], but He has received them to Himself in Christ, the seed of Abraham. Christ crucified stretched His arms on the Cross to all the World. God embraced all nations in His well-beloved Son, Who is the Everlasting Word in the bosom of His Father [6], and vouchsafed to allow the beloved disciple to lean on His bosom at supper, in token of that love with which He is ready to embrace all, especially in His feast of Love.

This love of God for His Ancient people, the Jews, is declared in the Apocalypse of the beloved disciple, even by the tone and structure of its sentences.

The diction of the Book of Revelation is more Hebraistic than that of any other portion of the New Testament. It adopts Hebrew Idioms and Hebrew words [7]. It studiously disregards the laws of Gentile Syntax, and even courts anomalies and solecisms [8]; it christianizes Hebrew words and sentiments, and clothes them in an Evangelical dress, and consecrates them to Christ [9].

Thus, for instance, it never uses the Greek form Hierosolyma, but always employs the Hebrew Hierusalem; and by this name it never designates the literal Sion, but the Christian Church [10]. It rescues the sons of Abraham from narrow, exclusive, rigid, judaizing notions; and teaches them to praise God that He has fulfilled His gracious promise to Abraham, that all nations should be blessed in His Seed, which is Christ [11]. It consoles the true Israelite by the joyful assurance, that although [7] E. g. Abaddon, ix. 11. Armageddon, xvi. 16. Hallelujah, xix. 1. 3, 4. 6. Some Critics have been led by these considerations, to imagine that the Apocalypse was originally written in Hebrew. But such a theory is inconsistent with the character of those to whom it was originally addressed, the Churches of Asia, and with many internal phenomena, e. g. the name of the Beast noted in Greek Letters, xiii. 18. The design of the Apocalypse is not to Hebraize Christianity, but to Christianize Hebraism. Cp. Lücke's valuable remarks in his Einleitung, pp. 440–448.

[8] See below, on i. 4. Cp. i. 5, 6; ii. 20; iii. 12; iv. 1; v. 11, 12; vi. 9; viii. 9; xiv. 12; and Lücke, Einleitung, pp. 448–464.

[9] "Hebraisms (says Bengel, Apparat. Crit. p. 778) pervade this Book; at first they seem rough and strange; but when you have become accustomed to them, you will think them delightful, and worthy of the language of the courts of heaven."

[10] The considerations stated above may suggest a reply to the allegations of those recent writers (Lücke, De Wette, Düsterdieck, and others), who, on the ground of internal discrepancies of style, have denied that the Apocalypse was written by the Evangelist St. John. There is doubtless great difference in the diction of those two writings, and doubtless that difference of style, which arose from the very nature of the difference of subject, was designed for good reasons, some of which are stated above. On the other hand, there are some striking essential resemblances between the Gospel of St. John and the Apocalypse.

This topic has been well treated by Hengstenberg on the Apocalypse, ii. p. 436, and by Dr. Davidson, Introduction iii. pp. 552–592.

[11] Gen. xxii. 18. Gal. iii. 29.

Jerusalem is in ruins, and is trampled by heathen feet, yet he himself may have an enduring mansion, and a glorious inheritance in another Sion, far more magnificent than the earthly City; that he may enjoy peace and happiness under the royal sceptre of Him, "Who has the key of David[1]," and Who is "the Root and Offspring of David[2]," and is the royal "Lion of the Tribe of Judah[3];" and that such glories, as were never seen in the brightest days of the old Jerusalem in the age of Solomon, will be displayed to his eyes by the Prince of Peace, and may be enjoyed by every citizen of the "New Jerusalem, coming down from Heaven adorned as a Bride for her Husband," and espoused in everlasting wedlock to the Lamb of God.

In a similar spirit of genuine Catholicity, expanding the mind, and spiritualizing the language of the Jewish Nation, and investing them with the light of the Gospel, the Apocalypse designates the Universal Church of Christ under the terms of a Hebrew nomenclature by the names "of the Twelve Tribes of Israel[4]." Thus it extends the view of the Hebrew People, and enlarges the walls of Sion and the borders of Palestine till they embrace within their ample range the whole family of mankind, and unites them as a holy people under the universal sway of Christ.

The Apocalypse also elevates the heart and voice of the Hebrew Nation, even to the courts of the Church glorified. Here the Hebrew language sounds in the solemn service of the heavenly Ritual, in which the Angelic quire sing praises to God, Amen, Hallelujah[5]!

It deals in a similar way with Hebrew Prophecy. It does not, indeed, mention any one of the Hebrew Prophets by name. It knows nothing of Isaiah, or Daniel, or Zechariah, as individuals. But almost in every line it breathes their spirit, and almost utters their words. Or rather we may say, that the Holy Spirit, writing here by St. John, repeats the language which had been uttered by Himself many centuries before in the prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and Zechariah, which were read in the Synagogues of the Jews every Sabbath Day[6]. He declares that those words had not become obsolete, that they had lost none of their force and beauty after the destruction of the Temple and City of Jerusalem. On the contrary, they are instinct with new life, and clothed with fresh glory, and are receiving that fulness of accomplishment for which the Ancient Prophets and Kings had yearned, and they are yet to have a wider expansion, a nobler development, and to bring forth fairer fruit unto perfection in the glories of Christ's Kingdom, and in that heavenly City wherein is the Tree of Life watered by the River of Life proceeding from the Throne of God[7].

Thus in reading the Apocalypse, the true Israelite is carried up to a holy mountain where the Law and the Prophets appear in glory with Christ. He ascends a hill of Transfiguration, on which the Hebrew Prophets shine, as Moses and Elias did on the Mount, with more than earthly splendour[8], and do homage to Christ; and he enjoys a vision of that future glory into which the faithful members of the Church of God from the beginning will be admitted by virtue of the merits of that death accomplished at Jerusalem, of which Moses and Elias then spoke[9], and of which all the Prophets wrote, and to which all the Saints looked, even from righteous Abel, whose blood prophesied of Christ.

On the one hand, the Jewish Church was taught by the Apocalypse to look forward to the Gospel as the fulfilment of the Law and the Prophets, and, on the other hand, the Gentile Christian is encouraged to look backward to the Law and the Prophets as his own Teachers; and the Law and Prophets are recognized by both Jew and Gentile, as harmonizing with the Gospel; and Jew

[6] Bp. Andrewes (c. Bellarmine, p. 324) says, "You will hardly find any phrase in St. John's Apocalypse that is not taken from Daniel or from some other Prophet." And Bengel observes (in Rev. i. 3) that "this Book reaches forward from the Old to the New Jerusalem, and is a compendium and consummation of Hebrew Prophecy."

There is a learned dissertation in Dr. F. Lücke's "Einleitung in die Offenbarung" (Bonn, 1852), on "Apocalyptic Literature" (pp. 40—342). Cp. Gieseler, Ch. Hist. § 31. But it seems a precarious assumption to imagine that St. John was indebted for any of the materials of the Apocalypse to Apocryphal sources, such as the Sibylline Books, the Book of Enoch, or the Fourth Book of Ezra. Such a theory would destroy the objective reality of the Visions revealed by God to St. John, and reduce them into mere subjective creations and imaginative inventions of his own mind and that of others.

St. John beheld in the Visions of God things which other holy men before him, such as Ezekiel, Daniel, and Zechariah, had been permitted to see. He was "in the Spirit" (i. 10), and so was enabled to see and hear; and he was commanded to write what he saw and heard (i. 19).

and Gentile are brought together as fellow citizens, to dwell for ever in the "Jerusalem that is above, which is the mother of us all [1]."

This work of universal reconciliation in Christ, which had been exhibited by St. Paul with didactic clearness in his Epistles to the Galatians and to the Romans, is manifested in the Apocalypse with the glowing imagery of divine Prophecy. But it is not to be imagined, that the language of the Apocalypse is therefore less distinct on the doctrinal and practical truths of the Gospel. Indeed the Book of Revelation may be called a divine summary of the Christian Faith.

It teaches that God is One, and alone to be worshipped [2]; that He is the Creator, Preserver, and Governor of all things [3]; that in the One Godhead are three Divine Persons, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit [4]; that the honour due to the Father is to be given to the Son [5]; that the Son of God is perfect Man [6]; that He is the firstborn of the dead, and liveth for ever [7]; and that we are justified by His blood [8]; that He is our Great High Priest and King [9]; and that by virtue of our baptismal incorporation into His mystical body, we rise from the death of sin by the first or spiritual Resurrection, and are made Kings and Priests to God [10]; that if we continue firm and stedfast in the faith unto the end, then Death is not Death to us, but is the Gate of Life [11]; and that they who suffer with Him and for Him do indeed reign with Him, Who is KING of KINGS, and LORD of LORDS, and Who will judge every one according to their works [12], and award to every one either bliss or woe eternal, and will reign for evermore [13].

Such being the character of the Apocalypse, we may now proceed to consider the method in which its prophecies are delivered.

This is an important subject; and the true Exposition of the Apocalypse depends on the right understanding of it.

In modern times, many persons have supposed that the Book of Revelation presents a series of Visions, proceeding onwards in a regular chronological order.

For example, they are of opinion, that all the events which are pre-announced by the Trumpets in the Eighth and Ninth chapters, are later in time than the events foretold by the Seals in the Sixth and Seventh chapters. Many recent Expositions of this Book have been constructed on this principle.

But this theory contravenes all the Expositions of the Apocalypse that have been preserved to us from the earlier ages of Christianity.

The uniform judgment of the ancient Interpreters has been correctly represented in our Authorized Version in the heading of the sixth chapter, where it is said that the Seven Seals contain "a Prophecy to the end of the world."

The Vision of the Seals was thus expounded by all Ancient Interpreters; and a careful examination of the contents of the Seals, especially of the Sixth Seal, will, probably, convince an unprejudiced reader that this view is correct. The language of the Vision of the Sixth Seal can hardly be said to apply to any other circumstances than those of the last age of the world [14].

It was the universal opinion of the Ancient Expositors, that after the opening of the Seven Seals, which reveal the Sufferings of the Christian Church from St. John's age to the end of the world, the Prophecy re-ascends, and returns to the first age of the Gospel, in order to start afresh, and to declare, in the seven Trumpets, the Judgments which would be executed by Almighty God on the Enemies of Christ and His Church.

This view of the Plan of the Apocalypse commends itself by its clearness. And if the principle here enunciated is steadily kept before the reader's eye, and is applied to other portions of this divine book, it will afford a clue to its right interpretation, and will enable him to see the design of the Apocalypse as a systematic and harmonious whole.

This principle of exposition appears also to be confirmed by another consideration.

The Apocalypse is, as has been observed already, a sequel to Hebrew Prophecy. It is the continuation and consummation of the Prophecies of Daniel and Zechariah. It is the Work of the same Divine Author. It may therefore be presumed to have been composed on a plan similar to that of those Prophecies.

Now, if we examine the prophecies of Daniel and Zecariah, we find that they are not progressive prophecies. The predictions and visions in the Book of Daniel are not rivetted together like links in a continuous chain. They form a system of collateral chains, not, indeed, all of equal length.

Or, to adopt another figure, they are like a succession of Charts in a Geographical Atlas.

The first vision in the Book of Daniel represents a prophetic view of all the Four great Empires of the World, following one another in succession, and ending in the comsummation of all things, and in the glorious sovereignty of Christ [1]. It is like the Map of the two Hemispheres which stands first in our books of Geography.

The same Four Empires are afterwards displayed under another form, and are delineated with greater minuteness of detail; and this representation is also closed with a prophetic view of the establishment of Christ's kingdom, and the overthrow of all His enemies [2].

These comprehensive Prophecies are followed by other Visions, displaying, in greater fulness, portions [3] of the same periods as those which had been comprised in those comprehensive Prophecies; just as the Map of the two Hemispheres in an Atlas is followed by separate Maps, on a larger scale, exhibiting the several countries contained in the habitable Globe.

The Prophecies of Zechariah are framed on the same principle. They do not represent a chronological series of events, following in order; but they consist of Visions, many of them contemporaneous with each other.

It might have been anticipated, that the Apocalypse, which was dictated by the same Divine Spirit who inspired the Hebrew Prophets, and Who is a Spirit of order, would be constructed in the same method as those other Prophecies of Daniel and Zechariah, of which it is the sequel and the completion. "As Daniel," says Dr. Lightfoot [4], "gives a general view in his second chapter, of his own times to the coming of Christ, and then handles the same thing in another scheme in the seventh chapter, and then doth express at large and more particularly some of the most material things that he had touched in those particulars, so does St. John in the Apocalypse."

On examination of the Apocalypse, we find our anticipation realized; we find also that, as was already observed, all the ancient Interpreters of the Apocalypse adopted this principle as the groundwork of their expositions [5]; and there is good reason to believe, that the Apocalypse will be better understood, in proportion as this principle is more generally accepted.

The first Visions of the Apocalypse were displayed to the Evangelist on the First Day of the Week, the Day of Creation, the Day of Christ's Resurrection, the Day of the Coming of the Holy Ghost. "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day," says St. John [6]. The prophetic Visions of the Seals and the Trumpets are grouped in the two sets of sevens. They begin as it were with the first day of the week of the Church's existence, when she arose to new life in the Resurrection of Christ; and they proceed through a week of labour and suffering till she comes to the Sabbath of her Rest, and to the glorious Octave of Resurrection to Immortality [7].

The points of approximation, coincidence, and contact of these contemporaneous chains of prophecy will be found to be marked by St. John in the Apocalypse by certain words, which may be called catchwords, which rivet them together at those particular points, and indicate to the reader the place at which he has arrived in the chronological train of the prophecy [8].

Recognizing this principle, derived from ancient Expositors, and from the character of the Apocalypse itself as connected with Hebrew Prophecy, we may proceed to observe, that the Church in the present day enjoys greater advantages for the elucidation of the Apocalypse than were possessed by any previous age.

[5] This principle is thus stated by Victorinus, Bishop of Pettau, and Martyr, who lived in the Third Century, and is the earliest Commentator on the Apocalypse, whose exposition is now extant: "Non aspiciendus est ordo dictorum, quoniam sæpe Spiritus Sanctus, ubi ad novissimi temporis finem percurrerit, rursus ad eadem tempora redit, et supplet ea quæ minus dixit." Victorinus in Apocalyp. vii.

[8] For a specimen, see note on vi. 8.

First, we may here advert with thankfulness to the benefits we enjoy in the collations of ancient Manuscripts of the Apocalypse which were little known to the last century[1]; and in a large collection of critical helps which have given to the text of the Apocalypse a certainty and clearness which it had not for more than a thousand years[2].

The present generation enjoys an inestimable benefit in possessing a correct text of the Apocalypse[3]. In order to a right interpretation of the Apocalypse, the best help is to be found in the Apocalypse itself. S. Augustine has well observed, that this Book is composed in such a manner as to exercise the diligence of the Interpreter; and that by comparison of one passage with another, the obscure parts may be illustrated and made clear[4]. Indeed there is scarcely a phrase or sentence in the Apocalypse, however difficult it may seem to be at first, which may not be elucidated by means of some other phrase or sentence in the same book.

This aid is enhanced by the light derived from the language of Hebrew Prophecy, especially as read in the Septuagint Version of the Old Testament, the Version which was read by the Churches to which St. John wrote. The very words of Daniel and Zechariah, as presented by that Version, reappear in the Apocalypse[5]; and thus the prophecies of the Old and the New Testament stand side by side like the Two Candlesticks[6] in the Apocalyptic Vision, and blend their rays together and illumine the eyes of those who study them by the aid of that united light.

Another great advantage which we enjoy, as compared with earlier ages of the Church, for the right understanding of the Apocalypse, is the exposition afforded by the best Interpreter of prophecy,—TIME.

Time, and Time alone, reconciles the seeming antecedent discrepancies which are characteristics of true Prophecy; its hand unties the prophetic knots, which human sagacity could never loose; it refutes the vain conjectures and rash speculations of Expositors who would make themselves into Prophets; it demolishes and removes what is false, and establishes and perpetuates what is true.

The holy Prophets themselves could not interpret their own prophecies[7]. They were inspired to prophesy; but were not empowered to expound what they prophesied. "No Prophecy is of its own interpretation," says St. Peter[8]. "The Prophets searched diligently, what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify[9]." Prophecy was "a light shining in a dark place[10]." It glimmered faintly at first, like the dim morning twilight, but as it approaches its fulfilment, it becomes more clear, till at length the day dawns, and the future becomes present, and the prophecy is illumined by the event.

The Prophets did indeed preach plainly, that Almighty God will hereafter raise the Dead and judge the World, and reward the righteous with everlasting life. They proclaimed these things in clear language; for these were moral truths which all were concerned to know. But the future actions of Men, and Nations, and Churches, were described by the Prophets in a very different manner from this. They were couched in enigmas, which Time only could solve. They were wrapped in a mantle of obscurity which Time only could take off. And with good reason. For otherwise Divine Prescience might seem to fetter the Human Will; whereas the characteristic property of God's Foreknowledge is, that it foresees every thing, and forces nothing. It leaves

[2] It is no disparagement to the labours of those learned and pious men who framed our AUTHORIZED VERSION to say, that the English Translation of the Apocalypse is capable of considerable improvements. More has been effected by modern Criticism for the Text of the Apocalypse than of any other portion of the New Testament. See below, p. 158.

It is much to be regretted, therefore, that some English Expositions of the Apocalypse should have been based on the English Version of this Book, without careful reference to the Original. Some grave errors,—which need not be specified,—have thus found their way into many vernacular popular Commentaries on this Book, and have been widely disseminated to the great detriment of the Study of Prophecy.

It may also be noticed here, that some important words in the Apocalypse have been received from the English Version, in a sense which, at the present day, affords no adequate notion of their meaning, e. g. beasts for ζῶα, living creatures (iv. 6—9, &c.); λυχνία, candlestick, a word which does not suggest the idea of the infusion of oil, and does not correctly represent the λυχνία of the Temple (Rev. i. 12, 13. 20; ii. 1; xi. 4); φιάλη, vial (v. 8; xv. 7; xvi. 1—4), and other words which will be specified hereafter in the following notes.

[3] It is true that none of the varieties of readings affect any question of Christian doctrine. But as has been well observed by Bengel, "though no Various Reading is of so great importance, that the fundamentals of Christianity depend upon it; yet no Various Reading is of so little importance, that the right-handedness of Apostles ('dexteritas Apostolica') is not to be preferred to the left-handedness of transcribers ('sinisteritas librariorum')."

the liberty of the Human Will untouched. Whatever is foretold by God will be done by man; but nothing will be done by man, because it is foretold by God.

Prophecy has a probationary office; it tries the faith, and excites the vigilance, and exercises the patience, of the faithful who give heed to it. But it does not apply any constraint, it allows itself to be neglected; and, as a penalty for the carelessness or blindness of those persons who neglect or misinterpret it, it often permits them to become witnesses of its truth by fulfilling it [1].

But, if the Interpretation of a Prophecy had been declared at the same time as the Prophecy itself was delivered, then Prophecy would not have had this disciplinarian character, and doctrinal and moral use.

The fulfilment of Prophecy in a manner at variance with previous human expectation constitutes the essence of the proof, that Prophecy is not the work of man, but of God; and it makes Prophecy to be what it is, an invaluable auxiliary to the cause of the Gospel of Christ.

Hence it is clear, that those persons are in error, who look to the Early Fathers of the Church for interpretations of prophecies which were not fulfilled in their age.

Every thing which has happened since their time, is beyond their province, and appertains to those who live now. Indeed, as far as the Interpretation of Prophecy is concerned, the earlier Christian writers, who lived in the childhood of its growth toward fulfilment, were the moderns; and we, who live now, are the ancients. We live in the old age of the world; and may profit by the wisdom which length of days gives. And it is our duty to use the benefits of our vantage-ground, by applying History to interpret Prophecy.

The Ancient Christian Expositors had a correct view of the general design and method of the Apocalypse. But even the inspired ancient Prophets were not Interpreters of Prophecy; and uninspired ancient Expositors were not Prophets. The early Christian Expositors could and did interpret those prophecies which had been fulfilled in their days, and their expositions of those prophecies are of great value.

The fact, that none of the Fathers, who lived before the sixth century, were of opinion that the prophecies of the Apocalypse concerning the struggle of Babylon the Great against Christ, and the overthrow of its power, had been fulfilled in that period, presents a very strong presumptive objection to the theory of those interpreters, who suppose that those prophecies were exhausted in primitive times [2], particularly by the destruction of Jerusalem, and of heathen Rome.

But the early Fathers could not expound unfulfilled Prophecy. And we, who live in later times, should be ungrateful and undutiful to Almighty God, and should be acting very unwisely, if we were to close our eyes to the noonday light which the History of a thousand years has, by the dispensations of His Providence, poured upon the pages of the Apocalypse; and if we were to go back to the vague guesses of those who lived in the dim twilight of fifteen hundred years ago. We should do the Ancient Christian Expositors much wrong, if we did not suppose, that they themselves, if they lived now, would be the first to set us the example of profiting by the light of History, which Almighty God has vouchsafed us for the interpretation of Prophecy.

The Apocalypse is the last work of Divine Prophecy. It is the only Prophetic Book of the New Testament; and it continues and consummates the prophecies of the Old Testament; and its range extends from the first Advent of Christ to His Second Advent, and to the Day of Judgment.

Nearly two thousand years have passed since the Apocalypse was written. It may therefore be anticipated, that diligent study of the History of the Christian Church will throw much light on the prophecies of the Apocalypse; and this anticipation is fully realized by a careful examination of this Divine Book, which, when read by the light of the History of Christendom, is fraught with instruction, encouragement, and warning.

The Apocalypse is a sacred text-book for the devout Christian in the study of Church-History. It is a holy manual of comfort in times of trial, and of guidance in times of difficulty. It is like those Living Creatures, which it describes as "full of eyes [3]." It is gifted with spiritual foresight, and adjusts itself with more than human flexibility, and with ever-living and ever-moving pliancy, to the circumstances of the Church, and supplies prophetic cautions against varying forms of error.

[1] See St. Paul's statement, Acts xiii. 27, "They that dwell at Jerusalem, and their Rulers, because they knew Him not, nor yet the Voices of Prophets, which are read every Sabbath Day, they have fulfilled them in condemning Him. And when they had fulfilled all that was written of Him, they took Him down from the tree, and laid Him in a Sepulchre."

[2] This is the scheme of that class of Interpreters who have been called Præterists, which includes the names of Bossuet, Ewald, Lücke, De Wette, and others. See Lücke's Einleitung, p. 1067, and Davidson's Introduction, p. 618.

[3] Rev. iv. 6. 8.

It is like a holy Oracle, a divine Urim and Thummim, ever uttering a divine voice, and ever showing a Divine light, according to the needs of the Church.

These uses of the Apocalypse are not frustrated or impaired, because there are, and ever will be, many persons, who refuse to recognize the fulfilment of its prophecies in the annals of History.

The fact, that many persons do not acknowledge the fulfilment of prophecies, does not prove that those prophecies have not been fulfilled. We know assuredly, that the prophecies of the Old Testament concerning the Messiah, have been fulfilled in the actions, teaching, and sufferings of Jesus Christ. But the fulfilment of those prophecies is not universally acknowledged; although the evidence of that fulfilment has been open to the world for nearly two thousand years [1]. The Jews themselves, to whom those Prophecies were given, and who heard those Prophecies every week in their Synagogues, did not recognize their accomplishment in Jesus Christ. They themselves "fulfilled them by condemning Him [2]." Some even who are called Christians do not own that fulfilment. Even those prophecies which have been most clearly fulfilled do not exercise much practical influence [3] over a great mass of Mankind. And to Heathen Nations, who make the greater part of Mankind, the fact of their fulfilment is unknown.

The Prophecies also, which relate to the destruction of the Old World by the Flood; and of Sodom and Gomorrha by fire; and of the City of Jerusalem by the Roman armies, have been fully accomplished. Those fulfilments are pledges and warnings of the universal Judgment to come. They therefore concern the eternal interests of all men. And yet they seem to have little effect upon the practice of the world at large.

The fact is, and it is a wonderful fact, but too true, that many men pass their lives in a dream. They do not give due consideration to what it most concerns them to consider. They do "not discern the signs of the times [4]." They do not reflect upon them. They are engrossed with the affairs of this world; absorbed with its cares, and allured by its pleasures. And so their life passes away. They live on and die; and do not apply themselves with an attentive mind, and a teachable spirit to examine the evidence of the case. And it is the nature of Prophecy that it requires such examination. Otherwise, it is like music to the deaf, or pictures to the blind. It is therefore an admirable instrument of moral discipline in God's hands. It proves men, whether they have those moral qualifications of forethought, seriousness, earnestness, patience, docility, meekness, obedience, self-denial, love of God, and perfect submission to His Will, which are requisite for admission into the Kingdom of God.

They who are endued with these gifts and graces, will not be perplexed and staggered by the fact, that many persons, even among those who are eminent in learning, and intellectual ability, but are wanting in the moral qualifications, and spiritual graces, which constitute the Christian character, do not acknowledge the fulfilment of prophecies, which may be proved to have been fulfilled.

Rather they will remember, that those prophecies would not be true, if all persons acknowledged their fulfilment. The Prophets of the Old Testament predicted, that many would not believe their report [5]. That report has not been believed by many persons celebrated for erudition, such as were some of the doctors of the Jews, who were well versed in the letter of those prophecies, and were principally concerned in them; to whom also they were originally delivered, and who heard them recited habitually in their ears, and read them in their native tongue. They did not understand those prophecies; they even fulfilled those prophecies by not believing them; for their unbelief was predicted by those prophecies; they fulfilled them by denying their fulfilment, and by doing those very things which the prophecies predicted they would do. And thus the Incredulity of those who did not believe those prophecies is an argument for the Credibility of those prophecies; and confirms the faith of the Church which receives them, and which believes in Him as the Messiah, of whom those prophecies speak.

In like manner, it has been prophesied in the Apocalypse, that many persons will neglect its warnings, and that they especially, whose sins it describes, will not be brought by them to repent [6].

The Apocalypse has foretold the existence of a great City exercising a dominant sway over many nations [7]; it has predicted, that this City would be smitten with spiritual blindness, and will not believe the report which is uttered by the Holy Spirit in this divine Book; but will fulfil these prophecies by its sins, and by its destruction; and that, even after its destruction, many of its adherents will still despise the warnings of the Apocalypse; and that Nations will rise in rebellion against Christ, and will recklessly rush on to their own ruin, and will fulfil the words of this prophecy which they have despised; and will prove the truth of the Apocalypse by their own utter discomfiture [1].

Therefore in reading the Apocalypse we need not curiously inquire, whether all persons are agreed that its prophecies have been fulfilled, or are now in course of fulfilment. Such an agreement is not to be expected. The Apocalypse would not be true, if all recognized its fulfilment.

But the question to be carefully considered, and calmly examined, is this—whether there is sufficient evidence to satisfy well-instructed, reflecting, and judicious persons, that some of these prophecies of the Apocalypse have been fulfilled, and that others are now in course of fulfilment.

Such an examination, candidly, calmly, and patiently conducted, will probably lead the inquirer to the conviction that this is the case.

But on this proposition it would be premature to dwell here. Rather let us appeal to the Book itself. Let us examine its prophecies, and consider the evidence which will be adduced in the following notes in elucidation of them; and let us rest assured, that, as years pass on, the value of the Apocalypse will be more and more generally acknowledged, and that the truth of its divine words will be more deeply felt by the wise and faithful in heart; "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book [2]."

On the Date of the Apocalypse.

S. Irenæus affirms that the "Revelation was seen not long before his own day, but almost in his own age, at the close of the reign of Domitian [3]."

The Emperor Domitian died on the 18th day of September, A.D. 96.

The common era Anno Domini begins about four years too late [4], and therefore the date of the Apocalypse is about the one hundreth year after the birth of Christ.

The authority of S. Irenæus, who was probably an Asiatic by birth, and who had conversed with S. Polycarp, the scholar of St. John, seems almost sufficient of itself to determine this question of date. It is also confirmed by other evidences.

S. Irenæus states that the Revelation was seen at about the close of the reign of Domitian. We learn from Tertullian, contemporary with Irenæus, that Domitian persecuted the Christian Church. Nero, he says, was the first Emperor who used the sword against the Church, and the next who imitated him was Domitian [5]. Eusebius relates that some of the Christians were banished by that Emperor, and confined as prisoners in a small island [6] off the coast of Etruria; and then he proceeds to relate that St. John was banished to the Isle of Patmos by Domitian. St. John describes himself as a companion of the Asiatic Churches in tribulation, and as having been brought [7] to the Isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God and for the testimony of Jesus Christ [8].

He also refers in the Apocalypse to persecutions of Christians, especially of Antipas, who had been slain as a Martyr for Christ at Pergamos [9], one of the Seven Churches of Asia.

This reference confirms the testimony of Irenæus. As was before said, no Roman Emperor except Nero had persecuted the Church of Christ before the reign of Domitian. And there is no evidence that any Christian suffered death under Nero, except at Rome [10].

It is much more probable, that, as ancient writers affirm [11], Antipas was martyred at Pergamos in the age of Domitian.

The testimony of Irenæus on the date of the Apocalypse is confirmed by writers in the age next to his. Clement of Alexandria says that, "After the death of the tyrant, John went from the Island of Patmos to Ephesus[1];" and he also says "that John remained with the Presbyters of Asia to the times of Trajan."

This statement harmonizes with the assertion of Irenæus, that the Revelation was seen by St. John at the end of the reign of Domitian, who was succeeded by Nerva, the predecessor of Trajan.

Origen, the scholar of Clement, observes that, in accordance with the prophecy of Christ, both the Sons of Zebedee, James and John, drank His cup of suffering; for "Herod," he says, "killed James, the brother of John, with the sword[2];" and the King of the Romans, as tradition informs us, condemned John, when bearing witness as a Martyr, to the Isle of Patmos, on account of the word of Truth: and John himself informs us concerning his own martyrdom, not telling us who it was that condemned him, but using these words in his Apocalypse, "I, John, your brother and fellow-companion in the tribulation and kingdom and patience in Jesus, became a sojourner in the island that is called Patmos on account of the word of God[3]."

Victorinus, Bishop of Pettau in Pannonia, who wrote a commentary on the Apocalypse at the close of the third century, and suffered as a martyr in A. D. 303, affirms in that commentary, that when John saw the Apocalypse he was in the island of Patmos, being condemned by Domitian Cæsar to the mines there; and that when John, on account of his old age, supposed he would have a release by death, Domitian was slain, and his decrees were rescinded, and John was liberated from the mines[4].

After him Eusebius relates as a fact commonly believed in his age, that St. John was condemned under Domitian to the island of Patmos on account of his testimony to the divine word[5], and that he there saw the Apocalypse in the 14th year of the reign of Domitian[6], that is, in A. D. 95.

After him S. Jerome, at the close of the fourth century, says, that "John wrote the Apocalypse in the island of Patmos, to which he was relegated in the 14th year of the Emperor Domitian, who was the second Roman Emperor that persecuted the Christians, Nero being the first[7]."

Thus then we find a consistent and uniform series of testimonies from S. Irenæus to S. Jerome —that is, from about A. D. 170 to A. D. 390—affirming that the Apocalypse was written by St. John in the Isle of Patmos about A. D. 95 of the common era.

The only evidence of any weight which may be adduced in opposition to these conclusions is that of Epiphanius, who died A. D. 403.

In his work on Heretics[8] he says that "St. John in the Apocalypse, writing to the Seven Churches of Asia, predicts the rise of Heresies which did not then exist, and foretells that a woman would appear at Thyatira who would call herself a prophetess[9]; and he adds that these things came to pass long after the death of John, inasmuch as he prophesied in the times of Claudius Cæsar, when he was at Patmos."

If this passage is genuine, and the text is not corrupt, it may be said without presumption, that through human infirmity, from which the most learned men are not exempt, the memory and judgment of the Author failed him when he wrote it.

This appears from the following considerations:

In speaking to the Angel of the Church of Thyatira, St. John is not censuring him for errors and corruptions which would prevail after his time, and for which he would not be responsible; but he is reproving the Angel, or Chief Pastor, for abuses which actually existed there under his government, and which he ought to have corrected.

Besides, if St. John had written, as Epiphanius supposed, in the days of Claudius, he could not have described himself as suffering exile at Patmos "for the Word of God," for no such punishment was inflicted by the Roman Power on Christians in the days of Claudius, or till the time of Nero[10]; nor could he have then referred to the days in which Antipas was slain at Pergamos, as a faithful martyr for the Truth[11]. Nor would he then have censured the Angel of Ephesus for having lost "his first love[1];" for, in the days of Claudius, the Church of Ephesus was flourishing in the fresh spring-time of the Gospel, which it had just received from St. Paul.

Under these circumstances we may almost feel disposed to think that there is some error in our present copies of this passage of Epiphanius, and that it was hardly possible for him to have written—at least to have written deliberately—that the Apocalypse was composed in the times of Claudius[2].

However this may be, certain it is that this opinion of Epiphanius—if it were really his—never gained ground in the Church; and that the general belief of all the best ancient writers of Christendom was the same as Irenæus had expressed in the century in which St. John died, that he wrote the Revelation at the close of the reign of the Emperor Domitian[3].

This opinion is strongly confirmed by the internal evidence of the Apocalypse itself.

The Epistles in it to the Seven Churches of Asia betoken a condition of things later than St. Paul's age; and similar to that which we know from other sources to have prevailed in Asia, at the close of the first century of the Christian era.

In these seven Epistles we see Churches settled with Angels or Chief Pastors at their head; we see that some years have elapsed since they were planted; that time has passed away, in which they have been tried, and some have stood the trial, as Smyrna[4] and Philadelphia[5]; that some of them have declined from their primitive standard, as Ephesus, under fear of persecution, or through worldliness and lukewarmness, as Laodicea[6]; that others have a name to live and are dead, as Sardis[7]; and that heresies have grown up among them, as at Thyatira[8]; and that they have been visited by forms of heretical pravity and moral libertinism, such as the doctrines and practice of the Nicolaitans and Judaizers[9], which were the scourges of the Asiatic Churches at that time.

Such being the case, the received opinion of Ancient Christendom will not easily be disturbed by that spirit of scepticism which has unhappily shown itself in some quarters in recent times[10]; and which has however over-reached itself. It is not content with rejecting the date assigned to the Apocalypse by ancient testimony, but has proceeded to set itself against the universal consent of ancient Christendom, and to deny that the Author of the Book of Revelation was the Evangelist St. John.

These two theories will probably soon share the same fate, even in that country which gave them birth. They have already been encountered there with learning and ability[11], and their unsoundness has been exposed, and the ancient consent of Christendom has been vindicated.

We may therefore hold fast the belief, that the Book of Revelation was written at the close of the reign of Domitian, who died in the year of our Lord 96.

On the Authorship of the Apocalypse.

In order to establish the Genuineness of the Apocalypse, it will be sufficient to refer to the testimony of the next age after it was written, and especially of that Country to which it was originally sent.

[1] ii. 4.

[2] We may almost be inclined to think, that, instead of ἐπὶ ΚΛΑΤΔΙΟΥ, he may have written ἐπὶ ΦΛΑΒΙΟΥ, and that the copyist did not remember that the Emperor Domitian was sometimes called Flavius; as he is by Juvenal, iv. 37:

> "Cum jam semianimum laceraret Flavius orbem > Ultimus, et calvo serviret Roma Neroni."

This passage also will remind the reader that Domitian was also called Nero, and it may serve to explain what is said by some other still later writers, that St. John was banished by Nero, which is another name for Domitian.

The argument which has been derived for a later date of the Apocalypse than Domitian's reign, from the words of the Apocalypse itself (xvii. 10): "And they are Seven Kings; Five are fallen, and One is, and the other is not yet come," will be examined in the note on that text.

[3] Thus Primasius, Bishop of Adrumetum in Africa, in the 6th century, in his Commentary on the Apocalypse (Bibl. Patr. Max. x. p. 289, or in Migne, Patrologia, lxviii. p. 796), says, "Hæc videre promeruit in Patmo Insulâ pro Christo à Domitiano Cæsare exilio missus." And so Bede in Rev. i. 9, speaks of this opinion as generally received in his day: "Historia nota, Joannem à Domitiano Cæsare propter Evangelium in hanc insulam relegatum; cui tunc congrueret cœli penetrare, cùm certa terrarum spatia nequiret excidere." All antiquity (says Lampe, Prolog. ad Joann. 61, 62) agrees in this, that St. John was banished by Domitian. [10] Especially among the followers of Dr. Friedrich Lücke, whose work on the Apocalypse, "Versuch einer vollständigen Einleitung in die Offenbarung, Zweyte Auflage, Bonn, 1852," has exhausted all that can be said on that side of the question.

The edition of Dr. F. Düsterdieck (Gottingen, 1859), which proceeds on a principle of opposition to primitive uniform tradition on the subject, honestly recognizes that tradition as primitive and uniform, and pays a due tribute to its importance, and so virtually commends it to the reader's acceptance. Einleitung, p. 90.

The first witness here is Papias, Bishop of Hierapolis, a city at a few miles distance from Laodicea, one of the Seven Churches. He was a disciple of St. John, and in a certain sense a colleague of the Seven Angels whom the author of the Apocalypse addressed. He was very diligent in collecting memorable facts concerning the Apostles and their works: and he received the Apocalypse as the work of the Evangelist St. John [1].

His testimony is of greater value, on account of his nearness to Laodicea; for the Church of Laodicea could not have been ignorant of the authorship of a book addressed to itself; and if the Apocalypse had not been the work of St. John, we cannot imagine that the Laodiceans would have allowed such an unfavourable character of their Church, as is given in the Apocalypse, to be circulated throughout Christendom, in the name and with the authority of St. John. If the Apocalypse had been a forgery, they must have known it to be so; and knowing it so to be, they would have exposed it to the world.

This observation applies to others of the Seven Churches, who are addressed in similar terms of rebuke: and it adds weight to the facts, first, that there is a considerable amount of primitive testimony from the Seven Churches, assigning the Apocalypse to St. John; and that there is none from that quarter which ascribes it to any one else.

The next testimony is that of Justin Martyr. About the middle of the second century he came to the city of Ephesus, where he held a two days' conference with Trypho, one of the most learned Jews of his day. In the narrative which he published of this dialogue, Justin Martyr quotes the Apocalypse, and affirms that it is written by one of the Apostles of Christ, whose name is John [2].

This assertion was made only about half a century after the death of St. John, and it was made at Ephesus, the mother city of Asia, the principal of the Seven Churches, the city in which St. John passed a great part of his life, in which he died, and was buried [3]. This testimony, therefore, of Justin Martyr is of great value, and confirms the belief, that St. John was the Author of the Apocalypse.

We next come to Melito. He was Bishop of one of the Seven Churches, Sardis, in the second century; a successor, therefore, of one of the Seven Angels addressed in the Apocalypse. The witness of Sardis and its Bishop cannot be suspected of partiality; for Sardis, again, is one of the Churches which is rebuked with great severity in the Apocalypse. Thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead [4]. And the character of Melito stands pre-eminently high both for piety and learning. He showed a laudable zeal with regard to the Canon of the Old Testament. In order to assure himself and the Church of Sardis concerning the Books of the Ancient Scriptures, as received by the Churches of Palestine, he visited that country in person, and he has given the result of his critical inquiries in an interesting and valuable Epistle [5]. And it cannot be supposed that he who was so diligent and circumspect in his inquiries concerning the Old Testament, would have been less careful respecting the New, and especially concerning that Book of the New Testament, the Apocalypse, which contains an address to his own Predecessor, and to his own Church; and to which, on other grounds, his best consideration must have been given, for he wrote a Commentary upon the Apocalypse [6].

The evidence, therefore, of Melito is important. He also received the Apocalypse as the work of St. John.

The latest witness to whom we shall appeal is S. Irenæus. He was probably a native of Asia Minor, whence he migrated to France, where he became Bishop of Lyons toward the close of the second century. In his youth he had been acquainted with S. Polycarp, who was placed in the see of Smyrna by the Apostles, and, as some affirm, by St. John himself [7]; and is supposed by some learned men [8] to be no other than the Angel of the Church of Smyrna, who is addressed in the Apocalypse.

In his work against Heresies, published only about ten years after S. Polycarp's martyrdom, S. Irenæus refers to the Apocalypse [9]. He mentions ancient Manuscripts of it, which he had examined; and he speaks of a particular reading[1] of a passage[2] in the Apocalypse (that concerning the number of the Beast), as being confirmed by the authority of those "who had seen St. John face to face." In this work he quotes the Apocalypse no less than twenty times; he makes long extracts from it; and speaks of it unhesitatingly as inspired Scripture, and as the work of St. John.

The testimony of S. Irenæus is of more value, because it was probably derived from Asiatic Bishops; for example, from Papias, whom he mentions; and from S. Polycarp[3], whose life, like that of his Master, St. John, seems to have been providentially prolonged to almost a patriarchal duration, in order that he might be a witness of the living Voice of Apostolic Teaching, till the Written Word was generally diffused.

Such, then, is the testimony from the country[4] to which the Apocalypse was originally sent; such is the witness of the Asiatic Churches to which it was addressed. No evidence of a contrary kind can be adduced from those Churches, and from that age.

No doubt was entertained by the Apocalyptic Churches concerning the inspiration and genuineness of the Apocalypse. On the contrary, those were condemned as holding heretical opinions, the Alogi, for instance, of the second century, who denied the Apocalypse to be St. John's[5]. "We can appeal," says Tertullian, at the close of the second century, "to the Churches which are the foster-children of St. John; for though Marcion, the heretic, rejects his Apocalypse, yet the series of the Asiatic Bishops derives its origin from St. John[6]." All the Apocalyptic Churches ascribe the Apocalypse to St. John.

Let us consider now the facts before us.

A Writing, claiming to be from Heaven, dictated in solemn and sublime language, predicting future events, presenting, as it were, a series of pictures of the World's History to the end of Time, is sent to Seven Apostolic Churches of the most distinguished Cities of Asia: to Ephesus, the rich emporium of the East; to Smyrna, the nurse of Poets; and to Sardis, the ancient residence of Kings. It purports to come from an exile on the barren rock of Patmos, an isle almost within sight of Ephesus, and therefore accessible to those to whom the book is sent. It speaks in the voice of authority to those Churches, and to their spiritual Rulers; it pronounces judicial sentence upon them; it rebukes their failings, and commends their virtues; it promises blessings to those who receive the words of its prophecy, and denounces eternal woe on all who add to, or take away from, it. It speaks to men as being itself from God.

And what is the result?

This Book—with these claims, reproofs, promises, and threats—is received by all these Churches as the WORD of GOD; and is ascribed by them to the beloved Disciple, the blessed Apostle and Evangelist, St. John.

Such is their testimony; and they could not have been deceived in this matter. St. John was no stranger to them. He lived and died among them. If then the Apocalypse is not from God, and if it is not the work of St. John, it cannot be imagined that the Apostolic Churches of Asia would have conspired to receive it. Their duty, both to God and to the Apostle, required them not to do so. So far from receiving it, the Angels of these Churches, with one voice, would have protested against it. Not only they would not have recognized it as divine, not only they would not have received it as the work of St. John, but they would have condemned it as falsely ascribed to the Apostle, and impiously laying claim to the incommunicable attributes of God. It would have taken a place among those spurious Revelations which were ascribed by heretics to Peter, Paul, and Thomas; and the World would have heard no more of the APOCALYPSE of ST. JOHN.

If now we open the Book itself, every thing there harmonizes with this belief[7].

The Author calls himself John. "I, John, who am also your brother, and companion in [4] Mr. I. C. Knight, in pp. 12—15 of an ingenious Essay on the Apocalypse (Lond. 1842), has shown reason for believing, that S. Ignatius, in Epist. ad Philad. 6, imitated the words in Rev. iii. 12.

[7] Some remarks have already been offered above on the objections derived from the difference of style between the Apocalypse and St. John's Gospel (Euseb. vii. 25). This question has been well discussed by Guerike, Einleitung in das N. T. § 60, p. 555. And, after all, the subject of the Apocalypse is so different from that of the Gospel, that arguments from style are scarcely admissible here. No one would argue from the Satires of Horace that he did not write the Odes. And yet how different is the style! What has been said above on the difference of style between St. Peter's two Epistles (pp. 71—77), may be applied, mutatis mutandis, here. Cp. above, p. 145, note.

tribulation[1]." "John to the Seven Churches which are in Asia[2]." "I John saw these things, and heard them[3]." Whom would this name suggest, placed thus by itself, without any epithet or accompaniment? Whom but the Apostle and Evangelist, St. John? He, and he alone, was John; their brother, their pastor, and their guide: and no one else in his age, writing to St. John's own Churches, would have ventured to assume the name of John, in this bold and unqualified simplicity.

Again; the Author writes from the isle of Patmos, where he was, "for the testimony of the Lord Jesus;" and we know that St. John was banished to that island by the Emperor Domitian, when he persecuted the Church[4].

It may be asked, perhaps, Why then does he not call himself an Apostle? We may ask, in reply, Why does not St. John himself, in his Epistles? Why does not St. James? Why does not St. Jude? The name John would suffice to identify him; and, by withholding the title of Apostle, and calling himself only a servant of God, and their brother in tribulations, he would show, that though he had "the gift of prophecy, and was permitted to understand all mysteries, and to speak with the tongue of Angels[5]," yet he was not elated above measure "by the abundance of his Revelations[6];" and the more he was exalted by God, the more he would humble himself with men. "The secret of the Lord is among them that fear him[7];" "and mysteries are revealed to the meek[8]."

Further; the Author of the Apocalypse, modest as he is in the description of himself, speaks, as we have seen, to the Angels of Asia with all authority: he distributes praise and blame like a Ruler and a Judge. Now, there was only one person then alive in the whole world who was entitled to use this language; and that one person was not only entitled to use it, by his double character as the last surviving Apostle, and as Metropolitan of Asia, but he was most solemnly bound to use it. By reason of his office, he was obliged, in duty to CHRIST, Who called him to it, to "speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority[9]." He was bound to be no respecter of persons; to "be instant in season, out of season; to reprove, rebuke, exhort[10]." This person was ST. JOHN.

Again; we find that the Author of the Apocalypse, who writes to the Seven Angels, or Bishops, gives them an Apostolic Benediction,—The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you[11]. "And without all contradiction," says the Apostle, "the less is blessed of the better," or greater[12]. Therefore we may infer that the writer of the Apocalypse is some one greater than the Bishops of Asia. He is some one entitled to bless them. Now, there was one person in the world, and one alone, who, in a spiritual sense, was greater than the Bishops of Asia, and so was entitled to bless them, and might justly be expected to do so; and that person was ST. JOHN.

Lastly; the Catholic Church from primitive times, which is the Body of Christ, and to which He has promised His Spirit and His presence[13], receives the Apocalypse as Canonical Scripture and as the work of St. John[14]. Her testimony is the testimony of Christ, Who is present with her; it is the testimony of the Holy Spirit, Whom Christ sent to be in her[15].

There was a remarkable fitness in the selection of St. John, particularly of St. John at Patmos, for writing the Apocalypse.

He was the beloved disciple; he had been with our Lord in His Agony and on the Cross; his brother Apostles had now been removed by death; and he was left, aged, an exile, and a prisoner, in a lonely island, for the testimony of the Truth in Christ.

As the winds blew, and the waves dashed on the rocky shores of Patmos, so the winds and waves of persecution were now beating on the Church. But the aged Apostle, who was confined within the narrow limits of Patmos, was admitted in the glorious visions of the Apocalypse to the presence of God. The Exile of earth became a Citizen of heaven; the cliffs of Patmos appeared more beautiful than Paradise. He was "in the Spirit on the Lord's Day." The Man of sorrows, Whom St. John had once seen crowned with thorns before Pilate, and bleeding on the Cross at Calvary, was now seen reigning in heaven adored by myriads of Angels, and coming on the clouds of heaven to judge the Quick and Dead.

This is very appropriate; it harmonizes well with the tender care of Christ for those who love

Him, and suffer for Him. It is expressive of His love for His Church, left a widow for a while in this world. When on the Cross, He committed His Mother to St. John's care. By St. John, He reveals to His Church the future glory which will be hers, when she will be reunited to Him, and be the Bride in heaven.

Here, therefore, is a source of comfort to all Christians. Here on earth we are exiles; we are in Patmos. Especially, in these latter days, the heavens are dark; the sea is high; the waves dash upon the rock: "the floods are risen, O Lord; the floods have lift up their voice[1]." This is an age of storms. The beach is strewn with wrecks. Yet in the gloom of this world, in this solitude and exile, we may have inward peace, and light and hope and joy. Loving Christ with St. John, suffering for Christ with him, we, like St. John, shall be visited by Christ. St. John's vision will be ours. His Revelation will be ours. Our Patmos will be Paradise. And we may pass from the storms of earth to the sunshine of heaven; and from the solitude of our worldly banishment to the mansions of our Father's House.

On the Text of the Apocalypse.

THE History of the Original Greek Text of the APOCALYPSE is very remarkable.

Erasmus, its first Editor after the invention of printing, had only one MS., and that an imperfect one, of the Apocalypse. He supplied the last six verses, which were wanting in that MS. from the Latin Vulgate, translated by himself into Greek; and some words of Erasmus, not authorized by any MS., still remain in some editions of the Apocalypse printed at this day[2].

The second edition of the New Testament was that of the Complutensian Polyglott, so called from Complutum, or Alcalà in Spain, the place at which it was printed. This was in the year 1520. The Complutensian Editors, says Wetstein[3], had only one MS. of the Apocalypse. They were followed in the Apocalypse by Erasmus in his fourth and fifth editions in 1527 and 1535, and by Robert Stephens in the year 1546, and again in 1549, 1550, and 1551. Wetstein[4] affirms that Robert Stephens had only two MSS. of the Apocalypse, and that these were not accurately collated. The third edition of Stephens formed the basis of those of Theodore Beza, which appeared at Geneva in 1565, 1576, 1589, 1598, and also of the Elzevir edition, or received text, as it is commonly called, published at Leyden in 1624.

Beza's edition of 1598 was the groundwork of the English AUTHORIZED VERSION of the New Testament, published in 1611, and "appointed to be read in Churches."

Here two remarks may be made. The ENGLISH AUTHORIZED TRANSLATION of the APOCALYPSE does not rest upon the same sound foundation of MS. authority as the Authorized Translation of the other books of the New Testament. It stands in a place by itself, and ought to be regarded accordingly[5].

No one need be startled by this statement. If the Apocalypse now existed only in the single MS. of Erasmus, no article of Christian Doctrine would be in the least degree different from what it is. The numerous MSS. of the Apocalypse which have been collated since it was first printed, have not affected any doctrine of Christianity; but they have placed the received Articles of the Faith on a more solid basis.

In the interval of time which has elapsed between the publication of the Authorized Version and the present day, much has been effected for the confirmation and establishment of the Original Text of the Apocalypse by the labours of Bishop Fell, Dr. John Mill, Bentley, Wetstein, Bengel, Matthæi[6], Alter[7], Birch[8], Woide, Griesbach[9], Scholz[10], Ford[11], Barrett[12], Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles[13], Scrivener, and Mai[14]; and little now remains but to use diligently and faithfully the materials collected by them.

Their attention has been devoted mainly to the critical examination of Manuscripts; and it is due to them that at this time, nearly a hundred MSS. of the Apocalypse have been collated, some of which are of great antiquity and value.

Of these the three most ancient are,

A. The Alexandrine, in the British Museum, probably of the fourth century. A fac-simile of it was published by Woide in 1786, a magnificent work, reflecting great honour upon the Editor, and on those who generously assisted him. See above, on the Gospels, p. xxxiv, new edit.

B. The Basilian, in the Vatican at Rome, No. 2066; of the sixth or seventh century. A transcript of it was published by Tischendorf, in 1846; and another has been published at Rome, as a Supplement to Mai's edition of the Codex Vaticanus, No. 1209.

This Basilian MS. is not to be confounded with Codex B, in the Vatican, No. 1209, containing other portions of the Greek Testament, but not comprising the Apocalypse. See above, on the Gospels, p. xxxiv.

C. The Palimpsest MS. of S. Ephraim the Syrian; so called from its having certain works of S. Ephraim written over the Greek Testament; probably of the fourth century. A transcript was published by Tischendorf in 1843.

By the goodness of Divine Providence these three invaluable MSS. containing the Book of Revelation have been preserved to our own age, and have been made generally accessible at this day by means of transcripts. In this respect we of the present generation enjoy a privilege which was not granted to our forefathers, the ENGLISH TRANSLATORS, nor indeed to any of our predecessors. This circumstance will appear the more striking, when we recollect that one of these three Ancient Manuscripts, the Ephraim Palimpsest, which, about a century ago, was almost illegible[1], has now, within the last few years, been restored, as it were, to life by a chemical process, so that the reading of nearly every letter of it has been ascertained[2].

Notice of some ancient Commentators on the Apocalypse, whose Works are extant[3].

I. Victorinus, Bishop of Petabium, or Petavium, Pettau, in Pannonia, circ. A. D. 270 (Cave, i. p. 147[4]). He is said to have suffered martyrdom in the Diocletian persecution, A. D. 303. The "Commentarius in Apocalypsim," ascribed to Victorinus, printed in Bibliotheca Patrum Maxima, iii. p. 414—421, and in a shorter form, entitled "Scholia in Apocalypsim," in Biblioth. Patrum Gallandii, iv. p. 52—65, whence it has been recently republished by the Abbé Migne. Patrologia, v. p. 318—348. The work of Victorinus was revised and modified by S. Jerome (see Ambros. Ansbert. in Bibl. P. Maxima, xiii. p. 404).

II. Auctor Anonymus, apud S. Augustinum, tom. iii. pp. 3106—3159, ed. Paris, 1837. This Exposition on the Apocalypse, which is very valuable, is in the form of Homilies or Sermons preached in the Church. It will be designated by Aug. ? in the following notes; see on ii. 1.

It has been ascribed by some to Tichonius, the celebrated Donatist Expositor, contemporary with S. Augustine, circ. A.D. 390. (Cave, i. p. 285.) Tichonius is known to have composed an exegetical work on the Apocalypse (see Bede's Commentary, passim[5]), and it is probable that these Homilies contain considerable portions of that treatise, adapted to the use of the Church.

III. Primasius, Bishop of Adrumetum in Africa, flourished A.D. 550. His "Commentarius in Apocalypsim" is contained in Bibl. Patrum Maxima, x. pp. 287—340, and has been published by the Abbé Migne in his Patrologia, tom. lxviii. pp. 794—956.

IV. Cassiodorus Aurelius Magnus, "Senator Romanus, deinde Monachus Vivariensis in Calabria." (See Cave, Hist. Lit. i. p. 501.) He wrote his work, "De Divinis Lectionibus," circ. A.D. 556. His "Complexiones in Apocalypsim" were published at Rotterdam, 1723, 12mo. pp. 213—243, and are inserted in the Abbé Migne's Patrologia, tom. lxxx. pp. 1406—1418. Cassiodorus, in p. 9 of his work De Divinis Lectionibus, speaks of Primasius as his own contemporary, and refers to his work on the Apocalypse.

[1] It is described as such by Montfaucon, in the year 1708. Palæogr. Gr. p. 213. Wetstein says (in a letter to Bentley, 29 July, 1716), that it cost him two hours to read a page. Bentley's Correspondence, p. 510. Cp. p. 519.

"Cujus quidem auctoris et nos in hoc opere sensum secuti, nonnulla quæ extrinsecus posuit, breviandi causâ, omisimus."

V. Andreas, Archbishop of Crete, supposed by some to have been afterwards Bishop of Cæsarea, in Cappadocia [1], probably in the sixth or seventh century. (Cave, i. p. 467. Fabric, Bibl. Gr. viii. 696, xi. p. 62, ed. Harles.) His Commentary on the Apocalypse is printed in Morell's edition of S. Chrysostom, tom. viii., and a Latin translation of it in Bibl. Patr. Max. tom. v. pp. 589—633. We may here mention the two other Greek Expositors, who derive their materials mainly from Andreas, Arethas, and Œcumenius.

VI. Arethas, Bishop of Cæsarea, in Cappadocia, in the tenth century. (Fabric, Bibl. Græc. viii. p. 698, ed. Harles. Cave, i. p. 520, in Œcumenii opera, ed. Paris, pp. 640—837, A.D. 1631.) A Latin translation of his Exposition is found in Bibl. P. Max. ix. pp. 741—791.

VII. Œcumenius, Bishop of Tricca, in Thessaly, probably in the tenth century. (Cave, ii. p. 112. Fabric. Bibl. Gr. viii. p. 692.)

Much has been effected recently towards an improved edition of these two Expositors by the late lamented Dr. Cramer, in his publication "Œcumenii et Arethæ in Apocalypsim," Oxonii, 1840. "Nobis," says he in his Preface, "plenissimum forsan Antiquorum Græcorum Patrum Commentarium, qui extat, in Apocalypsim, licuit vulgare." The learned Editor has printed new Scholia of Œcumenius, and has added to those already published of Arethas. The Exposition of Œcumenius commences at p. 497 and ends at p. 582 of Dr. Cramer's volume.

VIII. Beda Venerabilis; born near the mouth of the Tyne, in the county of Durham, A.D. 672, died A.D. 735. (Cave, i. p. 612.) Explanatio Apocalypsis in tom. xii. pp. 337—452 of Bedæ Opera, Lond. 1844. A valuable and interesting Exposition.

IX. Ambrosius Ansbertus, Gallus Presbyter (obiit A.D. 778), in S. Joannis Apocalypsim libri x. ad sanctissimum in Christo Patrem ac Dominum D. Stephanum Divinâ Gratiâ Papam; ed. princ. Col. 1536, fol. p. 442. Bibl. P. Max. xiii. pp. 403—639. (Cave, i. p. 631.)

X. Berengaudus, Monachus Benedictinus, circ. A.D. 800. Expositio super vii. Visiones Apocalypseos, inter S. Ambrosii Opera, ed. Bened. tom. ii. pt. ii. pp. 499—589.

XI. Haymo, "Episcopus Halberstattensis, Alcuini discipulus," obiit A.D. 853; an excellent Expositor. Commentariorum in Apocalypsim Beati Joannis libri vii. jam primum in lucem editi, et ad multorum scriptorum Codicum fidem castigati, Coloniæ, 1531, 12mo. (Cave, ii. p. 28.) Commentaries on the Apocalypse were written by Alcuin and Rabanus Maurus (Trithem, 251. 267), contemporaries of Haymo, but are not now extant.

XII. Anselmus Laudunensis (Laon, in Picardy) Benedictinus, Petri Abælardi magister; fl. A.D. 1103. In Apocalypsim Enarrationes, Coloniæ, 1612, inter Anselmi Cantuariensis Opera, ii. p. 471, sqq. (Cave, ii. p. 187.)

XIII. Bruno, Abbas Monte-Cassinas, ob. 1125. (Cave, ii. p. 158.) Commentarius in Apocalypsim Opera, Venet. 1651. 2 tom. fol.

XIV. Rupertus Tuitensis (propè Coloniam Agrippinæ), ob. 1135. Comment. in Apocalypsim, lib. xii. ad Fridericum, Archiepiscopum Coloniensem, Colon. 1541, p. cxcv; Noriberg, 1526, ed. Paris, ii. p. 450, sqq. (Cave, ii. p. 193.)

XV. Anselmus, Episcopus Havilbergensis, de Sigillis Apocalypticis scripsit, A.D. 1145. (Cave, ii. p. 224.) Some further account of this important treatise has been given, and some extracts from it have been printed, by the present writer in his Edition of the Greek Text of the Apocalypse, London, 1849, Appendix B.

XVI. Ricardus de Sancto Victore, propè Parisios, "natione Scotus, S. Bernardi familiaris," obiit 1173. In Apocalypsim S. Joannis libri vii. (Cave, ii. p. 228.) Opera, Rothomagi, 1650. 2 tom. folio.

XVII. Joachimus, Calaber, Abbas Florensis sive de Flore, fl. A.D. 1200. (Cave, ii. p. 278.) His work on the Apocalypse was first published with the following title:—

"Expositio magni Prophetæ Abbatis Joachim in Apocalypsim: Opus illud celebre; Aurea, ac præ ceteris longè altior et profundior Explanatio in Apocalypsim Abbatis Joachim de statu Universali Reipublicæ Christianæ, deque Ecclesiâ Carnali in proximo reformandâ, atque in primævam sui ætatem redigendâ; triplici priùs tamen percutiendâ flagello, moxque omnium Infidelium ad Christi fidem conversione; jam multis sepulta sæculis, sed adimplenda tempore instante ad utilitatem et consolationem fidelium nutu divino detecta atque reserata in lucem primo venit," Venetiis, 1527, 4to.

[1] Andreas of Crete was probably a different person from Andreas of Cappadocia. In the MSS. the Commentary on the Apocalypse is attributed, sometimes to the one, sometimes to the other. Arethas assigns it to his predecessor in the See of Cappadocia.

The date of Joachim's prefatory Epistle is printed "Floris. anno Dominicæ Incarnationis MC." It ought to be MCC.

A further account of Joachim's expositions of the Apocalyptic prophecies is given in Appendix C of the present Editor's volume above quoted, Lond. 1849; and Gieseler, Eccl. Hist. § 70.

XVIII. Thomas Aquinas, nat. 1224, ob. 1274. Thomæ Aquinatis in B. Joannis Apocalypsim Expositio nunc primum è tenebris eruta, Florentiæ, 1549, 12mo. p. 654. The preface speaks of it unhesitatingly as the work of Aquinas. Cave (ii. p. 306) denies the genuineness of this exposition, and conjectures that it was written by Thomas Anglicus, the monk of Ely, of the twelfth century.

XIX. Joannes Petrus Olivi, a Franciscan, of Languedoc, ob. 1297. Postilla in Apocalypsim. For a further account of Peter Olivi, and of his memorable labours on the Apocalypse, see Gieseler, Eccl. Hist. § 70, and Appendix D of the present Editor's Greek Text of the Apocalypse. Lond. 1849.

XX. Albertus Magnus, Provincial of the Dominicans, Master of Aquinas, Bishop of Ratisbon, died at Cologne, A.D. 1280. (Cave, ii. p. 311.) Commentarii in Apocalypsim. Basil, 1506.

XXI. Petrus Aureolus, sive Petrus de Verberia, Doctor facundus, Archiepiscopus Aquensis (of Aix), fl. 1310. (Cave, ii. p. 25, App.) His Breviarium Bibliorum contains his comment on the Apocalypse.

XXII. Nicolas de Gorham, of Merton College, in the fourteenth century. Comment. in Apocalypsim, Antwerp, 1617—1620, p. 178 sqq. (Cave, ii. p. 86 in Appendice.)

XXIII. Jacobus de Paradiso, Carthusianus, A.D. 1449. "De Septem Statibus Ecclesiæ in Apocalypsi descriptis, deque authoritate Ecclesiæ et Ejus Reformatione." A valuable and interesting treatise, printed in Browne's Fasciculus Rerum Expetendarum, &c., ii. p. 102. Lond. 1690.

Ch. I. 1. Ἀποκάλυψις Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, κ.τ.λ.] The Apocalypse, or Revelation, of Jesus Christ, which God gave to Him, to show to His servants what things must come to pass shortly. The Father loveth the Son, and showeth Him all things that Himself doth (John v. 20); and the Everlasting Son, the Word of God, God with us (Matt. i. 23), God manifest in the flesh (1 Tim. iii. 16), reveals God's will to the world (see Matt. xi. 27. Luke x. 22. John i. 18). Hence the Apocalypse is the Revelation of Jesus Christ (cp. Gal. i. 12. 2 Cor. xii. 1). John (says Bengel) is the writer of this book, but its Author is Christ.

By some English Writers this Book is sometimes called, in the plural number, "the Revelations," but this is erroneous. The Book is Ἀποκάλυψις, Apocalypse, an unfolding or revealing of what is secret; as Andreas expresses it, it is ἡ τῶν κρυπτῶν δήλωσις (see the LXX, in 1 Sam. xx. 30). Hence S. Irenæus (v. 30) says, "the Apocalypse was seen" (ἑωράθη); a passage which shows that this title of the book, "the Apocalypse," is very ancient, probably from St. John himself.

It is this act of revealing which the title describes. Compare the use of this word in Rom. ii. 5; viii. 19; xvi. 25. 1 Cor. i. 7; xiv. 6. 2 Cor. xii. 1. 7. Gal. i. 12; ii. 2. Eph. i. 17; iii. 3. 2 Thess. i. 7. 1 Pet. i. 7. 13; it is the office of revealing the future which is assigned to Christ by God, and this truth is declared in the name and contents of the Apocalypse. Accordingly we shall see that it is Christ, Who commands John to write the seven Epistles to the Seven Churches, and reveals what some of them will suffer (i. 11. 19); it is Christ, Who opens the Book sealed with the Seven Seals (v. 7. 9), and reveals the future sufferings and final triumph of the Church (vi. 1—17; vii. 1—17); it is Christ, Who offers the prayers of all the Saints, which lead to the sounding of the Seven Trumpets which announce God's Judgments on His enemies (viii. 3—13; ix. 1—21; xi. 15); it is Christ, Who delivers the little Book opened to St. John, and gives him a commission to prophesy again (x. 1—11).

The Divinity of Christ is declared by what follows; "He sent and signified it by His angel to His servant John." Compare xxii. 16. The Angels are Christ's Angels, because He is God. See Matt. xxiv. 31.

— τῷ δούλῳ αὐτοῦ Ἰωάννῃ] to His servant John. The blessed Apostle, the beloved Disciple, who was admitted to see the heavenly visions which he is about to describe, is not "exalted by the abundance of his revelations" (2 Cor. xii. 7), but describes himself by this title, "the servant of Christ." "Mysteries are revealed unto the meek." Ecclus. iii. 19.

2, 3. ὃς ἐμαρτύρησε κ.τ.λ.] who bare witness of the Word of God, and the testimony of Jesus Christ, as many things as he saw. St. John thus intimates, that what he writes in the Apocalypse, is not from himself, but from God: that it is not from any private imagination, but that it is the testimony of Christ; and that he writes whatever he saw in the visions of God. Therefore he adds, "blessed is he who readeth, and who heareth (i. e. hearkens to, and obeys) the words of the prophecy, and observeth the things which are written therein." On the sense of ἀκούω with an accusative as here, see Acts ix. 7. On the meaning of ὅσα see note, John xxi. 25, and on the promise of blessedness to him that readeth and keepeth, see on James i. 22.

— ὁ γὰρ καιρὸς ἐγγύς] for the season is at hand: the season (καιρὸς) at which they will come to pass is near. This assertion is always true, even to the end of time. For since the prophecies in this book extend from the Apostolic age to the Day of Judgment, some of them are continually on the eve of their accomplishment. Besides, since the duration of the present world is but a span when compared with Eternity, the season of Judgment is at hand; the Judge standeth before the door (James v. 9). Cp. 2 Pet. iii. 8. Arethas.

4. Ἰωάννης ταῖς ἑπτὰ ἐκκλησίαις] John to the Seven Churches that are in Asia. The Asia here mentioned is the district more commonly known as Ionia and Lydia, and was called in Roman language Proconsular Asia. It was a province of not more than one hundred miles square, watered on the north by the river Caycus, on the south by the Mæander, and bounded on the east by the Phrygian hills, and on the west by the Mediterranean Sea. See on Acts ii. 9, and Abp. Ussher's Treatise on the Original of Bishops and Metropolitans, Oxf. 1641, p. 53, and following. Its capital was Ephesus, in which city St. John resided, wrote his Gospel, and died, and which is now named after him. See above, Introduction to St. John's Gospel, p. 267.

On these Epistles to the Seven Churches see further below, i. 11; ii. 1.

— χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη] Grace be to you, and Peace. The salutation with which St. Peter's two Epistles, and all St. Paul's Epistles to Churches begin (see on 1 Thess. i. 1); and serving as a bond of Christian fellowship between St. John and those two Apostles. The Apocalypse also ends with the final salutation which was characteristic of St. Paul, The Grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. See above, on 1 Thess. v. 28.

— ἀπὸ ὁ ὢν καὶ ὁ ἦν καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος] from Him Who is, and was, and is to come. Ὁ ὤν means more than "Who is;" it means "the Being One," the "Ever Self-existing One," the First Cause of all existence.

This remarkable structure, in which the preposition ἀπὸ is followed by a nominative case, seems designed to remind the reader, that in the Apocalypse he is to be prepared for combinations independent of the ordinary rules of Grammar, and having a Grammar of their own,—the Grammar of Inspiration.

These remarkable structures, frequent in this Book, excite the reader's attention by their singularity, and serve as mementos that the truths which they express transcend the reach of human thought and language. Thus the combination of the preposition ἀπὸ here with the participle, ὁ ὢν, marks its connexion with the indeclinable Hebrew יְהוָה (Jehovah), and also, if we may so say, bespeaks the indeclinability of the Divine Essence, with which there is "no variableness or shadow of turning." James i. 17.

See below, v. 5, and Winer, Gr. Gr. pp. 64. 164; it indicates that the phrase ὁ ὢν καὶ ὁ ἦν καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος is a proper name reserved to God alone, and that He Who spake to John in Patmos is the same as He Who spake to Moses in the Wilderness, when He thus described Himself, Ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ ὤν, "I AM the BEING One;" "I AM the ever EXISTING One," and ordered Moses to say, ὁ ὢν ἀπέσταλκέ με, "I AM hath sent me." Exod. iii. 14.

The commission given here to St. John resembles that given to Moses; and it will be seen that the Apocalypse presents a continuous series of typical analogies between the Church of Christ, whose future fortunes he reveals, and the history of the Israelitish Church led by Moses out of Egypt in its pilgrimage through the wilderness, toward Canaan, the figure of Heaven. Cp. Arethas here, and see Introduction above, p. 144.

Elz. has τοῦ after ἀπὸ, but it is not in the best MSS.

— ἀπὸ τῶν ἑπτὰ πνευμάτων] from the Seven Spirits which are before His throne. From a comparison of this passage with Zech. iv. 10, speaking of those "seven, which are the Eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth," it has been inferred by some that the Seven Spirits here mentioned, are the Seven principal Angels, of which uumber Gabriel and Michael are two. Cp. Luke i. 19. The ancient opinion of the Hebrews on this subject is expressed in the book of Tobit, xii. 15, "I am Raphael, one of the Seven Angels . . . . which go in and out before the presence of the Holy One;" and this opinion was entertained by Irenæus, cited by Andreas, and by Clemens Alex. Stromat. i. ad fin., and by Andreas and Arethas, and in later times by Ribera, Viegas, Corn. à Lapide, Mede, Bossuet, Drusius, Bp. Bull (Sermons, i. pp. 291, 292), and others. Cp. below, iii. 1, where Christ is said to have the Seven Spirits of God, and the Seven Stars, and iv. 5, where the Seven Spirits are typified by seven lamps, and v. 6, where they are symbolized by the Seven horns and seven eyes of the Lamb.

There would be, doubtless, an appropriate significance in the conveyance of the message of Grace and Peace from God and Christ, through the ministry of the Seven Angels of the Church in Heaven to the Seven Angels of the Churches of Asia, who represent the fulness of the Apostolic Ministry of the Church Universal on Earth. See i. 20; ii. 1.

Perhaps, however, as some ancient Expositors affirmed (see Andreas), the Seven Spirits represent the seven gifts of the Holy Spirit which rest on Christ, the Holy One of God (Isa. xi. 2; lxi. 1. Luke iv. 18), and which after His Ascension He sent, and is ever sending to comfort and illuminate His Church, and therefore they may well be called horns, lamps, and eyes. Nor is there any harshness in the expression Grace and Peace be to you from the Seven Spirits; for these seven gifts of the Holy Spirit bestowed by Christ, Who received them from the Father (John xiv. 16), Who is the Wellspring of all good (see on 2 Cor. xiii. 14), are the means of all Grace and Peace to the Church; and so the words are understood by Victorinus, Primasius, Bede.

The septenary number (says Aug.) is consecrated to the Holy Ghost in Holy Scripture, and is recognized as such by the Church. And (as is added by Bede here) the One Spirit is here characterized as sevenfold, because in the One Spirit is all fulness and perfection; and this interpretation is sanctioned by Bp. Andrewes (Sermon "on the Sending of the Holy Ghost," iii. p. 134), and so Bp. Wilson, who says that the salutation is from "the Holy Ghost Who governs the Church of Christ, until His Coming again, and with His sevenfold gifts inspires it."

5. ἀπὸ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὁ μάρτυς ὁ πιστός] from Jesus Christ, the faithful Witness. The structure of ἀπὸ with a nominative may be compared with that in v. 4; and as in that passage it declared that there is no variableness or shadow of turning in God (James i. 17), so it may here be understood to signify, that whatever vicissitudes may occur in the affairs of Nations, and in the History of the Church, as revealed in the prophecies of this Book, yet "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and to-day and for ever" (Heb. xiii. 8), and that He is always "the faithful witness;" and whatever corruptions of Christian doctrine may arise in the Church, yet His testimony is always faithful and true.

— ὁ πρωτότοκος τῶν νεκρῶν] the first-begotten of the dead. Death has become Birth, through Him Who is the First-born from the Grave. See above, on Acts ii. 24. 1 Cor. xv. 20. Col. i. 18. Bp. Andrewes, iii. 57.

— ὁ ἄρχων] the Prince of the Kings of the Earth, an appropriate declaration in the preamble of a Revelation which will disclose insurrections of earthly Powers against Christ (xix. 19).

— καὶ λούσαντι κ.τ.λ.] and Who washed us from our sins by His blood. Some MSS., viz. A, C, and several Cursives, and the Syriac and Armenian Versions and Fathers, Andreas, and Primasius, and Cassiodorus, have λύσαντι, Who redeemed us, and so Lachmann, and Düsterdieck, but not Ewald, De Wette, Tisch.

This reading deserves consideration, and may perhaps be preferable. For the Copyists were more likely to alter λύσαντι into λούσαντι than vice versâ; and the great proof of Christ's love is, that He redeemed us by pouring forth His Own Blood, as our ransom, λύτρον; and whereas we were held in bondage by reason of our sins, and were liable to everlasting death (Rom. vi. 17—23), Our Redeemer delivered us from that captivity by paying that price which alone could satisfy God's justice, and procure our release, and He purchased us, by that price, for Himself. See Matt. xx. 28. Acts xx. 28. 1 Cor. vi. 20; vii. 23. Eph. i. 7. Col. i. 14. Heb. ix. 12. 1 Tim. ii. 6. 1 Pet. i. 18. On the use of ἐν as the instrument, see vi. 8.

6. ἐποίησεν ἡμᾶς βασιλείαν] and He made us to be a kingdom, Priests to God and the Father. So the best MSS. Elz. has βασιλεῖς, Kings; but the spiritual character of the Christian privileges is best expressed by the abstract word a Kingdom, which may be designed to be a caution against erroneous and antinomian notions which some have deduced from the declaration of Scripture, that all Christians are Kings. It is a phrase derived from the Ancient Scriptures (Exod. xix. 6; xxiii. 22), "Ye shall be to Me a royal Priesthood," βασίλειον ἱεράτευμα. Cp. 1 Pet. ii. 9, and Winer, p. 512.

Observe the aorist here, ἐποίησεν, He made; that is, by certain special acts on His part, His Incarnation, and Death, and Ascension. See below, v. 10.

7. ἰδοὺ, ἔρχεται μετὰ τῶν νεφελῶν] Behold, He cometh with the clouds, the clouds of the Last Judgment described by Daniel, vii. 13. St. John, being in the Spirit, already anticipates the end of all things, and sees it as already at hand; as it is to Him to Whom a thousand years are as one day (2 Pet. iii. 8), and by Whose inspiration he writes. See v. 3.

— καὶ οἵτινες αὐτὸν ἐξεκέντησαν] and they also who pierced Him, whether on the Cross, by nails and the spear, and by bitter mockeries and insults; or by their sins. Heb. vi. 6. On the variation here from the Septuagint Version of this text, cited from Zech. xii. 10, see above on John xix. 37, where is the same variety; and where it is observed, that the text which speaks of Christ's suffering, affords also evidence of His Godhead.

This deviation from the LXX Version, and this identity of the rendering of this remarkable text in St. John's Gospel (xix. 37), and in the Apocalypse, are confirmatory of the belief that those two writings are from the same hand.

The frequent citations in this, the first Chapter of the Apocalypse, from the ancient Hebrew Prophets, especially from Daniel and Zechariah, are doubtless designed to lead the reader to regard the Apocalypse as a sequel to, and continuation of, Hebrew prophecy, and as dictated by the Same Spirit Who spake by its mouth. And since the Apocalypse is the last prophetical Book of Holy Scripture, it may be regarded as the consummation of all God's prophetic Revelations to the world. See above, Introduction to this Book, p. 146.

Tribes of the Earth will wail at Him: a sentence uttered by Our Lord Himself in the Gospel, Matt. xxiv. 30.

The Tribes of the Earth in this book are they who are of the earth, earthy, and are not like the Tribes of the Israel of God, the heirs of the heavenly Jerusalem, who have their hearts in heaven, their treasure in heaven, and their conversation in heaven (Matt. vi. 20. Phil. iii. 20). See below, iii. 10.

It is a saying of S. Augustine, which is of constant use in expounding the Apocalypse, "Ecclesia Dei cœlum est, inimici Ejus terra sunt" (Serm. 57).

The tribes of the spiritual Israel, the Church Universal, are represented as sealed with the Seal of God, at the final gathering of all his people, in the seventh Seal. See below, vii. 4—9.

But they who set their affections on things upon earth will wail at Christ's Coming to Judgment; while they who have set their affections on things above (Col. iii. 2) will rejoice at His appearance, and will "lift up their heads, because the day of their redemption draweth nigh." Luke xxi. 28.

On the use of the verb κόπτομαι, plango, see above, Matt. xi. 17; xxiv. 30. Luke viii. 52; xxiii. 27; below, xviii. 9.

8. ἐγώ εἰμι τὸ A καὶ τὸ Ω] I am the Alpha and the Omega. The first and last letters of the Greek Alphabet are used by Christ, in order to declare that He is the Beginning and End of all things. A similar mode of speech, derived from their own alphabet, was employed by the Hebrews, who said that Adam transgressed, and that Abraham observed, the whole law "from Aleph to Thau:" see Schoettgen, pp. 1086, 7. A like usage is found in later Greek writers. See Wetstein, p. 749.

A, B, C have τὸ Ἄλφα καὶ τὸ Ω · but it seems hardly probable that the initial letter only would have been written in one case by St. John, and not in the other also.

This use of letters of the alphabet of the Greek or Gentile world, and not of the Hebrew, in the introduction of this Book, as a designation of Jesus Christ, and adopted by Himself as such, is characteristic of the universality of the Dispensation which it reveals, and of the incorporation of all nations of the Earth in the mystical Body of Christ. The numerical value of A is an Unit, and of Ω is eight hundred; and eight is the symbol of glory. See on Luke xxiv. 1.

These words, applied by Christ to Himself (xxi. 6; xxii. 13; cp. i. 17, 18), and compared with the declarations of JEHOVAH Isa. xli. 4; xliv. 6; xlviii. 12, are also a plain assertion of Christ's Divinity and Co-eternity with the Father. See Athanasius, c. Arianos, Orat. iii. vol. i. p. 317; and cp. Andreas, Œcumen., Arethas here. Bp. Andrewes, ii. 162. Bp. Pearson, Art. ii. p. 233. Dr. Waterland, ii. p. 136. Observe the definite articles prefixed here to Alpha and Omega, indicating that He is the only Beginning and End of all things, and showing His Co-equality with the Father.

This declaration of Christ concerning Himself, "I am the A and the Ω," was reverently accepted by early Christian Art, and is often seen in ancient Christian Inscriptions, particularly in the Catacombs of Rome, where the symbols A, Ω are frequently accompanied by ☧ (Χριστός). See Aringhi, Roma Subterranea, cap. xiii. and xv. Bp. Kip on the Catacombs, Lond. 1859, p. 110; and Scott on the Catacombs, p. 100; in one case the symbol is accompanied with the words ES DEIS, probably DEUS, "Thou art GOD," asserting the GODHEAD of CHRIST.

9. ἐγὼ Ἰωάννης—Πάτμῳ] I, John, your brother. Observe the humility of the beloved Disciple; see above, v. 1. I, John, your brother, became (ἐγενόμην, not ἦν) a dweller in the island called Patmos, on account of the word of God, and the testimony of Jesus Christ. Observe the gentleness with which he speaks of his exile and imprisonment for the Gospel; ἐγενόμην ἐν τῇ νήσῳ, I became, for the sake of God's Word, an inmate of Patmos. He regards his banishment like a voyage and sojourn in a pleasant place; for he was there visited by Christ. There is also something beautiful and touching in the repetition of this word ἐγενόμην here. I became a dweller in Patmos, for the Word's sake, and I became a dweller in the Spirit, on the Lord's Day. To be in Patmos for the Truth's sake is a proper preparation for being in the Spirit, and for seeing Revelations of heaven.

The aorist ἐγενόμην does not intimate, as some have supposed, that the Apocalypse was not written in Patmos; see v. 11. It is like the epistolary aorist ἔγραψα, by which the writer puts himself in the place of the reader: see 1 Pet. v. 12.

St. John saw and wrote the Revelation in the isle of Patmos, one of the Sporades, in the Ægæan Sea, to which he was banished by the Emperor Domitian about A.D. 95. See Tertullian, Præscr. Hær. 36. Iren., c. Hær. v. 30. Origen in Matt., tom. xvi. Euseb. iii. 18; and cp. Andreas here, and S. Jerome, Scr. Eccl. x.; and above, Introduction, p. 152; and Introduction to St. John's Gospel, p. 267, note, where the passages are cited.

Smaller Islands, especially in the Archipelago, such as Gyaros, Seriphos, Patmos, were used by the Romans for purposes of penal deportation and imprisonment; see Tacit., Annal. i. 53. Juvenal, i. 73; x. 170.

The island of Patmos still preserves some local traditions of St. John's sojourn there. A cave is shown where he is said to have seen the Revelation. Tournefort, ii. p. 198. Pococke, iii. p. 36. Walpole, Turkey, ii. p. 43.

At the opening of this Book, Christ displays a specimen of the providential Scheme which is to be revealed in the Apocalypse. John was banished by the powers of this world; but Christ uses his exile and detention in Patmos as an occasion for revealing to him the glories of His Second Coming, and for commissioning him to write what he could not now preach by word of mouth, and to send the writing to the Seven Churches, so that it might be read by them and by all Churches in every age, even to the Coming of Christ.

St. John, an exile on earth, was admitted to visions of Heaven. Confined within the limits of Patmos, he was received into the courts of the Jerusalem that is above.

He who had been admitted to our Lord's most private retirements; to the most solemn scenes of His sufferings and sorrow; who had been with Him on the Mountain of Transfiguration, in the Garden of Gethsemane, in the High Priest's hall, and at the Cross; was now a prisoner in a lonely island.

All his brother Apostles had been taken away by Death. He was left the last. As the winds blew, and as the waves dashed on the rocky shores of Patmos, so the storms of the world were beating against the rock of the Church. But the aged and lonely Apostle was cheered with glorious visions. He was visited by JESUS CHRIST. The Man of Sorrows, Whom St. John had seen in His agony at Gethsemane, He Whom he had seen standing bound before Caiaphas, crowned with thorns, mocked by Herod, condemned by Pilate, pierced by the soldier, and dying on the Cross, was now seen by him enthroned in heaven, and adored by Angels kneeling before Him. "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the First and the Last. I am He that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."

Here is comfort to all in times of sorrow. They who love Christ with St. John, they who suffer with Christ, and for Him, will be visited by Him, and after the troubles of this world will pass to the peace of heaven. See above, Introduction, p. 157.

10. ἐγενόμην, κ.τ.λ.] I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day; the Day of the Lord's Resurrection from the Dead; a very appropriate season for the revelation of Christ in glory, and of the bliss of the Church Triumphant.

The expression—"the Lord's Day"—shows that the First Day of the Week, on which our Lord rose, was now observed by Christians as a day set apart for religious uses. In the words of S. Augustine (Epist. 119), "The Lord's Day being proclaimed to Christians by the Lord's Resurrection, thence became their festal Day." See note above on Acts xx. 7; and Bp. Andrewes, Sermon on 1 Cor. xi. 16, vol. ii. p. 426, who there says, "The Lord's Day hath testimony in Scripture." Bp. White on the Sabbath, Lond. 1636. Bp. Cosin, De die Dominico, Works, v. p. 529; and Archbp. Bramhall on the Lord's Day, Works, vol. v. pp. 9—85; and Bp. Pearson on the Creed, note, Art. v. pp. 497, 498; and Grotius here; and No. xliv. of the Editor's Occasional Sermons, "On the Christian Sunday." Tertullian refers to this passage in his De Animâ, c. 9.

There is also another special aptitude and adjustment in the Visions of the Apocalypse to the first day of the week. For all these Visions—the Seals, the Trumpets, the Vials, are grouped in ἐν Πνεύματι ἐν τῇ κυριακῇ ἡμέρᾳ, καὶ ἤκουσα ὀπίσω μου φωνὴν μεγάλην ὡς σάλπιγγος 11 [k] λεγούσης, [A] Ὃ βλέπεις γράψον εἰς βιβλίον, καὶ πέμψον ταῖς ἑπτὰ [k] ch. 2. 8. & 22. 13.

ἐκκλησίαις, εἰς Ἔφεσον, καὶ εἰς Σμύρναν, καὶ εἰς Πέργαμον, καὶ εἰς Θυάτειραν, καὶ εἰς Σάρδεις, καὶ εἰς Φιλαδέλφειαν, καὶ εἰς Λαοδίκειαν. 12 Καὶ ἐπέστρεψα βλέπειν τὴν φωνὴν ἥτις ἐλάλει μετ' ἐμοῦ· καὶ ἐπιστρέψας εἶδον ἑπτὰ λυχνίας seven: they begin on the first day of the Seven, the birthday of the Church, whose history and pilgrimage they reveal, till she comes, after the Hexäemeron of her trial, to the Sabbath of her Rest; and to the Octave of a glorious Resurrection.

11. καὶ πέμψον ταῖς ἑπτὰ ἐκκλησίαις] and send it to the Seven Churches: that is, primarily to the Seven Churches in Asia here specified.

Hence the testimony of those Churches to the genuineness of the Apocalypse is of great weight. It was sent to them, and they bear witness that it was sent by the Apostle and Evangelist St. John. See above, the Introduction to this Book, pp. 154—6.

Tertullian (adv. Marcion. iv. 5) refers to this passage, and calls these Churches "alumnas Joannis."

Secondly, the message delivered to them was designed by the Great Head of the Church for the perpetual edification of all Churches in every age and country of the World. This is evident from the fact, that each of the Seven Epistles here sent contains the solemn words, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches" (Rev. ii. 7. 11. 17. 29; iii. 6. 13. 22).

Besides, in Holy Scripture the number seven indicates completeness (see Bahr, Symbolik i. pp. 187—201), and it is specially used in the Apocalypse in this sense. The Seventh Seal, the Seventh Trumpet, the Seventh Vial, is the last in their own series respectively.

There were many more Churches in Asia than Seven when St. John wrote (e. g. Colossæ, Hierapolis, and probably Tralles, Magnesia, and others); and therefore, as is said by all the ancient Expositors (Victorinus, Andreas, Primasius, Bede, Arethas, and others), the design of the Holy Spirit, in adopting the perfect number seven as the number of Churches to whom the Epistles are to be sent, is to declare that in speaking to them He is speaking to all.

The words of Victorinus (Bishop and Martyr in the third century), whose comment on the Apocalypse is the oldest now extant, deserve to be cited here. "There are seven horns of the Lamb (Rev. v. 6), seven eyes of God (Zech. iv. 10), seven spirits before the throne (Rev. i. 4; iv. 5), seven Candlesticks (i. 13), seven Women in Isaiah (iv. 1), seven Churches addressed in St. Paul's writings, seven Deacons (Acts vi. 3), seven Seals (Rev. v. 1), seven Trumpets (Rev. viii.), seven Weeks ending at Pentecost (Lev. xxiii. 15), seventy weeks in Daniel (ix. 25), seven clean animals in the Ark (Gen. vii. 2), seven chastisements on Cain (Gen. iv. 15), seven years followed by a release of debt (Deut. xv. 1), seven Pillars in the House of Wisdom (Prov. xi. 1)." (Victorin. de Fabricâ Mundi.)

"Numero septenario Universæ Ecclesiæ significata est plenitudo: propter quod et Joannes Apostolus ad septem scribit Ecclesias, eo modo se ostendens ad unius plenitudinem scribere" (S. Augustine, de Civ. Dei xvii. 4).

St. John, in writing to Seven Churches of Asia, writes to all Churches of the world; and it has been observed by ancient Expositors (Canon. Muratorian. ap. Routh, R. S. iv. p. 2. Victorinus. Cyprian, de Exhort. Martyr. c. ii., and others), that the number of Gentile Churches to which St. Paul wrote Epistles is seven; and that what St. Paul wrote to them he wrote to all.

The Candlestick or Lamp in the Temple had seven branches, i. e., three on each side and the shaft in the centre (Exod. xxv. 31, 32), and it was a figure of the Church fed by the Oil of Holy Scripture, and illuminating the World (see Zech. iv. 2, and below, i. 20, and especially xi. 4); whence S. Irenæus says, v. 20, that "the Church is the Seven-branched Lamp, holding the Light of Christ."

There are Seven Golden Candlesticks in the Apocalypse, and yet there was but one Seven-branched Golden Candlestick in the Temple, and in the visions of Zechariah. So there are particular Churches throughout the World; but all these together make One Church Universal; being fed with the same Oil of pure doctrine, and all constructed of the same pure material of fine gold.

Any one Candlestick may be removed (see on Rev. ii. 5), but the sevenfold unity is not disturbed by its removal. Any particular Church may fail, but the promise of Christ to the Church Universal is, that "the Gates of Hell shall never prevail against it" (Matt. xvi. 18).

— εἰς Ἔφεσον, κ.τ.λ.] to Ephesus, and to Smyrna. The Churches here mentioned are situated in a circular group (see v. 4), and are specified in the geographical order in which they would occur to the mind of a person writing from Patmos. See above, on 1 Pet. i. 1.

Some learned Modern Expositors (Vitringa, p. 31. Venema, p. 55. Henry More, p. 720, and others) regard the Seven Epistles as having a prophetical character, and as representing Seven successive states of the Christian Church in seven consecutive periods of time, dating from the Apostolic Age to the end.

But this is a notion which is not sanctioned by ancient Expositors, and seems to be unfounded.

It cannot be doubted that in writing to the Seven Churches St. John (as has been already observed) is writing to all; and that every Church of Christendom may see itself reflected in one or other of these Epistles. Indeed (as Victorinus says), in these seven Churches we see an image of the faithful of the whole Catholic Church. But the Epistles have an historical character (see ii. 6. 13. 15), and the arrangement of their order, as before said, appears to be geographical. Ephesus is fitly placed first, as being nearest to Patmos, and as being the Chief City and Church of Asia, where St. John himself lived and died.

— Σμύρναν] Smyrna: eight miles north of Ephesus. In Christian History it is celebrated as the Episcopal See of S. Polycarp, the scholar of St. John. See ii. 8—11. Iren. ap. Euseb., iv. 14, 15. Tertullian, Præscr. § 32.

— Πέργαμον] Pergamum; rarely called Pergamus (Strabo, xiii. p. 924. Winer, ii. p. 224. Trench, on the authorized Version, p. 44). But the Greek Expositors have ἡ Πέργαμος here (in Caten., p. 208), and so Diog. Laert., in Arcesida, iv. 30. It was in Mysia, on the Caycus. For further particulars concerning it, see on ii. 12.

— Θυάτειραν] So A, B, C.—Elz. has Θυάτειρα. Thyatira, in Lydia, on the river Lycus; mentioned Acts xvi. 14.

— Σάρδεις] Sardis. The ancient capital of Crœsus and the Lydian Kings, on the river Pactolus, south of the plain beneath Mount Tmolus; the Episcopal see of Melito, in the second century. Euseb. iv. 13. 26; v. 24.

— Φιλαδέλφειαν] Philadelphia, in Lydia; deriving its name from Attalus Philadelphus, of Pergamus; at the foot of Mount Tmolus.

— Λαοδίκειαν] Laodicea, in Phrygia; called from Laodice, wife of Antiochus II., a celebrated commercial city, Tacit. Ann. xiv. 27; on the river Lycus, not far from Colossæ, see Col. ii. 1; iv. 14; it had a Chief Pastor, Archippus, in Apostolic times, Col. iv. 16. Const. Apostol. viii. 47; and a Bishop and Martyr, Sagaris, circ. A.D. 170. Euseb. iv. 26; v. 24.

12. εἶδον ἑπτὰ λυχνίας χρυσᾶς] I saw Seven Candlesticks (or rather Lamps) of Gold. The word Candlestick has taken root in the English language as an emblem of a Church, and it seems almost impossible to eradicate it; but it must be borne in mind by the English reader that the word Candlesticks does not rightly represent these λυχνίαι, which were similar to the Seven-branched λυχνίαι, or Lamps, which were to be kept continually burning in the Levitical Tabernacle, or Temple (Exod. xxv. 31; xxvii. 20. Lev. xxiv. 1—4. 1 Kings vii. 49. Heb. ix. 1, 2); and (as before observed, see v. 11) were fed with oil (cp. Exod. xxvii. 20) supplied through their branches, or tubes, into their bowls, and thus were very apt emblems of Churches (see v. 20), which have no independent light in themselves (as Andreas here observes), but are only vehicles (ὀχήματα) of light derived from above; being supplied by the Holy Spirit with a perennial stream of pure oil (see Caten. pp. 194. 199) flowing from the Word of God, and enabling them to enlighten the world—even the Angels of heaven—with the pure light of the Gospel (see Eph. iii. 10), and ever tended by Christ, and under him by the Christian Priesthood; as the Seven-branched Lamp was tended by the Levites in the Temple. In like manner the Priests of the Church of Christ are bound to keep watch and ward by day and night, and to take good heed that the wicks of the Spiritual Lamp in the Christian Sanctuary are duly trimmed, and that the pipes are not clogged and obstructed by the clotted corruptions of unsound doctrine, and that the oil is not adulterated, and that the lights burn clearly; and they are responsible to Christ for the discharge of this duty, and He will remove their Lamp if they neglect to perform it. See next note.

13. καὶ ἐν μέσῳ τῶν ἑπτὰ λυχνιῶν] and in the midst of the seven golden Lamps one like the Son of Man, clothed with a long garment down to His feet. "One like the Son of Man," so Daniel describes Christ, Dan. vii. 13; x. 5. Christ is arrayed in a long garment, as the High Priest of the Church Universal. Compare Ezek. ix. 2. 11, and the description of the High Priest's robes in Josephus, Ant. iii. 8. 4; viii. 3. 8; xx. 1. 1, who uses the word ποδήρης, flowing to the feet, as applicable to the Sacred Vesture of the High Priest.

Christ is represented as walking in the midst of the Seven Golden Lamps (ii. 1), because, as the Priests in the Tabernacle and Temple lighted, and watched, and fed the Lamps (Exod. xxvii. 20, 21; xxxiv. 9. Lev. xxiv. 2. 4), so Christ observes the Churches of Christendom, which He illumines with the light of His Word, and feeds with the oil of His Spirit, and trims with His discipline, and guards with His care, and examines with His eye, whether they burn clearly with the luminous flame of true doctrine, and whether the liquid oil of the Spirit is corrupted with human admixtures, and the light of the lamp is dimmed with heresy, superstition, or unbelief.

— καὶ περιεζωσμένον] and girded around at the breasts with a golden girdle. This also is a sacerdotal attribute, showing that the Son of Man is here presented as the High Priest of the Church. Compare the language of Josephus, Ant. iii. 7. 2, concerning the girdle of the High Priest of the Levitical Dispensation; and see Wetstein here.

14. ἡ δὲ κεφαλὴ, κ.τ.λ.] and His head and His hair white as white wool. Here the same attributes are ascribed to Christ as are assigned to God by Daniel, vii. 9; x. 6; and they show that He is God. Cp. v. 8.

It is observed by S. Irenæus (iv. 20. 11), that the imagery by which Christ is here described represents His two Natures and His Sacerdotal Office. The Hair, white like wool, shows His Divinity; His attire displays His Priesthood; His feet of chalcolibanum burning in a furnace represent His permanence, like the Bush in the Wilderness on fire, but not consumed (Exod. iii. 2); and the fire, adds Irenæus, may remind us of that conflagration with which He will execute Judgment at the end of the World.

15. οἱ πόδες αὐτοῦ ὅμοιοι χαλκολιβάνῳ] and His feet like unto chalcolibanus. The etymology of the last word is doubtful; but inasmuch as the language of the Apocalypse coincides in many respects with that of Hebrew Prophecy, it is probably equivalent to the shining brass, or molten brass or copper, glowing in a state of incandescence and fusion, in Dan. x. 6, and Ezek. i. 7. 13. And this is confirmed by Plin. N. H. xxxiv. 2. The word occurs again, ii. 18.

It is rendered aurichalcum, or orichalcum (see Cicero de Off. iii. 23. 12. Horat. Ars Poet. 202), by the Vulgate, and is said by Suidas to be the same as electrum, which is a composite metal (Plin. N. H. ix. 65), made of gold and silver. See Winer, R. W. B. ii. pp. 88, 89, and it is rendered by some "brass from Libanus" (Syr., Æthiop., Vatabl., Ebrard).

But it seems rather to be derived from χαλκὸς, copper, and λίβανος, frankincense, and to be a word similar to χρυσό-πρασος, and χρυσό-λιθος, and to express a metal which resembles copper in a state of ignition, like frankincense. Cp. Wetst. here, and Salmas. ad Solin. p. 810. Some of the ancient Expositors (e. g. Andreas) see here a reference to the fragrance of frankincense, as a symbol of the savour unto life which attends the preaching of the Gospel. See 2 Cor. ii. 16.

16. καὶ ἐκ τ. στόματος] and going out of His mouth a sharp two-edged sword, the Word of God. Tertullian thus expounds it (c. Marcion. iii. 14), "the Apostle St. John, in the Apocalypse, describes a sword coming forth from the mouth of God, with two edges and sharp at the point, which is the Word of God, sharpened with the two edges of the two Testaments—the Law and the Gospel."

The judicial, punitive Power of God's Holy Word, as an instrument of His retributive Justice and indignation on the guilty, for their disobedience, is displayed in the Apocalypse in awful characters, see ii. 12. 16, and particularly xix. 15. 21. This attribute of God's Word is carefully to be observed, as serving to explain some Visions in this Book which would otherwise be obscure, and particularly xi. 3—6.

This imagery is also derived from the ancient Scriptures, Isa. xi. 4; xlix. 2. Hos. vi. 5; and is adopted by St. Paul, Heb. iv. 12. This sword of Christ is always called ῥομφαία in the Apocalypse (i. 16; ii. 12. 16; xix. 15. 21), never μάχαιρα, and perhaps this word may be chosen in order to express more clearly the terror of the Lord (2 Cor. v. 11), and of His Word to those who disobey Him.

17. καὶ ἔθηκε] and He laid His right hand upon me, as the Angel did on Daniel, viii. 18; x. 10.

18. καὶ ἔχω τὰς κλεῖς] and I hold the Keys of Death and of Hades. Christ holds the Keys of Death, both of natural and spiritual Death; of natural Death, as He proved by raising the Dead, and by giving to His Apostles the power of raising the Dead, and by raising Himself from the Dead. See John v. 21.

He holds also the Keys of Spiritual Death. He quickens the soul, dead in trespasses and sins, by His Word and Sacraments (see on John v. 25); and as the appointed Judge of Quick and Dead, He will condemn the wicked at the Last Day, to that spiritual death, which is called in the Apocalypse the Second Death. See xx. 6. 14; xxi. 8. "For Hell itself is secunda mors, and is so termed by St. John." Bp. Andrewes, ii. 194.

He it is therefore "that openeth, and no man shutteth; and that shutteth, and no man openeth," iii. 7.

He has also the Keys of Hades—that is, of שְׁאוֹל, Scheol, the region of disembodied spirits (see on Luke xvi. 23, and Andreas here), distinguished from Hell, γέεννα, or the Lake of Fire, which is the final abode of the reprobate (see xx. 10. 14, 15), and into which none are cast until the Day of Judgment.

Therefore the word Ἅιδης is not to be rendered Hell; we may adopt the word Hades, with Hammond and Bp. Wilson, pp. 700, 701, and others. See the notes in the American revised Version, pp. 86, 87, ed. 1854.

Our Lord used this Key on the Cross when He admitted the soul of the Penitent into Paradise (Luke xxiii. 43), and He will use it at the Great Day, when He will unlock the gates of Hades, and will call forth the Spirits of all men, and re-unite every soul to its own body, which He will raise from the grave (John v. 28); and summon all men in soul and body to His Judgment Seat, for their final doom of everlasting bliss or woe.

Elz. places τοῦ θανάτου before τοῦ Ἅιδου, but A, B, C place τοῦ θανάτου first; and so all the best Editions. This is the order of the words in all the other passages in which they occur in this book, see vi. 8; xx. 13, 14, and with good reason, because Death is the inlet of the soul into Hades.

19. καὶ ἃ εἰσι] and what they are. The word εἰσι here may signify what they mean; as is explained by what follows, "the seven stars are, i. e. they represent, the Angels of the Seven Churches; and the seven Lamps are, i. e. they represent, the Seven Churches." This interpretation is mentioned by Arethas, and is adopted by Alcasar, Aretius, Launoi, Eichhorn, Herder, De Wette, Ewald, and others.

St. John was not only admitted to see, and enabled to describe, the mysteries of the Spiritual World and of Futurity, but he was also empowered to explain them. Compare xvii. 9. 12. 15 18, where the substantive verb εἰμι is used in this sense.

At the same time, in favour of the other interpretation (which

The Seven Epistles to the Seven Churches.

CH. II. 1. τῷ ἀγγέλῳ] To the Angel of the Church that is in Ephesus, write. Christ commands St. John to write to the Seven Angels, as the Representatives of their several Churches. Thus Christ Himself recognizes that form of Church government in which one Person presides, as Chief Pastor, over a City and Diocese, such as that of Ephesus, which, as we know from Holy Scripture, particularly from St. Paul's address to the Ephesian Presbyters at Miletus (Acts xx. 17), and from his two Epistles to Timothy, the Bishop of Ephesus, contained within it many Presbyters. See above, the Introductory note on 1 Tim. iii. p. 433.

Tertullian (adv. Marcion. iv. 5) designates these Angels as Bishops. "Habemus Joannis alumnas Ecclesias; nam etsi Apocalypsin ejus Marcion respuit, ordo tamen Episcoporum ad originem recensitus in Joannem stabit auctorem." And (Aug.? See above, p. 159) says here, "Angeli non debent hic intelligi nisi Episcopi, aut Præpositi Ecclesiarum."

In these Epistles of the Apocalypse, Christ often blames the Angels of the Churches (see vv. 5. 14. 20; iii. 2. 17), but He never blames them for being Angels; that is, for occupying the chief place in their respective churches; which He certainly would have done, if such a pre-eminence in His Church had not been in accordance with His Will. See Matt. xx. 26. Luke xxii. 24—26.

On the contrary, Christ recognizes the Angels as the Heads and organs of their several Churches; and sends His Epistles to the several Churches, through them. He recognizes the Seven Angels as the official Representatives of the Seven Churches.

Besides,—what is very worthy of remark,—in the original Greek the various epithets (dead, hot, cold, poor, rich, blind, naked, and the like) which Christ uses in these two chapters to characterize the qualities and condition of these several Churches, do not agree in gender with the feminine word Ἐκκλησία, Church; but they agree with the masculine word Ἄγγελος, Angel. They are all masculine; not one of them is feminine. The address to the Churches is personal to their several Angels. As Primasius expresses it, "unam facit Angeli Ecclesiæque personam." He identifies him with it. The Bishop is regarded as "Persona Ecclesiæ" by the Chief Shepherd and Bishop of souls (1 Pet. ii. 5). The Great Head of the Church lays on the Angels the failings of their Churches; and thereby He not only makes a practical recognition of Episcopal Authority, but also teaches a solemn lesson of Episcopal Responsibility.

This Scripture also supplies a sacred precedent, and divine direction, as to the size of Dioceses, and number of Bishops. The territory, in which these Seven Churches were situated, was not much larger in extent than that of some single modern Dioceses; and each great City had its Bishop (see i. 4). The practical application of this sacred precedent to our own Church and Country at this time deserves serious consideration.

— τῆς ἐν Ἐφέσῳ ἐκκλησίας] of the Church in Ephesus. He does not say "to the Angel of Ephesus," but to the Angel of the Church in Ephesus. Observe this title and style, which is employed by Christ in all His addresses to the Seven Angels of the Seven Churches. The Texts in v. 8, and in iii. 14, which seemed to offer exceptions to this rule, have been now restored from the best MSS.

This mode of address ought to regulate the language to b used by Christians toward Chief Pastors, and Cities, like those of Ephesus, Smyrna, &c. in the age of St. John, where the Civil Authorities are not yet Christian.

Accordingly, in the primitive writings of Apostolic men, the Church in a City is described as παροικοῦσα, that is, as sojourning in that City. Thus S. Clement (Ep. i.) says, "The Church of God that dwelleth at Rome" (ἡ παροικοῦσα Ῥώμην), to the Church of God that dwelleth at Corinth (τῇ παροικούσῃ Κόρινθον). Compare the language of St. John's scholar, S. Ignatius, at the commencement of his Epistles, e.g. ad Ephes.: "To the Church that is in Ephesus," (ad Tralles) "to the holy Church that is in Tralles."

The spiritual authority of Bishops flows from Christ alone. They are Chief Pastors of His Church, by virtue of their consecration to the Episcopal Office instituted by Him. But territorial titles are derived from God through the Power to which He has assigned dominion in this World, in which "He determines the bounds of habitation" (Acts xvii. 26). And when the Powers of this world become Christian, they exercise authority, in assigning the territorial limits within which the spiritual power, which is of divine origin and institution, is to be exercised. And when this is done, then the Bishop of the Church in the City becomes the Bishop of the City in which the Church is.

Thus, after the Empire became Christian, the Bishop of the Church in Ephesus became the Bishop of Ephesus, and he is so styled by Historians, Civil and Ecclesiastical. See Hooker, VIII. vii. Abp. Bramhall, i. p. 272. Bp. Sanderson, v. p. 157, and other authorities, quoted in Theophilus Anglicanus, pt. i. ch. xii. and pt. ii. ch. iii.

— ἐν Ἐφέσῳ] in Ephesus: the Metropolis of Asia (Acts ii. 9), and specially connected with St. John. See Introduction to his Gospel above, pp. 266, 267, and Rev. i. 11.

— Τάδε λέγει] these things saith.

In proof of the exact symmetry and marvellous accuracy with which this divine book is written, it may be observed, that

(1) Each of the Seven Epistles is introduced with these words, "To the Church—write; These things saith;" and then a special title of Christ is introduced, suitable to the particular condition of the Church which is addressed in that particular Epistle.

(2) Each of the Seven Epistles then proceeds to proclaim the Divine Omniscience of Christ, and His ever-watchful observation of what is done in the Church. "I know thy works." See here, v. 2. 9. 13. 19; iii. 1. 8. 15.

(3) Each of the Seven Epistles contains the words, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches;" marking the importance of the message; and that though it is addressed to one Church, it is designed for all: vv. 7. 11. 17. 29; iii. 6. 13. 22.

(4) The Seven Epistles are divided into two Parts, by the interweaving of two phrases in a remarkable manner;

The phrase concerning him "that overcometh," is placed first in the first three Epistles, and is placed last in the last four Epistles; and the phrase "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches," is placed first in the first three Epistles, and is placed last in the last four.

(5) All the Epistles contain some special warning or promise from Christ; and that warning or promise is appropriately adapted and adjusted to the attribute under which He presents Himself to each Church in succession. It is also accommodated to the special difficulties and dangers which have been overcome, or are to be overcome by that particular Church. Their respective adaptations to the attributes of Christ Himself may be seen as follows in one view.

(1) To Ephesus. Thus saith He that walketh amid the seven golden Lamps (v. 1), Repent, or I will remove thy Lamp (v. 5).

(2) To Smyrna. Thus saith the First and the Last who became dead, and rose again to life (v. 8), Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life (v. 10).

(3) To Pergamus. Thus saith He that hath the sharp two-edged sword (v. 12), Repent, or I will fight against them with the sword of My mouth (v. 16).

(4) To Thyatira. Thus saith the Son of God, Who hath His eyes like unto a flame of fire, and His feet like fine brass (v. 18), All shall know that I am He that searcheth reins and hearts (v. 23), that which ye have hold fast till I come (v. 25).

(5) To Sardis. Thus saith He that hath the Seven Spirits

τοὺς ἑπτὰ ἀστέρας ἐν τῇ δεξιᾷ αὐτοῦ, ὁ περιπατῶν ἐν μέσῳ τῶν ἑπτὰ λυχνιῶν of God, and the Seven Stars (iii. 1), that is, Who governs the Angels in the Church in heaven, and upon the earth (see i. 4. 20), He that overcometh I will confess his name in the presence of My Father and of His Angels (iii. 5).

(6) To Philadelphia. Thus saith He that hath the key of David, Who openeth and no one shutteth (iii. 7), I have set before thee a door opened which no man can shut (iii. 8).

(7) To Laodicea. Thus saith the Amen, the faithful and true Witness (v. 14); and this Epistle contains a rebuke for lack of faithfulness and zeal in witnessing to the Faith: Because thou art neither cold nor hot I will vomit thee out of My mouth (v. 16).

There is, also, a gradual scale of ascent in the dignity and blessedness of Christ's promises to the several Churches. See below, on v. 7.

Such are some of the evidences of harmonious symmetry and elaborate accuracy in the composition of the Apocalypse.

S. Jerome well says (ad Paulin. Ep. 50), that the Apocalypse "has as many mysteries as words,—in verbis singulis multiplices latent intelligentiæ." And Henry More observes (v. 15), "that there never was a book penned with that artifice as this of the Apocalypse, as if every word were weighed in a balance before it was set down." These remarkable specimens of careful composition in its earlier chapters may have been designed to remind the reader, that every sentence of it is pregnant with meaning, and that in order to understand its Visions, the best method is to examine diligently every word of the Apocalypse.

— ὁ κρατῶν] He that holdeth the seven stars in His hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden Lamps. In the foregoing note it was observed, that each of the Seven Epistles is introduced with a recital of a particular title of Christ which has a special reference to the condition of the Church to which the Epistle is sent, and the warnings which it needs.

These several titles and their respective relations to the several Churches, may be here exhibited synoptically in one tabular view, which may help to bring out these points more clearly, and to keep them before the eye of the reader;

To Ephesus.	To Smyrna.	To Pergamos.	To Thyatira.	To Sardis.	To Philadelphia.	To Laodicea.
1. Unto the angel of the Church in Ephesus write: These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden lamps; 2 I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars: 3 And hast patience, and hast borne for my name's sake, and hast not fainted. 4 Nevertheless I have this against thee, that thou hast left thy first love. 5 Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do thy first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy lamp out of his place, except thou repent. 6 But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate.	8 And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write; These things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive; 9 I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art rich) and the blasphemy which thou bearest from them which say they are Jews, and are not, but the synagogue of Satan. 10 Fear not those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, now the devil will cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life.	12 And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write; These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges; 13 I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is: and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, in those days when Antipas was, my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth. 14 But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there some that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication. 15 So thou also hast some that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, in like manner. 16 Repent therefore; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth.	18 And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira write; These things saith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass; 19 I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and I know thy last works to be more than thy first. 20 Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest thy wife Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess; and she teacheth and seduceth my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols. 21 And I gave her space to repent: and she will not repent of her fornication. 22 Behold, I cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds. 23 And I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth reins and hearts: and I will give unto every one of you according to your works. 24 But unto you I say, that is, unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan, as they say, I cast not upon you any other burden. 25 But that which ye have hold fast till I am come.	1 And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name to live, and thou art dead. 2 Be watchful and strengthen the things which remain, that were ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before my God. 3 Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and keep, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee. 4 But thou hast a few names in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white; for they are worthy.	7 And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write; These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth; 8 I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee a door opened, which no man can shut: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name. 9 Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee. 10 Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. 11 Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.	14 And unto the angel of the church in Laodicea write; These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God; 15 I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. 16 So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth. 17 Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing, and knowest not that thou art the wretched one, and the miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked, 18 I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and to anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see. 19 As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent. 20 Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.
7 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches;	11 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches;	17 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches;	26 And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: 27 And he shall rule them with a rod of iron, as the vessels of a potter are broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father. 28 And I will give him the morning star. 29 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.	5 He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels. 6 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.	12 Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is the new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and my new name. 13 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.	21 To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. 22 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.
To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of my God.	He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death.	To him that overcometh will I give of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and on the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it

2. καὶ τὴν ὑπομονήν σου] and thy patience,—a lesson to Pastors and Churches. The Angel is praised because he exercises godly discipline in censure and correction of errors, and yet practises Christian patience and forbearance towards the erring. See v. 4. Cp. 1 Thess. v. 14. Gal. vi. 2, and here, on v. 1.

— καὶ ἐπείρασας] and thou didst try (cp. 2 Cor. xiii. 5) them who call themselves Apostles and are not. Cp. 2 Cor. xi. 13. St. Paul had predicted the rise of false teachers among the Pastors of Ephesus (Acts xx. 30), and had warned the Ephesian Presbyters against them. And St. John, who warns his hearers to try the Spirits (1 John iv. 1), had condemned an Asiatic Presbyter for personating the Apostle St. Paul, by a writing published in his name. Tertullian, de Bapt. 17. S. Jerome, Scr. Eccl. 7.

3. καὶ ἐβάστασας] and thou didst bear them, and hast patience. "Bear ye (βαστάζετε) one another's burdens," says St. Paul (Gal. vi. 2, see note); and "Bear (βάσταζε) all men (writes one Apostolic Bishop and disciple of St. John to another), as the Lord beareth thee, forbear all in love; bear (βάσταζε) the infirmities of all, as a complete athlete; the more the pain, the more the gain;" ὅπου πλείων κόπος, πλέον κέρδος, S. Ignatius, Epist. to S. Polycarp, chap. i.

— οὐ κεκοπίακας] and hast not fainted. The reading of A, C is οὐ κεκοπίακες: that of B and numerous Cursives is οὐκ ἐκοπίακας: which is probably nothing else than the reading exhibited in the text. The sense is, "Novi laborem tuum; non tamen laboras" (Bengel). Thou toilest, but dost not feel the toil; such is thy patience.

4. τὴν ἀγάπην σου τὴν πρώτην ἀφῆκας] thou hast left thy first love; "the kindness of thy youth, the love of thy espousals" (Jer. ii. 2). The Church is addressed as a Bride (2 Cor. xi. 2. Cp. below, iii. 20, 21), and she is reproved for having abated the fervour of her early love to God, and to man in God (see 1 John iv. 7); that love, which she had shown by patience and long-suffering for His name's sake, toward weak brethren. See S. Augustine, Epist. 41, vol. ii. p. 146.

— μετανόησον] repent. From such passages as these the Ancient Fathers contended for the efficacy of Repentance after deadly sin, against the Novatians and others. See S. Cyprian, Epist. 52, and S. Jerome (contra Lucif. tom. iv. p. 304), who says, "The Angel of Ephesus is charged (in the Apocalypse), with having left his first love: the Angel of Pergamus is censured for eating things offered to idols: the Angel of Thyatira is blamed for suffering a Jezebel to teach. And yet Christ calls all these to repentance; which He would not have done, if He would not pardon them when penitent." Cp. note above, on Acts viii. 22. Heb. iv. 5.

5. κινήσω τὴν λυχνίαν] I will remove thy candlestick; or rather thy Lamp. See i. 12, and Introduction, p. 149. However, in consequence of the common use of the word candlestick as a translation of the Apocalyptic λυχνία, we can hardly refrain from adopting it. The reader will recollect its meaning.

"I will remove thy Candlestick, or Lamp." A remarkable expression, probably derived from the removal of the seven-branched Lamp from the Temple of Jerusalem, at the taking of the City by the Roman Conqueror, who carried it in triumphal procession to Rome; where it may still be seen at this day, engraved on the Arch of Titus, amid other trophies of his victory over the Jews.

"I will remove thy Candlestick."

This warning declares an important doctrinal truth. Any particular candlestick may be removed; that is, any one Church may fail, even though it have been founded by Apostles themselves, and be under their rule. But the light of the whole Catholic Church will never be extinct, because Christ, Who is the Light of the World, is ever walking in the midst of the Candlesticks, and has promised to be with His Church always, even to the end of the world (Matt. xxviii. 20), and to send the Holy Ghost to abide with her for ever (John xiv. 16; xvi. 13). and He has said that the "Gates of Hell shall not prevail against His Church" (Matt. xvi. 18, 19); and she is called by St. Paul "the pillar and ground of the truth." See 1 Tim. iii. 15.

Hence also we may infer, that though it cannot be said à priori that any Church will never err, and though it cannot be said, that any man, or set of men in the Church, met in a Council or Synod, are infallible and will not err, yet we may say, and must say, that those doctrines which have been received as agreeable to God's Word by the consent of the body of Christ or Church Universal,—such as are the doctrines contained in the Creeds,—are not erroneous, but true, and are most surely to be believed. See above, on Acts xv. 7.

Further. we may hence conclude, that whatever doctrine may be shown to have been unknown to, or opposed by, the Churches of Christendom in the first ages of Christianity, is not true, but false: and is not to be imposed upon any one as an article of Faith. See above, Gal. i. 8, 9. Jude 3.

6. μισεῖς τὰ ἔργα τῶν Νικολαϊτῶν] thou hatest the works of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate. Cp. ii. 15. The Nicolaitans are described by S. Irenæus (i. 26), the scholar of Polycarp, the disciple of St. John, as deriving their name from Nicolas, one of the seven Deacons (Acts vi. 5), and as living in a dissolute and licentious state, "nullam differentiam esse docentes in mœchando et idolothyton edere;" and by S. Hippolytus, the scholar of Irenæus, in his recently discovered treatise, Refut. hæres. p. 259, ed. Miller. Both these authors refer to the Apocalypse. The Nicolaitans are also described by S. Clement (Strom. ii. 20, and iii. 4); by Victorinus here, S. Hieron. (c. Lucif. c. 43), and S. Epiphan. (hær. 25), S. Augustin. (hær. § 5); Andreas here, and p. 209 in Catenâ.

S. Clement, however, with some others of the Fathers, denies that Nicolas himself was responsible for their tenets and practices. Cp. Ittig, de Hæresiarchis, cap. ix. p. 87. Tillemont, Mémoires, ii. p. 19. Oehler, Corpus Hæres. p. 37. Dr. Burton's Bampton Lectures, pp. 152—155.

The Nicolaitans did indeed teach some of the doctrines of Balaam (ii. 14), but there seems no reason to believe that their name is derived from Νικόλαος, a Greek form of Balaam, Hebrew בִּלְעָם, Bileam = absorbens populum, or victor populi = Νικό-λαος, as is supposed by some, e. g. Cocceius (apud Ittig, p. 92), Hermann, Vitringa, Wetstein, Eichhorn, in Rev. i. p. 74; Rosenmüller, Rev. ii. 6; Herder, and others. See Düsterdieck, p. 141. Gieseler, Church Hist. i. 1, § 29.

The divine declaration, "which I also hate," is a warning from Christ that He marks what is done in the Churches; He knows their works, see on v. 1, and will deal with them accordingly.

7. ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις] to the Churches. This sentence, repeated seven times (see v. 1), proclaims that what the Spirit says here to any one Church, is said by Him to all the Churches of the world. See on v. 1, pp. 167, 168.

— τῷ νικῶντι] to him that overcometh. Another phrase repeated seven times: declaring that every Church will be assaulted by enemies, and will be tried by difficulties and dangers, and must therefore watch and pray; and have its eye fixed on Him Who is represented in the Apocalypse, going forth as a conqueror, "overcoming and to overcome" (vi. 2), and Who enables His soldiers to overcome (xii. 11), and will reward all who overcome (ii. 7. 11. 17. 26; iii. 5. 12. 21); see the tabular view of the Epistles, p. 168.

— τῷ νικῶντι δώσω αὐτῷ] To him that overcometh, I will grant to him, to eat of the tree of life, which is in the Paradise of my God. The addition of the pronoun αὐτῷ after the dative νικῶντι, gives emphasis to the sentence. Cp. below, v. 17, and note on Matt. iii. 12, and 1 Pet. ii. 24.

e Isa. 41. 4. & 44. 6. ch. 1. 8, 11, 17, 18. f vv. 2, 13, 19.

8 e Καὶ τῷ ἀγγέλῳ τῆς ἐν Σμύρνῃ ἐκκλησίας γράψον· Τάδε λέγει ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ὁ ἔσχατος, ὃς ἐγένετο νεκρὸς, καὶ ἔζησεν. 9 f Οἶδά σου τὰ ἔργα, καὶ τὴν θλῖψιν καὶ τὴν πτωχείαν, ἀλλὰ πλούσιος εἶ, καὶ τὴν βλασφημίαν ἐκ τῶν λεγόντων Ἰουδαίους εἶναι ἑαυτοὺς καὶ οὐκ εἰσὶν, ἀλλὰ συναγωγὴ τοῦ Σατανᾶ.

g 1 Cor. 9. 25. 2 Tim. 2. 5. & 4. 7, 8. James 1. 12.

10 g Μὴ φοβοῦ ἃ μέλλεις πάσχειν· ἰδοὺ δὴ μέλλει βαλεῖν ὁ διάβολος ἐξ ὑμῶν εἰς φυλακὴν ἵνα πειρασθῆτε· καὶ ἕξετε θλῖψιν ἡμερῶν δέκα. Γίνου πιστὸς

The language and imagery is from Genesis, ii. 9; iii. 22. Cp. Ezek. xxviii. 13. Christ the Second Adam promises more to his children than was given to the first Adam. By the eating of the one tree (ξύλον = עֵץ, Gen. ii. 9), which was in the midst of the garden, Adam lost the benefit and delight of the other tree —the tree of life. But Christ by dying on the tree (Acts v. 30; x. 39. Gal. iii. 13. 1 Pet. ii. 24) has delivered mankind from the penalty entailed upon them by the eating of the one, and has given them the promise of a joyful fruition of the other.

Observe the adaptation of the reward to the work done. If thou resistest the temptation to gratify the carnal appetite, which indulgence leads to death (Rom. viii. 6. 13), and to eat of dainties offered to idols, and so overcomest the Tempter, I will give to thee to eat of the tree of life.

There is a gradual scale of ascent in the dignity and blessedness of the promises made by Christ in these seven Epistles to them that overcome.

They may conveniently be placed here together before the eye of the reader. Cp. above on v. 1, and the tabular view, p. 168.

(1) The first step in the heavenly ladder is here in the first Epistle; I will give him to eat of the Tree of Life, which is in the Paradise of my God.

Paradise is the abode of the departed Spirits of the righteous (see on Luke xxiii. 43, and on 2 Cor. xii. 4). And the first promise is to the soul of him that overcometh; his soul on its dissolution from the body will be admitted into Paradise by Him Who has the Key of Hades, and will feed on the Tree of Life in the midst of the spiritual Eden or Garden of delight.

(2) The second promise in the second Epistle (v. 11) to him that overcometh, relates to his body as well as his soul. He shall not be hurt by the second death. He shall be safe from that death—that everlasting death—to which the wicked will be condemned at the final Judgment, both in body and soul, in hell. See above, i. 18, and Matt. x. 28. Luke xii. 4; and below, xx. 14; xxi. 8.

(3) The third Epistle offers a higher degree of bliss to him that overcometh. I will give to him, says Christ, of the hidden manna, and a white stone, and on the stone a new name, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it (v. 17).

Here is a promise of intimate union with Christ, perfect remission of all guilt of sin, and of admission to the citizenship and joys of the heavenly Jerusalem—the everlasting abode of saints in glory; and to the fountain of the consummation of bliss, both in body and soul, for evermore. See on v. 17.

(4) The fourth Epistle offers a promise of still higher honour. He that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give authority over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; and I will give him the morning star (v. 28). Here is a pledge of glorious pre-eminence. See the note there, and above on Matt. x. 15. Luke xix. 17. 2 Cor. ix. 6.

(5) The fifth Epistle rises still higher. He that overcometh shall be clothed in white raiment, like the shining raiment of Christ Himself at the Transfiguration (Matt. xvii. 2. Mark ix. 3. Luke ix. 29), and like the bright raiment of the Angels (Mark xvi. 5. John xx. 12. Acts i. 10), and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, I will confess his name before My Father, and before His Angels: he shall receive honour from Him Whose name is above every name. (Phil. ii. 9.)

(6) The sixth Epistle declares the everlasting state of felicity and glory of him that overcometh. I will make him to be a Pillar in the Temple of My God, and he shall go no more out. His happiness and honour shall be assured for Eternity, it shall stand fast as long as the heavenly Temple endureth in the New Jerusalem (iii. 12). He shall not only bear a new name, but I will write upon him the Name of My God, and the Name of the City of My God, and My own new Name.

(7) The seventh Epistle contains the consummation of all, enthronization in glory with Christ. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My Throne, even as I also overcame and sate down with My Father in His Throne (iii. 21).

9. πλούσιος εἶ] thou art rich, in faith and good works. See James ii. 5. Cp. Matt. vi. 20. Luke xii. 21, and below, iii. 18.

— τὴν βλασφημίαν ἐκ τ. λ.] the blasphemy which thou endurest from those who call themselves Jews, and are not, but a synagogue of Satan.

The preposition ἐκ, which is omitted by Elz., has been rightly restored from A, B, C, and is important to the sense.

This reference to the Jews in the Epistle to Smyrna is illustrated by the ancient Epistle of the Church of Smyrna, describing the Martyrdom of the Bishop of Smyrna, Polycarp, St. John's own disciple, who may have been the Angel to whom this Apocalyptic Epistle is addressed. See the authorities in Jacobson, Patr. Apost. i. p. lvi. According to Bp. Pearson's calculations, S. Polycarp suffered martyrdom A.D. 147, and he declared in his address to the Proconsul that he had been a Christian for 86 years. See there cap. 9, p. 606, and the note of Abp. Ussher; and Ribera, Alcasar, Corn. à Lapide, and Hengstenberg here.

The ancient Smyrnæan Epistle just noticed relates, that the Jews were specially eager in hastening the death of Polycarp, by collecting wood for his martyrdom by fire (Martyr. Polyc. § 13, p. 617, ed. Jacobson), and even after he had been burnt, the Jews tried to hinder the Christians from gathering up his remains for burial (Ibid. c. 17, 18, pp. 630, 631).

On the phrase "who call themselves Jews, but are not Jews, but a synagogue of Satan," cp. below, iii. 7. 9. 12; and Andreas here, who says well that a Jew, according to the etymology of the name (from יָדָה, laudavit), is properly one who confesses and praises the true God. (Cp. Gen. xxix. 35.) True Jews are they who believe in Christ; and, therefore, they who do not confess Him, are not now to be called Jews, but by their blasphemy against Him they prove themselves to be a Synagogue of Satan.

10. δή] already—an important word; omitted by Elz., but restored from the best MSS, and preparing the Church for impending persecution.

— μέλλει βαλεῖν ὁ Διάβολος ἐξ ὑμῶν εἰς φυλακήν] the Devil is about to cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried. Thus Christ declares that the instigator of the persecutions against His Church is the Devil, the false accuser. Compare above on 1 Pet. v. 8, and below, on vi. 3, 4. And it is observable that the aforesaid Epistle of the Smyrnæan Church, describing the martyrdom of their Bishop, S. Polycarp, appears to have treasured up this language, addressed to itself by Christ. It thus speaks (c. 3):

"The Devil devised many things against them (the Martyrs), but, thanks be to God, did not prevail over them all:" a sentence which shows that he did prevail over some, and illustrates the language of the Apocalypse here, and declares the fortitude of those who overcame him.

— θλῖψιν ἡμερῶν δέκα] a persecution of ten days. B has ἡμέρας. Some ancient Expositors suppose that the phrase ten days is used here as a symbolical formula denoting "a few days," a "little while." See Arethas here; and this mode of speech seems to be authorized by Hebrew use, see Gen. xxiv. 55. Num. xi. 19. Dan. i. 12. 14, and Wetstein, note, p. 755.

Perhaps, however, the prediction may be interpreted literally. In the Asiatic Cities, such as Smyrna, Persecutions often broke out at particular seasons, especially at the celebration of the Heathen Games. Such was the persecution at Smyrna, in which Polycarp suffered, which was prolonged beyond the days appointed for the games; and perhaps it raged for ten days. See Martyr. Polyc. c. 12; comp. c. 3.

— γίνου πιστός] Become thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life. He says γίνου, become, because He is speaking of something future; and new measures of faith will be requisite to encounter the coming trial. "Polycarp by his patience," says the Epistle of the Church of Smyrna, c. 19, p. 632, "overcame the unrighteous ruler, and received the crown of Immortality."

These and other particulars in that Epistle (see last note but one) show that the Apocalypse was known to the Church of Smyrna, and that the language addressed to it by Christ comforted it in persecution; and if we had other similar letters from the other seven Churches of Asia, we should probably see similar evidence in them. Evidence which is extant in another case may be seen below, iii. 8.

— τὸν στέφανον τῆς ζωῆς] the crown of life. Cp. 2 Tim. ii. 5; iv. 7, 8. 1 Cor. ix. 24, 25. Phil. iii. 14; below, iii. 11.

11. τοῦ θανάτου τοῦ δευτέρου] the second death, everlasting misery both of body and soul in hell (Victorinus). See above on i. 18. This term, the second death, was used by Hebrew writers, describing the woe of the wicked in the world to come. See the Rabbinical authorities cited by Wetstein, p. 756, and below, xx. 6.

The promise here is, that though their bodies may be killed by violence, yet they will not be hurt by that death which is really death (Matt. x. 28); but by being faithful unto death, they will by death gain a crown of life.

12. ἐν Περγάμῳ] at Pergamum. See i. 11.

13. ποῦ κατοικεῖς, ὅπου ὁ θρόνος τοῦ Σατανᾶ] where thou dwellest, namely, where the throne of Satan is. On the construction, see Winer, § 65, p. 539. Thus Christ declares Idolatry to be a work of Satan. Pergamum was noted for its idol-worship (Andreas), particularly for the worship of Æsculapius, whose emblem the serpent was, and who is so represented on the coins of Pergamum, and is called "Pergameus Deus." Martial, ix. 17. Cp. Tacit. Ann. iii. 63. See Wetstein, p. 756. Pergamum had become the property of Rome by bequest from its childless king, Attalus. Hor., 1 Od. i. 12; 2 Od. xviii. 5.

— καὶ οὐκ ἠρνήσω κ.τ.λ.] and thou didst not deny the faith in Me, even in those days of persecution in which was Antipas, that faithful Martyr of Mine.

Antipas was martyred at Pergamum (see Tertull. Scorpiace, cap. 12) in the persecution under Domitian, according to the Acts which describe his death; which, in part at least, are of a later date, but probably have an historical foundation. See Andreas here, and Tillemont, ii. p. 244.

Eusebius (iv. 15), after describing the martyrdom of S. Polycarp at Smyrna, mentions the martyrdom of Carpus, Papylus, and Agathonice, at Pergamum.

There are some varieties in the text here: καὶ after μου is not in B, but it is in A, C; ἐν αἷς is in Elz., but αἷς is not in A, C; αἷς is in B, and retained by Tisch., who reads καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις αἷς Ἀντίπας ὁ μάρτυς μου ὁ πιστός μου (B omits the second μου, but it is in A, C), ὃς ἀπεκτάνθη. Antipas is called that faithful Martyr (μάρτυς) by Christ, Who is "the faithful Martyr" (i. 5; iii. 14). And Stephen is called God's Martyr by St. Paul (Acts xxii. 20); thus the word μάρτυς (witness) has been consecrated by God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, to describe the witness of those who remain faithful unto death, and seal their testimony with their blood.

14. τὴν διδαχὴν Βαλαάμ] the doctrine of Balaam. Num. xxiv. 1—3; xxxi. 16. See above, v. 6, and 2 Pet. ii. 15. Jude 11. This doctrine, which St. Peter and St. Jude had seen in its first rising, had now, in the time of the Apocalypse, brought forth its bitter fruits, in carnal sensuality and recklessness. Cp. Introduction, p. 154.

— τῷ Βαλάκ] to Balak. On the dative case, suggested by the Hebrew ל, see Winer, § 32, p. 203, and Ewald, De Wette here. Cp. Job xxi. 22. The counsel of Balaam to Balak was to entice the Israelites to harlotry, and to the lustful and idolatrous worship of Baal-Peor, by means of the women of Moab and Midian. See Num. xxv. 1—3, and xxxi. 16. 1 Cor. x. 8. Joseph. Antiq. iv. 6.

15. ὁμοίως] likewise. So A, B, C, and Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch.—Elz. has ὃ μισῶ, with many Cursives, and some Versions and Fathers. See v. 6. Perhaps the true reading is ὃ μισῶ ὁμοίως; or ὁμοίως, ὃ μισῶ, likewise, which I hate; and one of the readings, ὁμοίως, may have been absorbed into the other, ὃ μισῶ, or vice versâ, by reason of the similarity of the words.

17. τῷ νικῶντι κ.τ.λ.] to him that overcometh, I will give to him of the manna that is hidden. Christ is the manna on which His people, the true Israel, feed: He "is the living Bread that came down from heaven; and they who eat of this bread shall never die." (John vi. 49—58.) He was therefore typified by the manna, as He Himself declared in His discourse at Capernaum, where He taught the necessity of communion with Himself, as the source of life to the world. (See on John vi., and at end of the chapter, and 1 Cor. x. 3.) The manna which is here promised is hidden, because the life of the true Israelites is "hid with Christ in God." (Col. iii. 3.) They are dead to the world, and buried with Him in Baptism (Rom. vi. 4. Col. ii. 12); and are raised together with Him, and have their conversation or citizenship in heaven (Phil. iii. 20); and are unknown to the world (2 Cor. vi. 9); and are strangers and pilgrims upon earth (1 Pet. ii. 11); but they ever dwell in Christ, and He in them, and live in the light of His countenance; and "the world knoweth them not, because it knew Him not." (1 John iii. 1.) And as the Manna was enshrined in the Holy of Holies, and hidden from the public view (Exod. xvi. 33, 34. Heb. ix. 4), so He is hid from those who believe not, because the God of this world has blinded their eyes. (2 Cor. iv. 3, 4.) And even to the faithful the plenitude of their joy is not yet revealed; "Eye hath not seen it" (1 Cor. ii. 9), but it will be manifested in the Revelation of Christ, 1 John iii. 2.

— καὶ δώσω αὐτῷ ψῆφον λευκὴν] and I will give to him a white stone; that is, remission of sins. In ancient Courts of Justice, the acquittal of the criminal was declared by a majority of white stones, cast into the judicial urn. Ovid, Met. xv. 41, "Mos erat antiquus, niveis atrisque lapillis His damnare reos, illis absolvere culpâ." Christ, the Redeemer of the World, and Judge of Quick and Dead, will pronounce the acquittal of him that overcometh, at the Great day of Assize. So Victorinus, A Lapide, Vitringa, Wolf, and others.

This white stone is not only a stone of acquittal, but it is a tessera of citizenship, and a passport of admission to the spiritual banquet of the life eternal in the heavenly Jerusalem. See next note.

Some Expositors have excepted against the admission of these allusions, as foreign to the mind of the Apocalypse. But the Holy Spirit does not disdain such references as these. See 1 Cor. ix. 24. Phil. iii. 14, and above, v. 10.

The colour white in the Apocalypse is specially assigned to Christ; it is the colour of purity, and holiness, and victory (see below, vi. 2), and this characteristic gives a Christian pertinency to these figures derived from ancient popular usage.

— καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν ψῆφον κ.τ.λ.] and upon the stone (observe the accusative case) a new name written, which no man knoweth save he that receiveth it.

Here is an allusion to other ancient customs, viz., to the practice of giving tokens (σύμβολα, tesseræ), by which persons bound by ties of mutual hospitality might recognize one another

The name which Christ will give is a new name, promised by ancient prophecy (Isa. lxii. 2; lxv. 15), but revealed under the Gospel by Him Who "maketh all things new" (xxi. 5), and admits to the New Jerusalem (iii. 12), and enables to sing the new song (see v. 9); and it is a name which Christ says that no one knows except the receiver, perhaps with an allusion to the practice above noticed, by which it was provided that no one could use the "tessera hospitalitatis," except the party to whom it belonged, and because no one can enter Christ's presence by means of the merits of others: every one must give an account of himself to God, and be rewarded according to his own works (Rom. xiv. 12); and because no one can feel the joy of remission of sins, except he who "knows the plague of his own heart" (1 Kings viii. 38), and whose sins are not only remitted, but covered (James v. 20; cp. Ps. xxxii. 1; lxxxv. 2); and no one can feel the felicity of communion with Christ and admission to His table in heaven, except the saints who are admitted to enjoy those privileges, which to evil men would have no relish, because they have not the spiritual palate by which they are to be tasted. Compare what is said of Christ's Name, xix. 12.

20. ἀλλὰ ἔχω κατὰ σοῦ ὅτι ἀφεῖς κ.τ.λ.] But I have this against thee, that thou sufferest thy wife Jezebel, who calleth herself a propheteſs, and both teacheth and perverteth My servants to commit fornication, and to eat things offered to Idols.

As to the reading of this text here, ἀφεῖς is in A, B, C, and is a form authorized by the LXX, Exod. xxxii. 32. See Winer, G. G. p. 75. And τὴν γυναῖκά σου, thy wife (instead of Elz., τὴν γυναῖκα, the woman), is found in A, B, and many Cursives, and in the Syriac Version, and in Andreas and Arethas, Cyprian and Primasius, and is received by Scholz, Lach., and Tischendorf.

The reading ἡ, who, for ἡ, the article, is approved by Winer, p. 473, but ἡ is authorized by similar examples of abrupt constructions in i. 5; iii. 12; xiv. 12.

The heresy here reprehended is that of those who said that it was not necessary to suffer martyrdom for Christ; and that, provided men had knowledge (γνῶσιν), there was no sin in eating things offered to idols, and in complying with all the requirements of the Idolatrous Persecutors of the Church. Cp. Iren. i. 26. 3, and above, Introduction to the Second Epistle of St. Peter, p. 79, and 2 Pet. ii. 2.

But what is the meaning of thy wife Jezebel?

She is described as calling herself "a propheteſs," and as having children, i. e. disciples. See the use of this word τεκνία in 2 John 1. 4. 13. 3 John 4.

Doubtless a female false Teacher ("hæretica fœmina," says Tertullian, de Pudicit. c. 18) is here condemned, such as in the next age were Priscilla and Maximilla, the prophetesses of Montanus (Euseb. v. 14. 16. 18), and it is observable that Thyatira was infested by the ravages of Montanism (Epiphan. hær. 51; cp. Tillemont, ii. pp. 195—203). It has been remarked by S. Jerome (ad Ctesiphontem), as a characteristic of heresies, that their promoters have usually associated women with themselves in propagating them. Simon Magus had his Helena; Nicolas and Marcion had their female votaries. Apelles had his Philumena. Montanus, Arius, Donatus, were aided by women in their heretical and sectarian designs. See note above, on 2 Tim. iii. 6. The act of teaching publicly in the Church had been forbidden to women by St. Paul writing to the Bp. of Ephesus (1 Tim. ii. 12).

We are not able to ascertain whether this false propheteſs was actually the wife of the Chief Pastor of Thyatira. The name Jezebel is doubtless a symbolical one, like Sodom and Egypt (xi. 8), and Babylon, as used in this book; and is adopted to characterize the wickedness of this false propheteſs, making herself like to the Sidonian Queen, who perverted the Israelites to Idolatry, and destroyed the true prophets of the Lord (1 Kings xvi. 31. 2 Kings ix. 7), and who, as almost all idolaters did, joined harlotry with false worship (1 Kings xviii. 19; xxi. 25). This false propheteſs, thus symbolically designated, may have been the wife of the Bishop. S. Polycarp, the disciple of St. John, writing to the Philippians, says that he is much grieved for the lapse of a certain Priest, called Valens, and of his wife, to whom (he says) may God give true repentance! Polycarp, ad Phil. c. ii.

If this false propheteſs of Thyatira was the wife of the Angel of the Church, then by conniving at the wickedness of a wife like Jezebel, he made himself like unto Ahab, whom Jezebel his wife stirred up (1 Kings xxi. 25); and, if this was the case, here is a warning to Rulers of the Church, not to permit considerations of private affection to interfere with the discharge of public duty. "If the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee, thou shalt not consent unto him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him" (Deut. xiii. 6—8).

But perhaps the word wife is used figuratively here; as the word children is, and as the words "who commit fornication with her" are. And then the word wife would intimate that the Angel of Thyatira, by his weak connivance, and even overweening fondness for this false Propheteſs, treated her as if she were endeared to him as his own partner. He, the Ruler of the Church of Thyatira, who was bound to love, and cherish, and protect that Church espoused to himself in a holy union in Christ, he, by his blind partiality and indulgence, made this false teacher to be as his own consort in spiritual wedlock, and he made himself a partner in her sins (1 Tim. v. 22).

This interpretation seems most in accordance with the tone of the Apocalypse, where the faithful Church is called the wife of the Lamb (xix. 7; xxi. 9. Cp. Isa. liv. 6).

21. οὐ θέλει μετανοῆσαι] she is not willing to repent,—a strong testimony to the freedom of the human will. Cp. Matt. xxiii. 37. Luke xiii. 34, οὐκ ἠθελήσατε. Elz. has οὐ μετενόησεν; but the important reading of the text rests on preponderating authority, and is received by Bengel, Griesb., Matth., Lach., Tisch.

Observe the preposition ἐκ after μετανοεῖν here, and in v. 22; ix. 20, 21, and xvi. 11, showing a complete change of mind, displaying itself in turning from previous acts, and out of a former mode of life, to a new and different practice and habit of existence.

This Epistle to the Church of Thyatira, and the other six Epistles, displaying different forms of errors prevalent in Churches even in the Apostolic age, are fraught with instruction concerning the necessity of Church-Communion.

At Thyatira the Bishop of the Church allowed a Jezebel to teach; he is reproved by Christ for doing so; but the Communion over which he presides is still called a Church by Christ Himself. Its Lamp is not yet removed; and the Angel of the Church is still a Star in Christ's right hand (i. 19). The same remark may be applied to the other Apocalyptic Churches of Asia. Not one of them is represented as free from errors and blemishes in doctrine and discipline. But none of their members are therefore exhorted by Christ to quit their communion.

No man therefore is justified in leaving the communion of a Church which dispenses the Word and Sacraments of Christ by a lawfully appointed and constituted Ministry. There is no just plea for schism, in the allegation that errors in doctrine and discipline prevail in it. No church on earth is perfect. Grave errors existed and were observed by Christ in these Apocalyptic Churches; but none of their members are counselled by Him to secede from them. The Churches themselves are exhorted to repent, and to do their first works (ii. 5), to strengthen the things that remain and are ready to die (iii. 2), or Christ will remove their Lamps (ii. 5). Their members are indeed bound to avoid the leaven of their false doctrine (Matt. xvi. 6. 11), but they are also bound to abide and communicate with those Churches in whatsoever truths of Christ those Churches still continue to hold, and in all His graces that they still continue to minister.

But, if a Church not only tolerates errors in faith and practice, but proceeds to enforce errors as terms of communion with herself; if she requires every one to drink of her cup (xvii. 4); if she makes communion in error to be essential to communion with herself, as the Church of Rome now does; and if she anathematizes and excommunicates those who do not receive those errors as articles of Faith, and as necessary to salvation; then a Schism must ensue, and the sin of the Schism lies at her door. See above, the notes on John ix. 34, and on 1 Cor. i. 2, and vol. i. of the Editor's Occasional Sermons on this text.

22. ἰδοὺ βάλλω αὐτὴν εἰς κλίνην] Behold, I cast her into a bed, i. e. a "bed of sickness and affliction," as contrasted with the bed of sinful indulgence (Prov. vii. 16, 17). Andreas, pp. 213, 214. Bp. Andrewes, i. p. 315. The verb βάλλω, as the Latin jacto, is specially used in this sense. See Matt. viii. 6. 14; ix. 2, ἐπὶ κλίνης βεβλημένον. Lucret. ii. 34,

> "Nec calidæ citius decedunt corpore febres,
> Textilibus si in picturis ostroque rubenti
> Jacteris, quàm si plebeiâ in veste cubandum est."

And the Catena (Cramer, p. 214) rightly explains the word by τὴν ἐπίνοσον, the bed of disease. Our Lord here first threatens the spiritual harlot and her paramours with sickness, and then with death, v. 23.

— τοὺς μοιχεύοντας μετ' αὐτῆς] those who commit adultery with her: those, that is, who are faithless to Me, and are seduced by her. On spiritual faithlessness, described in the Apocalypse as fornication and adultery, see below, xvii. 1—3. Compare the contrast in 2 Cor. xi. 2.

The literal Jezebel was a type of these false teachers in both respects; see above, v. 20.

The diseases consequent on literal harlotry are represented as a warning of the consequences resulting from spiritual fornication. In like manner, fire, the punishment of whoredom (Levit. xxi. 9), is, in the Apocalypse, the penalty of the harlotries of the corrupt Church (xviii. 8).

23. καὶ γνώσονται] and all the Churches shall know that I am He Who searcheth reins and hearts: that is, Who seeth what is most secret. There is no article in the original, and it is not to be inserted in the translation; the sense is, "I search all reins and hearts."

Here is a reference to the pretended γνῶσις of these false Teachers; cp. on 1 John ii. 3. They professed to dive into secret mysteries (see v. 24), and thus they seduced Christ's servants. But the time was coming, when, through their punishment, all should know that it is Christ Who reads the secrets of hearts. Here is another assertion of His Divinity. Christ here adopts the words spoken by Almighty God Himself, describing His own Omniscience, and applies them to Himself. See Ps. vii. 9; xliv. 21. Cp. Jer. xi. 20; xvii. 10.

— κατὰ τὰ ἔργα] according to their works: and not according to their outward professions; another allusion to these false Teachers, who said that, provided a man had knowledge, he needed not do good works; and who subverted moral practice by their licentious doctrines, and even made libertinism a part of their religion. See on 2 Pet. ii. 2. Jude 14, 15.

24. οἵτινες οὐκ ἔγνωσαν τὰ βαθέα] So A, B, C; Elz., βάθη.

— τοῦ Σατανᾶ] as many as did not know the depths of Satan. A reference to the language of these false teachers. They promised to their votaries knowledge (γνῶσις; cp. 1 Tim. vi. 20. 2 Pet. i. 2. 5. 1 John ii. 3. Irenæus, i. 1), and professed to initiate them in its depths or profoundest mysteries, which they said were not to be fathomed by vulgar minds, or even by Apostles themselves (see on 2 Pet. ii. 2). Such language was used by the Gnostics, who called their mysteries "the depths of God." See Irenæus (ii. 22. 3), and Tertullian (adv. Valentin., c. 1).

Our Lord here sternly rebukes them, and condemns their so-called "depths of God" as "depths of Satan;" and He declares that ignorance of those depths is far more blessed than that vaunted knowledge which they promised to their hearers. The words ὡς λέγουσιν, "as they speak," refer to τὰ βαθέα, "the depths,"—a term often in the mouths of these false teachers. See A Lapide, Grotius, Wetst., Bengel, Herder, De Wette.

Or if, with other Expositors, the words "of Satan" are to be included in the quotation, then we must refer them to the Satanic mysteries into which these Gnostics pretended to initiate their hearers: and indeed some of their followers did not hesitate to adore the Evil One himself, such as the Ophites, or Serpent-Worshippers (Philastr., Hær. 1), and Cainites (Ibid.). See Tillemont, ii. p. 21. 121—132. Ittig, p. 120. Oehler, p. 24; and note above, on 1 John iii. 12; and on Jude 11.

— οὐ βάλλω ἐφ' ὑμᾶς ἄλλο βάρος] I cast not upon you any other burden (cp. Acts xv. 28), but what ye have, that hold ye fast, until I am come. Here is a protest from Christ against all additions to the Faith "once delivered to the Saints." See above, Jude 3, and on Gal. i. 8, 9.

The word ἥξω signifies "I shall be come" (adero). It not only bespeaks the Coming of Christ, but His Presence, to execute vengeance.

Observe the contrast between βάλλω here and in v. 22. I cast her into a bed of sorrow and death, but I do not cast any other burden upon you. There is judgment on the one side, and mercy on the other.

26. ὁ νικῶν—δώσω αὐτῷ] As to the structure of the phrase, compare vi. 8; vii. 2; ix. 12. 14; xx. 8.

— δώσω αὐτῷ ἐξουσίαν ἐπὶ τῶν ἐθνῶν] I will give him authority over the nations; that is, over heathens, as opposed to the true Israelites: I will give him authority over the heathen, whether they be false Teachers, such as this Jezebel, who would lead My servants to heathen worship and libertinism, by tempting them to eat sacrifices offered to heathen Idols; or whether they be heathen Persecutors; he will be enabled to prevail over them, and to break them in pieces like potters' vessels, with the iron rod of My Word, which I will put into his hands, and I will endue him with Power to use it. Ps. ii. 8, 9: below, xii. 5; xix. 15.

This is genuine ἐξουσία (authority), a word which was often in the mouths of those who made their Christian liberty to be a cloke of sin. See on 1 Cor. xi. 10. 1 Pet. ii. 16.

This word ἐξουσία expresses lawful dominion; others may usurp power (δύναμιν); but it is only Christ, the King of Kings, Who invests His servants with rightful dominion. Here is a protest against those who imagine some other source of authority besides God. See above, on Rom. xiii 1—3.

27. καὶ ποιμανεῖ] and he shall tend them with a rod of iron. Remark the oxymoron; He shall have the gentleness and love of a Shepherd for his flock (cp. below, vii. 17), but the pastoral crook will become a rod of iron in His hands, to shatter the potter's vessels of false doctrine: cp. xii. 5; xix. 15. He shall receive that Power from Christ, the true Shepherd-King: see Ps. ii. 9.

28. καὶ δώσω, κ.τ.λ.] and I will give to him the morning star, which puts to flight the night, and ushers-in the dawn: an emblem of the victory of Light over Darkness, and of the triumph of the children of light over those false Teachers who are like "wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever" (Jude 13); and therefore a fit emblem of Him Who is the Day-Spring from on high (Luke i. 78), and brings life and immortality to Light, and Whose appearance at the Last Day will be like the Morning Star of Eternity, ushering in that Glorious Day which has no Evening: see xxii. 16.

4. ὀνόματα] names: persons. See Acts i. 15; below, xi. 13.

— οὐκ ἐμόλυναν τὰ ἱμάτια] did not defile their garments: their spiritual attire—in which they were clothed at their baptism, when they put on Christ,—see on Matt. xxii. 11, 12. Gal. iii. 27. Eph. iv. 24—and have not stained it with sin; Jude 23.

— ἐν λευκοῖς] in white raiment—the colour of Christ; vi. 2.

— ἄξιοί εἰσιν] they are worthy: by making a right use of the means of grace offered by Him Who is the Lord our Righteousness (see on 1 Cor. i. 30; and Rom. v. 21), and Who alone can make them worthy; cp. below, xxii. 14.

5. ἐκ τ. βίβλου τ. ζωῆς] from the book of life. See Phil. iv. 3.

7. ὁ ἀληθινός] the true, as opposed to counterfeits. 1 John v. 20.

— ὁ ἔχων τὴν κλεῖν τοῦ Δαυὶδ] He that hath the key of David. The Church of Philadelphia was infested by Judaizing teachers (see v. 9), who claimed to themselves the promises made by God to the Patriarchs and to Jerusalem. Christ here condemns them, and consoles the Church by declaring that He Himself has the key of David, as the Hebrew Prophets predicted of the Messiah, typified by Eliakim (Isa. xxii. 20—22, quoted here by Christ), and that He and He alone can open the door of the true Sion, and admit to David's house. He is David's Lord as well as David's Son (Ps. cx. Matt. xxii. 44). He is the Root as well as the Offspring of David (see below, xxii. 16). He, by the administration of the Holy Sacrament of Baptism, and by the preaching of His Holy Word, unlocks the door of His Church, and admits into His Household, which is the depository of all saving grace (see above, on Matt. xvi. 19). He in Whom all treasures of knowledge and wisdom are hidden (Col. ii. 3), opens those treasures to His people; He Who has the keys of the Gate of the Heavenly Jerusalem (v. 12), will admit His faithful servants to the privileges of its glorious citizenship (cp. Gal. iv. 26. Heb. xii. 22; below, xxi. 2. 10). Cp. above, Introduction, pp. 144, 145.

But the literal Jews, who boast of that name, are not really Jews (see on ii. 9), they are not true confessors of God; they are not "true Israelites," are not "the Israel of God" (Gal. vi. 16), are not children of "faithful Abraham" (see Rom. ii. 28, 29; ix. 6, 7); they are not subjects of David's Kingdom and members of his household; they are not children of Sion; they are indeed a Synagogue—but it is a synagogue of Satan (cp. ii. 9). They who call themselves children of the kingdom, but do not own Christ as their King, will be thrust out of the Kingdom into outer darkness, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth (Matt. viii. 12; xxii. 13. Luke xiii. 28).

8. ἰδοὺ δέδωκα ἐνώπιόν σου θύραν ἀνεῳγμένην] behold, I have given before thee a door opened, which no one is able to shut. Observe, the door is said to be given, given by Christ; and it is an opened door, that is given by Him; cp. on v. 20.

The Judaizing false Teachers affirmed that they themselves had the key of knowledge (Luke xi. 52), and that unless men complied with their requirements they were excluded from God's household and from participation in the privileges of His covenant. This exclusive spirit had been censured by St. Paul, describing their arbitrary usurpations over men's consciences, in his Epistle to the Galatians—their will is "to exclude you" (Gal. iv. 17). And now Christ, Who has the key of David, affirms that He has opened the door to the Gentile Christians of Philadelphia, and that no one can shut it against them. Christ is the Door (John x. 7. 9); and unless these Judaizing Teachers repent, and consent to enter by this one Door, they, who would exclude others, will be shut out from the kingdom of heaven. See preceding note.

St. John's scholar, S. Ignatius, in his Epistle to the Church of Philadelphia, supplies the best commentary on these words of Christ to the same Church. "If any one preaches Judaism, do not ye hearken to him. It is better to receive Christianity from one who is circumcised, than to receive Judaism from one who is uncircumcised. Unless they preach Jesus Christ, they are mere pillars and tombs of the dead, on which the names of men are inscribed" (Ignat. ad Phil. c. 6).

Compare this with what our Lord says here,—He that overcometh, I will make him a pillar in the Temple of My God, and will write upon him the name of My God, and the name of the city of My God, the new Jerusalem, which cometh down from heaven, and My new Name.

S. Ignatius adds, in his Epistle to Philadelphia (c. 9), "The Priests (i. e. of the Old Law; see Bp. Pearson there, p. 419) were good; but better is He Who is the High Priest, Who is entrusted with the true Holy of Holies, Who alone has the charge of the hidden things of God."

Compare our Lord's words here concerning Himself,—Thus saith the Holy One and the true, Who hath the key of David: v. 7.

S. Ignatius then proceeds; "Christ alone is the Door to the Father, the Door through which Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and the Prophets, and the Apostles, and the Church, enter in; all these are thus joined together into unity with God. The holy Prophets preached Christ (cp. there, cap. 5), and the Gospel is the Consummation of Incorruption."

These allusions indicate that the language of the Apocalypse was familiar to S. Ignatius; and they are precisely such as might have been expected from one who was a scholar of St. John, and a Bishop of the Asiatic Church. They also confirm the evidence of the genuineness of the Ignatian Epistles themselves. Cp. the remarks of Mr. J. C. Knight on the Apocalypse, Lond. 1842, pp. 12—15.

word φιλῶ below, in v. 19: cp. note there, and above, on John xxi. 15, 16.

10. τοὺς κατοικοῦντας ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς] those who dwell on the earth: a phrase frequently used in the Apocalypse to characterize earthly men, who "set their affections on things on the earth, and not on things above." See on i. 7, and vi. 10. 15; xi. 10; xii. 12; xiii. 8. 14; xiv. 6; xvii. 2. 8: and cp. note above, on Luke xxi. 35.

11. ἵνα μηδεὶς] that no one take thy crown: a remarkable text, which some have interpreted as if there were a certain number of crowns, which, if some forfeited, others would receive. See Augustine, de correptione, c. 39.

It rather shows—what is evident from other Scriptures—that God willeth "all men to be saved." God has a crown for every one; and no man can lose his own crown, but by his own fault. See above, on 1 Tim. ii. 4; and 1 Cor. viii. 11; and Heb. ii. 9; and 2 Pet. ii. 1; and Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, pp. 194—198.

It is also cited by the Fathers as showing that men may fall from grace. See above, iii. 5. Cyprian, de Hist. Eccles. p. 478.

12. ποιήσω αὐτὸν στῦλον] I will make him to be a pillar in the temple of my God. The Lamp in the Temple at Jerusalem was removed, and the Lamp of any Church on earth may be removed (see ii. 5), but he who overcometh shall be like a Pillar fixed in the Temple of God in the heavenly Jerusalem.

The reference here is probably to the two Pillars in the Temple of Solomon (2 Chron. iii. 17. 1 Kings vii. 21), which were called Jachin (יָכִין, he will establish), and Boaz (בֹּעַז, in him is strength); both names signifying permanence; both therefore aptly symbolizing the elect saints of God in the Temple of the Church glorified. Compare Jer. i. 18. Gal. ii. 9.

In the ancient Temples also of Asia, to which St. John wrote, and of Greece, Pillars of temples were often sculptured in human shape, such as the Caryatides or Canephoræ now standing in the Erectheum at Athens, and the Atlantes, Telamones, and Persæ, of which some specimens are still visible at Pompeii, and are represented in the paintings on the Baths of Titus at Rome.

Observe the adaptation of the promise and reward to the work done. Hold fast what thou hast, in the Church on earth; and thou shalt be a pillar set fast in the Temple of God.

— ἐπ' αὐτόν] upon him; upon his forehead, ix. 4; xxii. 4.

— καινῆς Ἰερουσαλήμ] of the New Jerusalem. The old, literal, Jerusalem had been laid waste by the armies of Rome, and the literal Israel had been scattered abroad throughout the world. But Christ comforts all true Israelites with the assurance that there is now every where, in all parts of the earth, and in all ages of the world, another Jerusalem, a new Jerusalem, the Christian Sion, in which the true Israelites, wherever they may be dispersed, may find a home. See Introduction to 1 Peter, p. 37, and above, pp. 144, 145.

This Jerusalem is also the new Jerusalem in another sense, because it is the royal city of Him Who "makes all things new" (xxi. 3), and in Whom, as the Second Adam, the new regenerate race of mankind has its Father: for whosoever is in Christ, is "a new creature; old things passed away, all things have become new" (2 Cor. v. 17. Cp. 1 John ii. 8. 2 Pet. iii. 13).

In his Gospel St. John never uses the form Ἰερουσαλήμ, but always Ἱεροσόλυμα. In the Apocalypse he never uses the form Ἱεροσόλυμα, but Ἰερουσαλήμ.

He thus seems to mark the difference between the old and new Jerusalem, even by the sound of the name itself; and he appropriates the Hebrew form to the new or Christian Sion, in order to remind both Christians and Jews that the faithful members of Christ the Son of David throughout the world, without respect to race, are now become the only real Jews, the true Israel of God.

— ἡ καταβαίνουσα] On the grammatical anomaly (such as frequently occurs in the Apocalypse), see ii. 20, and below, v. 11.

14. ὁ Ἀμήν] The Amen. See Bp. Andrewes, v. 471.

— ὁ μάρτυς] the true and faithful Witness, who witnessed before Pontius Pilate a good confession (1 Tim. vi. 13). This is He that came by Water and Blood, and there are three that bear Witness on earth, the Spirit, the Water, and the Blood. 1 John v. 8.

— ἡ ἀρχὴ τῆς κτίσεως] the Beginning of the Creation. Not as the Arians erroneously taught, the first of God's creatures, but the uncreated Beginning and energizing Agent of Creation. See here Andreas, Arethas, Vitringa, Hengstenberg, and above, on Col. i. 15; and cp. above, i. 8, and xxii. 13. Christ calls Himself the beginning of the Creation of God, in this Epistle, specially to the Laodiceans, in order that they may not rely on themselves, or look for any good thing except from Him. He therefore counsels them to buy of Him (v. 18). And there may be some reference to the false teaching of those at Laodicea and other places of Phrygia, who substituted Angels as Creators and Mediators in the place of Christ. See above, on Col. ii. 8.

15. ὄφελον] would that thou wert cold or hot. On this use of ὄφελον, see 1 Cor. iv. 8. 2 Cor. xi. 1, and Gal. v. 12. It does not here express an absolute wish, but a relative one. Rather than that thou wert lukewarm I would that thou wert cold or hot. Heathen ignorance is better than Christian indifference (Luke xii. 48. Cp. xxiii. 34. 1 Tim. i. 13). There is more hope of acting on those who have no knowledge of the Gospel, than on those who have a little knowledge, and are self-satisfied in it. This is more fully explained by what follows: "Thou sayest, I am rich, and have need of nothing, and knowest not that thou art the wretched one."

17. ὁ ταλαίπωρος] the wretched one. Observe the article. He who is spiritually poor, and yet imagines himself to be rich, is specially the wretched one: because, not knowing his own need, he does not resort to Him Who alone can give him the true riches.

A strong testimony from Christ against the delusive doctrine of those who allege that personal assurance is the essence of Faith. Contrast the case of the Centurion (Luke vii. 6), and of the Publican (xviii. 14), whom Christ Himself commends.

18. κολλούριον] eyesalve. A word probably derived from κολλύρα, a little round cake; in which form the eyesalve was made. See Wetstein. Hence the Latin "collyrium," Horat. 1 Ep. i. 29, "collyria lippus inungi," where the construction is the same as here. Juvenal, vi. 577.

19. φιλῶ] I dearly love. See above, v. 9.

A tenderer word than ἀγαπῶ, and making this sentence still more emphatic than ἀγαπῶ would do. Some of those whom the world regards as most wretched, are God's darlings. And some of the World's darlings are "the wretched ones" in His sight.

20. ἰδοὺ ἕστηκα ἐπὶ τ. θύραν] Behold, I stand at the door and am knocking.

In all such sentences as that which St. John's Revelation hath, "I stand at the door and knock," the Pelagians' manner of construction was, that to knock is the free external offer of God's grace; to open is the work of natural will, by itself accepting grace, and so procuring or deserving whatsoever followeth. But the Catholic exposition of that, and all such sentences was, that to stand and knock is indeed a work of outward grace, but to open cometh not from man's will without the inward illumination of grace, whereupon afterwards ensueth continual augmentation thereof; not because the first concurrence of the will itself with grace, much less without, doth deserve additions after following; but because it is the nature of God's most bountiful disposition to build forward where His foundation is once laid. The only thing the Catholic Fathers did blame, was the error of them who ascribed any laudable motion, or virtuous desire tending towards heavenly things, to the naked liberty of man's will, the grace of God being severed from it. Hooker, book v. Appendix i. vol. ii. p. 687.

— δειπνήσω μετ' αὐτοῦ] I will sup with him. See John xiv. 23. These promises express the love of Christ for His spouse the Church. Compare the words of the Bridegroom, Cant. v. 2, "It is the voice of my beloved that knocketh, saying, Open to me, my sister, my love."

21. καθίσαι] to sit with Me in My throne. Observe the preposition ἐν, in (not ἐπὶ, upon), here twice, the only two places where this preposition is used with θρόνῳ in the N. T., whereas ἐπὶ is used with other cases of θρόνος often. See Matt. xix. 28; xxv. 31. Rev. iv. 2. 9; v. 1. 7. 13; vi. 16, and passim.

This preposition ἐν appears to intimate admission into and session in the same throne; whereas ἐπὶ represents the act of taking a seat upon a separate throne.

I will grant to him to sit with Me in My throne. This is the climax and the consummation of glory. See above, on ii. 7.

There is a reference here also to the bliss and glory of the Church as the Queen at the right hand of her Lord and King. See Ps. xlv. 10. Cp. above, pp. 123, 124.

CH. IV.] St. John sees heaven opened, and is called up into heaven. He is in the Spirit, and beholds the THRONE of GOD in heaven, and the Four-and-twenty Elders round about the Throne; sitting in white garments and wearing crowns of gold; and in the midst of the Throne, and round about the Throne, the Four-and-twenty Living Creatures; and when the four Living Creatures sing the Trisagion to the BLESSED TRINITY, the Four-and-twenty Elders fall down and worship.

1. εἶδον] I saw: not "I looked," the vision was revealed to him, he did not look for it.

— μετὰ ταῦτα] after these things. These words connect this Vision with St. John's age: whence it appears that the Four-and-twenty Elders and Four Living Creatures do not represent the Church Triumphant in that future heavenly glory, which will not be consummated till the end of time. See below, vv. 4—8.

— θύρα ἀνῳγμένη] a door opened in heaven. Observe here the perfect participle, the door had been opened and was standing open. The veil of the heavenly Holy of Holies had been removed by Christ (Heb. x. 19, 20), and heaven was laid open to the view. There is a comparison, and yet a contrast, between the heavenly Temple, and that which had existed upon earth during the Levitical dispensation, when the way into the Holiest had not yet been made manifest. Heb. ix. 8.

In this heavenly Temple, the Throne of God—which had been typified by the Ark and Mercy Seat in the Holiest Place—is visible; and the Sea and Seven Lights, which are allusive to the Molten Sea in Solomon's Temple (1 Kings vii. 23), and to the Seven-branched Lamp which stood in the Holy Place, and symbolized the Church, and was at some distance from the Mercy Seat of the Divine Throne in the Holy of Holies (see Lightfoot, p. 2055), are here brought near to the Throne of God, v. 6. For "we, who were formerly afar off, are now made nigh to God by the blood of Christ." Eph. ii. 13.

— ἡ φωνὴ ἡ πρώτη—λέγων] the first voice speaking. So the best MSS. and Editions. Remark the connexion of the masculine participle (λέγων), "speaking," with the feminine substantive "voice." The voice is personified into the speaker. Compare the similar construction, where the laws of grammar are made to give way to the powerful emotion in the writer's mind, v. 11; xi. 15; xix. 14. Winer, § 59, p. 466.

— ἀνάβα ὧδε] Come up hither;—immediately I became in the Spirit. The Evangelist being called up into heaven was in the Spirit; and being inspired by the Holy Ghost, he was transported into heaven, as the Apostle St. Paul in his "visions and revelations of the Lord," was caught up into the third heaven. 2 Cor. xii. 2.

3. καὶ ὁ καθήμενος κ.τ.λ.] and he that sitteth on the throne like in sight to a Jasper-stone and a Sardine. He Who sitteth is the TRIUNE GOD (see v. 8). This opinion is not invalidated by the fact that the Lamb is in the midst of the Throne (v. 6), and takes the sealed Roll from Him that sitteth on the Throne (v. 7). It is well observed by A Lapide here, that "the Son as Man can well be said, especially in a sublime Vision like this, to come to God." Our Lord's words on the Cross, Matt. xxvii. 46, and Heb. x. 6, are addressed to the Triune God. Compare the vision of Daniel, vii. 13, where the Son of Man comes to the Ancient of Days.

St. John declares in his Gospel (xii. 41) that the parallel Vision in Isaiah (vi. 1—3), which also contains the Trisagion, was a vision of the glory of Christ; and it was the glory also of the Father and of the Holy Spirit. See note above on John xii. 41, and the note on Col. i. 19. Cp. note below on v. 1.

— ὁ καθήμενος ὅμοιος ὁράσει κ.τ.λ.] He that sitteth is in sight like the Jasper and the Sardine Stone. The Jasper is called κρυσταλλίζων, "like crystal," in xxi. 1; and it is the superstructure of the heavenly City (xxi. 18), and the first of the Twelve Stones, which represent the Apostles of the Lamb (xxi. 14. 19).

Jasper was of various colours, purple, blue, green, and distinguished by its brilliancy and beauty (Plin. xxxvii. 5), and almost always veined with white. Compare the treatise of S. Epiphanius on the Twelve oracular Gems on the pectoral of the High Priest, where the Jasper was the sixth (Exod. xxviii. 19; xxxix. 9); and see Corsi, Pietre Antiche, p. 137. Rom. 1828.

The Sardine stone is red, somewhat fiery and like blood, something similar to Cornelian. See S. Epiphan. l. c., de lapide Sardio, and Corsi, Pietre Antiche, pp. 159, 160.

The Jasper (says Victorinus) is like water; the Sardine is like fire; and thus these stones seem to represent God's Majesty

4 Καὶ κυκλόθεν τοῦ θρόνου θρόνοι εἴκοσι τέσσαρες· καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς θρόνους and Justice as seen in His Judgments: that of the Flood, and that of the Fire of Sodom and the Last Day.

Or rather, the union of these two colours, the one of a brilliant and lively hue, the other of a deeper fiery and darker hue, may perhaps be designed to symbolize the union of Mercy and Glory, with Justice and Majesty in the Godhead, especially in the Gospel Dispensation. (Rom. iii. 26.) Similarly there is a combination of brightness and fire in Ezekiel's Vision (Ezek. i. 4), which also displays the Rainbow (i. 28). And this is illustrated by what follows.

— καὶ Ἶρις] and a Rainbow, like unto an Emerald, round about the throne. On the gender and declension of the adjective ὅμοιος, see Winer, G. G. § 11, p. 64. Cp. Luke ii. 13. Acts xxvi. 19. 1 Tim. ii. 8, 9.

The Rainbow, composed by the joint influences of shower and sunshine, is an emblem of Divine severity blended with Divine Love; a symbol of the dark shower of Divine Judgment illumined by the bright beams of Divine Mercy. Compare the Vision of Ezekiel, i. 28. The Bow is a Record of the Deluge, in which the world was drowned for sin, and speaks of sunshine after storm; and of the Divine Promise that the world should never more be destroyed by water: and yet it is also a silent memento of another Judgment, by fire (see Gen. ix. 13—16, and on 2 Pet. iii. 7).

The LXX never use the word Ἶρις, but τόξον, perhaps for fear lest a confusion might arise in their reader's mind between it and the Iris of ancient Mythology. And the τόξον is a weapon of war, below, vi. 2.

The word Ἶρις occurs again in this book as the characteristic of the Divine Presence in Christ, x. 1. And the Rainbow, formed of sunshine and rain, and also the emblem of Hope, has a fit place in this Vision of the heavenly Church, after the Gospel Dispensation, in which the dark cloud of men's sinful Nature is irradiated by the beams of the Sun of Righteousness (Mal. iv. 2), in the Incarnation of Christ, by which man is reconciled to God, and "Mercy and Truth meet together, Righteousness and Peace kiss each other." Compare the exposition of Aug. (?), who says that "the Bow appears in the cloud when the rain-fraught cloud is illumined by the beams of the sun. So, when the Sun of Righteousness, Who is Light Eternal, irradiated our human nature, then the Bow appeared in the cloud, for the World was reconciled to God, and has Hope of Salvation and heavenly Peace."

The σμάραγδος, Emerald, of a bright green colour, and one of the most brilliant of gems (Plin. xxxvii. 5. Theophrast. de Gemmis, § 44), is the fourth foundation-stone of the heavenly City (xxi. 19), and the third in the pectoral of the High Priest. (Epiphan. l. c.) How different from this Vision of Mercy and Love was the use made of the Emerald by two Emperors of Rome in the age of St. John, in the earthly capital of the world! It is related of Nero that he used the emerald as a specular lens, wherewith he might view with greater delight the bloody conflicts and agonizing struggles of the Roman gladiators in the arena. Plin. l. c. The same is probably true of the Emperor Domitian. One emerald was called Neronian, another Domitian. Corsi, p. 186.

4—6. καὶ κυκλόθεν] and round about the throne twenty-four thrones (θρόνοι, cp. v. 1. 6, 7), and upon the thrones I saw the (τοὺς) twenty-four Elders sitting, clothed in white raiment, and on their heads crowns (στεφάνους, i. e. crowns of victory, see vi. 2) of gold.

And out of the Throne proceed lightnings and voices and thunders.

And seven Lamps of fire burning before the Throne, which are the Seven Spirits of God.

And before the Throne, as it were, a sea of glass like crystal.

And in the midst of the Throne, and round about the Throne, four Living Creatures (ζῶα) full of eyes, before and behind. And the first Living Creature like a Lion, and the second Living Creature like a Calf, and the third Living Creature having the face of a Man, and the fourth Living Creature like an Eagle flying. And the four Living Creatures, each of them having six wings, and they have no rest night or day, saying, Holy, Holy, Holy.

As to the translation of this passage, it must first be observed—

(1) That whereas our Authorized Version often introduces the past tense in the rendering of it (e. g. "one sat," v. 2; "He that sat was," v. 3; "about the Throne were, and they had crowns of gold, and voices proceeded," v. 5; and "there were seven lamps and there was a sea; and the first beast was like," &c.); in no instance does St. John use a past tense here. The Vision represents the Everlasting Glory of God, and the ever-present Adoration of Heaven.

(2) The Authorized Version renders the word ζῶα by beasts.

But the translation Living Creatures is to be preferred on many accounts. It is more accurate, as declaring the life (ζωή) in these heavenly beings, and as identifying them with the Living Creatures in the parallel Vision of Ezekiel, where they are called ζῶα by the LXX (Ezek. i. 20; x. 15. 17. 20), the rendering of the Hebrew חַיּוֹת (hayyoth), living creatures, which are all collected into one חַיָּה (hayyah), living creature (Ezek. i. 20), a name connecting them with the Ever-Living One, Jehovah Himself, and with Christ who is ὁ ζῶν, "the Living One, and the Author of life." (John i. 4. Rev. i. 18.) And it obviates the confusion which, by the use of the word Beasts, might arise between these heavenly Animals and the mystical Beasts (θηρία) in chapter xiii. 1. 11, which are opposed to the Lamb, Ἀρνίον, i. e. to Christ (xvii. 14); whereas the Lamb is here in the midst of these Living Creatures, and they adore Him (v. 6. 14).

What then is meant by the Twenty-Four Elders and by the Four Living Creatures?

They do not represent men in their human character and individuality. The vision is in heaven: and the time to which it refers is prior to the Day of Judgment, and these beings are seated in glory in heaven. But no man will be in heaven before the General Resurrection (see on Luke xvi. 22, and xxiii. 43). Indeed St. John himself here represents the souls of holy men as still under the altar praying for the coming of Christ, and for the consummation of their bliss and glory (see vi. 9). They are not yet seated in glory.

Some Expositors have supposed that the Living Creatures represent men, because they say to the Lamb, "Thou, O Lord, hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood out of every kindred and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God Kings and Priests, and we shall reign on the earth" (v. 9, 10).

But this translation, found in our Authorized Version, is grounded on incorrect readings of the Original.

The genuine text, as restored by Lachmann and Tischendorf and others, does not admit the word us after "redeemed," and has the word "them" instead of "us" after "made," and instead of "we shall reign" it reads "they reign," thus marking the difference between men and the Living Creatures and Elders. See note, v. 9, 10.

Thus the words of St. John do in fact declare, that these Living Creatures and Elders are not men; and this is one of the many passages in the Apocalypse where the sense has been cleared up in modern times by more accurate collations of ancient Manuscripts.

Nor do these Elders and Living Creatures represent Angels. They are expressly distinguished from Angels in v. 11, and vii. 11. The Living Creatures and Elders are also distinguished from men and from Angels in v. 14, where they are represented as saying the Amen to the Hymn of Praise sung by all men and Angels.

What then do they represent?

The answer may be given in the words of the Psalmist, "Thy Word, O God, endureth for ever;" or, as the Original expresses it, "stands for ever," "is settled for ever," in heaven. Ps. cxix. 89.

It is probable that the Four-and-Twenty Elders represent the Four-and-Twenty Books of the Old Testament; and the Four Living Creatures represent the Four Gospels.

In behalf of this opinion it may be remarked, that the Elders are introduced as forming a definite and well-known body: though they had not been mentioned before, St. John calls them here "the Four-and-Twenty."

Now, the Hebrews call the Old Testament by this name, "The Twenty-Four." It is the title prefixed to their Bible even to this day. See Hottinger, Thes. Philog. 1659, p. 101, who says, "The Old Testament is called by the Jews 'The Twenty-Four,'" —עֶשְׂרִים וְאַרְבָּעָה Viginti quatuor. "Tot enim Veteris Testamenti sunt libri Canonici; Galat. de Arcan. Cathol. This exposition of the meaning of the Twenty-Four Elders in this Version dates from the third century after Christ. It is given in the Commentary of Victorinus, Bishop of Pettau, who says, "Veteris Testamenti sunt Libri qui accipiuntur Viginti Quatuor," and is confirmed by S. Jerome, who, more than any of the Fathers, was conversant with the Hebrew opinions concerning the Old Testament; and says that "the Twenty-Four Books of the Old Testament are represented in the Apocalypse of St. John under the figure of the Twenty-Four Elders, adoring the Lamb" (Jerome, Prolog. Galeat. tom. i. p. 318, sqq., ed. Paris, 1693); and, speaking of certain Apocryphal books, he says that they are not "admitted among the Four-and-Twenty Elders" (in Ezram, i. p. 1106). The same interpretation is adopted by Primasius, Bishop of Adrumetum, "We receive Twenty-Four Books of the Old Testament as the Twenty-Four Elders sitting on their thrones;" and by Ambrosius Ansbertus (Bibl. Patr. Mar. xiii. p. 464), and by the Venerable Bede and Haymo, Bishop of Halberstadt, in their Commentaries on the Apocalypse.

These Four-and-Twenty Books may fitly be called Elders, as belonging to the older dispensation. Compare Heb. xi. 2, where the word elder is used in that sense. And they may well be represented as enshrined here in the heavenly Temple, as the Two Tables of the old Covenant were in the Holy of Holies in the Ark (Exod. xxv. 21. Deut. x. 2. 5. Heb. ix. 4), and as the Five Books of Moses were, by the side of the Ark (see Deut. xxxi. 9. 24—26. Josh. xxiv. 26), which was the Throne of God (Exod. xxv. 18—22. Num. vii. 89. 1 Sam. iv. 4. 2 Sam. vi. 2. Ps. lxxx. 1; xcix. 1).

Fitly also are they represented as seated on thrones, indicating the permanence of God's Word, which will remain when heaven and earth have passed away (Isa. xl. 8. Matt. xxiv. 35. Luke xvi. 17). The "Word of the Lord endureth for ever" (1 Pet. i. 25), and by it the World will be judged at the Last Day (John xii. 48). And well are they displayed as bearing crowns of Victory; for though the World may rebel against God's Word, yet it will triumph over all its opponents. See below, on xi. 11, 12.

In confirmation of this exposition it may be observed, that one of the main purposes of the Apocalypse is to console and strengthen the faithful who might otherwise be shaken in their faith by the indignities which the Word of God was to endure at the hands of evil men, some denying its Inspiration, some withholding it from the people, and adding the Apocrypha as of equal authority to the Old Testament, others setting at nought its precepts, and violating its laws, and defying its judgments.

Observe also, the Twenty-Four Elders are represented as sitting on thrones even by the side of the Triune God (v. 4). They have therefore a divine character. And yet they are also represented as falling down and casting their crowns before His Throne (v. 10). They have therefore also a human element. And in accordance with this union Ezekiel describes the Living Creatures as having a "man's" hands under their wings (i. 8; x. 8. 21). Such is Holy Scripture. The Spirit who speaks in Scripture is Divine, but the instrument used by Him is human. Scripture has divine wings, but it has a man's hand under its wings. It is the Voice of God to the world; but it is also the Voice of Man ascribing all praise to God.

This Interpretation is further confirmed by the combination here and in other parts of the Apocalypse of the Four-and-Twenty Elders with the Four Living Creatures. See here and v. 14; vii. 11; xiv. 3; xix. 4.

The Four Living Creatures have been generally supposed by Ancient Expositors to signify the Four Gospels.

This Interpretation comes from the school of St. John himself. It is found in the writings of S. Irenæus, the scholar of S. Polycarp, the disciple of St. John. Christ is "the Divine Word," says S. Irenæus (III. ii. 8), "who is the Creator of all, and sitteth upon the Cherubim, and holds all things together; Who, having been manifested to men, gave us the quadriform Gospel, which is held together by one Spirit; as David, praying for His Advent, says, 'Thou that sittest above the Cherubim show Thyself' (Ps. lxxx. 1). For the Cherubim of Ezekiel have four faces, and their faces are emblems of the Son of God. For the first Living Creature (says St. John) is like a Lion, and shows Christ's royal character; the second is like a Calf, and shows His sacrificial and priestly office; and the third has the face of a Man, and shows His Advent in our human nature; and the fourth like an Eagle flying, shows the gift of the Spirit flying down and lighting on His Church. And the Gospels all harmonize with each other; and Christ sitteth upon them .... And thus the Living Creatures are Quadriform, and Quadriform also is the Gospel."

This exposition derives light from the consideration that while in the parallel vision of Ezekiel, each of the four Living Creatures is represented as having the face of a Lion, a Calf, a Man, and an Eagle, in the Vision of St. John, the first Living Creature is described as like a Lion, the second as a Calf, the third as a Man, the fourth as an Eagle. This is applicable to the Gospels. Each has a character of its own; one Gospel describing more minutely the Royal Office, another the sacrificial character of Christ, another displaying His human Nature more clearly, and another exhibiting His Divine; and yet each of the four Gospels presents Christ as King, and Victim, and Priest, and as Man and God. As S. Gregory says (on Ezekiel), "Whatever is in one Gospel is in all the four, for all proclaim One Christ, God and Man. And yet each Gospel has its own character; and so the Living Creatures, each according to their own special purpose, preach Him Who is Man by being born for us, a Calf by dying for us, a Lion by rising in triumph, and an Eagle by His Ascension into heaven." And S. Victorinus says, in the third century, "that these evangelical declarations of God's Spirit are four and yet one, because they proceed from one Divine Source, like the four Rivers of Paradise flowing from one head" (Gen. ii. 10).

This view had been represented by the language of Ezekiel, who calls the living creatures four, and yet one (p. 177). See above. It had also, perhaps, been typified by the arrangements of the Tabernacle.

The Tabernacle of the Israelites—the figure of the Universal Church—was quadrangular. Encamped on the East side were three tribes, the chief being that of Judah, with the ensign of a Lion. (See the Rabbinical Authorities in Mede's works, pp. 437. 594, and Lightfoot, i. p. 2058, compared with Num. i. 52, and ii. 2—31.) On the West were three other tribes, the chief being Ephraim, with the ensign of an Ox. On the South were three other tribes, the chief being Reuben, with the ensign of a Man. On the North were three other tribes, the chief being Dan, with the ensign of an Eagle. Cp. below, on vii. 5—8, and on St. Luke, p. 163, 2nd ed.

Thus these four Emblems typify the quadriform unity and completeness of the whole Church looking to the four Cardinal points of heaven, and diffused in the four quarters of the Earth; and they aptly represent the Four Gospels, to be borne as a Standard by the Army of the spiritual Israel—the Christian Church—to the four corners of the World.

On the whole it may be affirmed, that this exposition, which regards the Four Living Creatures as emblems of the Four Gospels, is sanctioned by the concurrent testimony of ancient Expositors. It may be seen in Victorinus, Bishop and Martyr in the third century, who says, "Quatuor animalia sunt quatuor Evangelia." Or as Victorinus here expresses it, "Christ in the Gospels is like a flying Eagle, because He overcame death, and spreads out His Wings and soars aloft, and protects His people with His Wings." See below, xii. 14; and the Greek Interpreters in Catenâ, p. 245, thus speak, "In these Living Creatures we see the offices of Christ; in the Lion His Royalty, in the Calf His Sacrifice; in the Man His Incarnation; in the Eagle His bestowal of the heavenly gift of the Holy Ghost, which quickens all."

S. Jerome says (Epist. 50, ad Paulin., and Procem. ad Matth.), that "the Four Gospels are the Fourfold Chariot of God, and the true Cherubim, full of eyes and mutually interwoven with each other. One is like a Lion, another a Man, another a Calf, another a flying Eagle. Whence," he adds, "it is evident, that we may acknowledge only Four Gospels and no more; and must reject all other books pretending to Evangelical authority." Similar language is used by S. Ambrose, S. Augustine (in passages already quoted in the Introduction to the Four Gospels, p. xli, second edition, and in the Introduction to St. Luke, p. 163, and on St. Luke xv. 23), and S. Gregory (in Ezek. i. and x.), and by Andreas, Primasius, Bede, Haymo, and others. And though there is some discrepancy among these writers as to the particular Gospels which the Four Living Creatures respectively represented (see on the Gospels, Introd. p. xlii), yet this discrepancy itself shows that these expositors do not merely transcribe one another's words, but derive their interpretations from independent sources, and serves to confirm the testimony in which they all agree, that the Four Living Creatures represent the Four Gospels.

If it should be objected, that it is too bold a figure to represent Books as living, it must be remembered that we are contemplating a heavenly Vision; and that the imagery of the Apocalypse, like that of Hebrew prophecy, is characterized by sublime and glowing aspirations; and that our ordinary estimates of Holy Scripture fall short of its true dignity, as portrayed by God Himself in Holy Writ. We are accustomed to regard Scripture as a book to be read, and we are too apt to forget its living energy. Our familiarity with it has sometimes tended to its disparagement. And the tone of Criticism with which it has been handled by many in later days, has greatly tended to impair the popular reverence for the Divine Word.

But God Himself describes Holy Scripture as a living agent. The Scripture speaks (Mark xv. 28. Rom. iv. 3; ix. 17; x. 11; xi. 2. Gal. iv. 30. 1 Tim. v. 18. James ii. 8. 23). Especially is this attribute assigned to it in St. John's Gospel (John vii. 38. 42; xix. 37). The Scripture foresees (Gal. iii. 8). God's Word is said to be Life (Deut. xxxii. 47). The Scripture is animated by the breath of God (2 Tim. iii. 16). The Sacred Oracles are alive (ζῶντα, Acts vii. 38), a phrase akin to the Living Creatures of the Apocalypse. Descriptions of the Written Word of God are often blended together with, and run into, descriptions of the Incarnate Word Himself; as in that sentence of St. Paul, "The Word of God is living (ζῶν), and sharper than any two-edged sword" (Heb. iv. 12), and it is said to have the power of quickening or giving life (Ps. cxix. 50; cp. James i. 18).

The truth of this interpretation seems to have been felt by the Church of Christ. The Four Gospels were placed on thrones in the ancient Councils of Christendom. In the great Council of Ephesus, as S. Cyril says (Labbé, Council iii. p. 1044), "the Holy Gospel was on a throne preaching to the venerable Bishops, 'Judge ye right judgment.'" And Christian Art, both in Sculpture and Painting, has adopted the four Apocalyptic Living Creatures as symbols of the Four Gospels. Cp. Thomasius, Thesaurus Theologico-Philologicus, ii. p. 57.

Lastly, the soundness of an interpretation of a passage of Scripture, especially of a prophetical book like the Apocalypse, may be estimated and tested by the practical and doctrinal religious uses which are subserved by the Interpretation.

The uses of the present Interpretation are manifold.

(1) It rescues the mind of the reader from the danger to which he is exposed in modern times of disparaging Holy Scripture.

This Vision confirms the Faith of the Church in the Word of God; and it seems to be a special purpose of St. John in the Apocalypse to render this important service to the Church of Christ. It raises our eyes, and invites us to regard God's Word "as enduring for ever in heaven;" not as a lifeless Volume, but as personified, as enthroned, as wearing a crown of Victory. It teaches us to regard the Gospel, as full of eyes, as winged, and as proclaiming the fourfold character of Christ, and as the Throne of God on which He sits, and as His Chariot on which He rides. Lest, however, from the glory thus ascribed to Holy Scripture, we should imagine it to be proposed as an object of our adoration, the Vision represents the Elders and Living Creatures as worshipping the Triune God, and ascribing Glory to the Lamb. What St. John says of the Gospel, is true of all the Scriptures. "These are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through His Name." (John xx. 31.)

One use, therefore, of this exposition, is to remind us of the Divine Inspiration of Holy Scripture, and to guard us against all attacks of the Evil One against God's Word.

(2) Another practical use of this Interpretation is, as was suggested by S. Jerome and others in ancient days, to guard us against receiving any other Books as Scripture, which are not Scripture.

There are Twenty-four Elders in the Vision; and the ancient Church of God received only Twenty-four Books of the Old Testament; Christ Himself received them, and them only (see on Luke xxiv. 44). But the Church of Rome, although she professes great reverence for S. Jerome, and especially for his services in the cause of Holy Scripture (see the Collect in her Breviary for his festival, Sept. 30), and even now inserts his Prologues in her Vulgate, yet in direct opposition to S. Jerome, has added other books (viz. the Apocrypha) as equally inspired with the Books of the Old Testament; and anathematizes all who do not receive those other Books as of equal authority with those which alone were received as inspired by the ancient Church of God, and by Jesus Christ Himself. (Council of Trent, Session iv.)

The Vision, therefore, thus interpreted, serves as a safeguard against those who would adulterate the divine Word with human alloy.

5. ἀστραπαὶ, κ.τ.λ.] lightnings and voices and thunders. This adjunct confirms the opinion that St. John is here speaking of God's Word. Thunder is the Voice of God. St. John himself, as a preacher of God's Word, was named by Christ "a son of Thunder." See on Mark iii. 17; cp. below, x. 3.

— ἑπτὰ λαμπάδες] seven torches of fire: λαμπὰς in this book does not mean a lamp (see viii. 10), but a torch (cp. John xviii. 3); and these seven torches or flambeaux of fire burning before the Throne, are contrasted with the Star which fell as a torch from heaven (viii. 10); cp. Welstein, i. p. 507; and Trench, Synonyms, N. T. p. 193.

— τὰ ἑπτὰ πνεύματα] the seven spirits: see above, i. 4, and below, v. 6.

6. ὡς θάλασσα ὑαλίνη ὁμοία κρυστάλλῳ] as a Sea of glass, like unto crystal. See below, xv. 2, 3. Sea, in this book, represents the element of tumult and confusion in the lower world (see xiii. 1). But here, by way of contrast, there is, in the heavenly Church, a Sea of glass, expressive of smoothness and brightness, and this heavenly sea is of crystal: declaring that the calm of heaven is not like earthly seas, ruffled by winds, but is crystallized into an eternity of peace.

8. λέγοντες] saying. So A, B, and thirty Cursives.—Elz. has λέγοντα. This masculine participle, joined with the neuter ζῶα, expresses strongly the personal vitality of the Living Creatures.

— Ἅγιος, ἅγιος, ἅγιος] Holy, Holy, Holy. The thrice holy is an Eucharistic ascription of Glory to the Ever-Blessed Trinity, and is derived from the Ancient Church of God (Isa. vi. 3), and is adopted by the Christian Church, which uses it in the Te Deum and in the Trisagion at the Holy Eucharist.

The Church has also declared her mind on the sense of these words, by appointing this Chapter of the Apocalypse as the Epistle to be used on the Festival of Trinity Sunday.

9, 10. καὶ ὅταν] And when the Living Creatures shall give (δώσουσι) glory and honour and thanks to Him that sitteth on the Throne, Who liveth for ever and ever, the Twenty-four Elders will fall down (πεσοῦνται) and will worship (προσκυνήσουσι) Him that liveth for ever and ever, and will cast (βαλοῦσι) their crowns before the Throne, saying,—

9. ὅταν δώσουσι] when they shall give: as often as they shall give. On this use of the future, see Winer, § 42, p. 276.

10. πεσοῦνται—προσκυνήσουσι—βαλοῦσι] The preponderance of MSS. has the future tense here (and not the present), and so Griesb., Scholz, Tisch. These future tenses seem to intimate that the action was still future when St. John wrote the Apocalypse. They also show, that the Adoration rendered by the Four Living Creatures is the signal for the Adoration to be given by the Twenty-Four Elders.

This harmonizes with the Exposition offered above. The Four Gospels proclaim the glory and the love of the Eternal Trinity, and teach the World to worship the Unity, in the power of the Divine Majesty; and they contain the Divine Commission to baptize all Nations into the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Thus they are ever singing in clear strains a doxology—the Holy, Holy, Holy—to the Ever-Blessed Trinity. Thus the Gospels give the signal for the full expression of glory and praise rendered to God by the Old Testament.

The Evangelical Trisagion of the Four Living Creatures evokes the Choral Antiphon of the Elders. The New Testament, in revealing the doctrine of the Ever-Blessed Trinity, displays the things which Prophets and Kings and Righteous men of old desired to see but had not seen (Matt. xiii. 17. Luke x. 24. Rom. xvi. 25, 26. Heb. xi. 13); the Mysteries of God's grace in the Lamb Who was slain, not only for the literal Israel, but to redeem all men, of "every kindred and tongue and people and nation, and to make them Kings and Priests to God" (Eph. i. 9; iii. 3—9. Col. i. 26). The types and prophecies of the Old Testament, which had before lain in dimness and obscurity, were lighted up by the Gospel; and what was before dumb brake forth into singing (Isa. xliv. 23), and gave glory to the Triune God.

They cast their crowns before the throne—a mark of subjection, and act of homage. Tacit., Annal. xv. 29, "Ad quam (effigiem Neronis) progressus Tiridates sublatum capiti diadema subjecit." Wetst.

11. τὴν δόξαν] the glory, the honour, the power. To Thee, and to Thee alone, O God, it all belongs: cp. v. 13.

— διὰ τὸ θέλημά σου] for Thy will and pleasure. See Matt. xxvii. 18, διὰ φθόνον. Eph. ii. 4, διὰ τὴν πολλὴν ἀγάπην. Winer, p. 355.

— ἦσαν] they were: so the best MSS., and Griesb., Lach., Tisch.—Elz. εἰσι. But ἦσαν is very expressive, and far preferable. No sooner didst Thou will their Being, than they were. "God said, Let there be Light, and there was Light" (Gen. i. 3), φῶς ἐγένετο, it was made, and it existed (ἦν).

Ch. V. St. John sees a Roll upon (ἐπὶ) the right hand of the Triune God. It is sealed down (κατ-εσφραγισμένον) with seven seals. No one is able to open the Roll and to reveal its contents, but the "Lion of the Tribe of Judah" (v. 5), who is also here called the "Root of David," and the "Lamb who had been slain" (v. 6).

Throughout the Apocalypse Jesus Christ, Who is the Λόγος or "Word of God" (xix. 13), is represented as the Person by Whom God's Revelations are given to the world; see above, i. 1.

He comes, and takes the Roll out of the right hand of Him Who sitteth on the throne; and when he has taken the Roll, the Four Living Creatures and the Twenty-Four Elders sing a new song, and praise Him Who has redeemed men of all nations by His blood, and has made them Kings and Priests to God, and they reign on the earth (v. 10).

This ascription of praise by the Living Creatures, and by the Elders, is followed by a hymn of Adoration to the Lamb, sung by myriads of Angels, and offering worship to the Lamb in terms (v. 12) like those which had been addressed to the Triune God (iv. 11).

Lastly, all Creatures in all places unite in giving glory to the Triune God and to the Lamb (vv. 13, 14).

1. εἶδον ἐπὶ τὴν δεξιάν] I saw upon the right hand of Him that sitteth on the Throne a Roll written within and on the back, sealed down with seven seals. The word βιβλίον ought not to be rendered here Book, but Roll, in order that the dominant idea of the gradual unrolling of the Volume, and of the unfolding of its contents, may be kept before the eye of the reader. The Roll is ἐπὶ τὴν δεξιάν, upon the right hand; the word right hand is the accusative case (τὴν δεξιὰν, not τῇ δεξιᾷ, dative), which seems to indicate the truth that the Roll was not placed in it by any external power; but that it lies upon it as upon its foundation. The Roll of the World's destiny rests upon God's hand: cp. below, xx. 1; and Ps. xcv. 4, "In His hand are all the corners of the Earth," and all the events of Futurity.

The Roll is sealed down, because it is a prophetic roll, and because the future is hidden from human eyes; and it is upon the right hand of Him that sitteth on the Throne, because the sufferings of the Christian Church, which are contained in this Roll, are under the control of God, and nothing can happen to her without His providential dispensation, Who ever sitteth (observe the present tense) on the throne. Cp. Ps. xcix. 1, "He sitteth between the Cherubim, be the Earth never so unquiet."

The Lamb, who is Christ, in His Human Nature—suffering—and meriting and obtaining all glory and power by His sufferings and perfect obedience (Phil. ii. 6—10), comes and takes the Roll out of the hand of Him that sitteth on the Throne. "He, as Son of Man (says Primasius), receives from the Father, and from Himself, that dispensation which is from both those Persons of the Trinity; for both sit together with the Holy Spirit on the Throne of God." See the language of St. Paul (Col. i. 19), signifying the consent of Christ as God to His own assumption of the nature of man. "According to His humiliation as man," says Aug.? here, "Christ received the roll, and not according to His Godhead:" and he confirms this statement by the words of Christ Himself, "All power is given to Me," i. e. as Man. Matt. xxviii. 18. "Christ (says Bede) is here represented as a Lamb according to His suffering Manhood, taking a roll from the right hand of God. But in the glory of His Godhead He is ever at God's Right Hand." Cp. note above, iv. 3.

The seals of this prophetic Roll are seven, because seven is the sacred symbol of completeness; and because this Roll reaches to the rest or Sabbath of Eternity. As our Authorized Version rightly says in the heading of this chapter, "It contains a prophecy to the End of the World." See above, Introduction, p. 147; and below, viii. 1.

It is written within and on the back (ὄπισθεν, or as some MSS. read, ἔξωθεν—which is an explanatory gloss—outside)—another mark of its fulness and completion. According to ancient usage, a parchment roll was first written on the inside, and if the inside was filled with writing, then the outside was used, or back part of the roll; and if that also was covered with writing, and the whole available space was occupied, the book was called opistho-graphos (written on the back side; Lucian, Vit. Auction. 9. Plin. Epist. iii. 5); or written "in aversâ chartâ," Martial, viii. 22; whence Juvenal, describing a roll filled with writing to overflowing, says (Sat. i. 6),

> "—— summi plenâ jam margine libri
> Scriptus, et in tergo, necdum finitus, Orestes."

See Wetstein, p. 768.

This prophetic roll sealed up, filled with writing, and sealed with seven seals, contains a prophecy reaching to the end of the World. This is the uniform Exposition of all Ancient Interpreters, from the third century for a thousand years in uninterrupted succession.

The neglect of this fundamental truth has led to much perplexity and embarrassment in some modern Interpretations of the Apocalypse.

In order to have a clear idea of the Vision which now ensues,

2 Καὶ εἶδον ἄγγελον ἰσχυρὸν κηρύσσοντα ἐν φωνῇ μεγάλῃ, Τίς ἄξιος ἀνοῖξαι

we must imagine a Roll wrapped round a cylindrical wand, and sealed down with seven Seals (cp. Jahn, Archæol. § 88. Winer, R. W. B., ii. p. 422. Art. Schreibkunst). When one Seal is broken by the hand of Christ, a portion of the Roll is unwrapped, and its contents are disclosed; then a second Seal is broken; and so on, till the seven Seals are opened, and the whole Volume is unrolled.

This prophetic Roll or Volume is not traced with alphabetical characters, but with hieroglyphical symbols. The first symbol is exhibited at the opening of the first Seal, and the second symbol at the second Seal; and each symbol portrays the future state of the Christian Church in that period to which it refers; and so on, in succession, till we are brought, with the opening of the seventh Seal, to the final condition of the Church on earth.

This Roll, as we shall see, reveals a brief and rapid view of the successive sufferings of the Church of Christ from St. John's age to the end of the world.

— καὶ οὐδεὶς ἠδύνατο] and no one was able to open the roll. Cp. Acts i. 7; and on the sense of the negative particles here and in the next verse, see Winer, pp. 435, 436.

4. ἐγὼ ἔκλαιον πολλά] I was weeping much. Observe the imperfect tense; and ἔκλαιον, a stronger word than ἐδάκρυον. See Matt. xxvi. 75. Mark xiv. 72. Luke xix. 41.

5, 6. ἐνίκησεν ὁ λέων] The Lion who is (ὁ ὤν) of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, overcame—prevailed—to open the roll and its seven seals . . . And I beheld, in the midst of the Throne and of the Four Living Creatures, and in the midst of the Elders, a Lamb standing, as it had been slain.

On the infinitive after ἐνίκησεν, see Winer, § 44, p. 284.

Christ alone is able to open the sealed book, and to reveal the future. See above, i. 1. Hence S. Hippolytus (p. 159, ed. Lagarde), quoting this chapter (vv. 1, 2. 6—9), remarks, that it is through Him alone that the sacred counsels of the Godhead are unlocked and revealed to man.

Observe the contrast between this manifestation of Christ, and that of Moses coming from the Mount. Moses veiled his face, but Christ unseals the Book. Cp. on 2 Cor. iii. 7. 13. 15.

Observe ὁ ὤν, He that is, He that exists, from the tribe of Judah; denoting Christ's continuance and energy. Cp. i. 4.

Observe also ἐνίκησεν here; He conquered: a word which prepares the way for the description in the first Seal (vi. 2), where Christ is represented as going forth conquering and to conquer (νικῶν, καὶ ἵνα νικήσῃ).

Here are three names of Christ;—the LION, the ROOT of DAVID, the LAMB.

The combination of these figures, all descriptive of the same person, reminds the reader, that the language of the Apocalypse is not literal, but symbolical, and is to be interpreted accordingly.

The words "LION of the Tribe of Judah," the royal tribe, bespeak Christ's sovereignty, and are derived from Jacob's prophecy (Gen. xlix. 9, 10).

The name, "ROOT of David," proclaims that Christ is more than a Branch or Rod from out of the stem of Jesse (Isa. xi. 1). It declares that He is the origin of David. And here St. John joins with Isaiah, who describes Christ as the Rod of Jesse, and also the Root of Jesse. He is the Rod because He is Man: He is the Root because He is God. Cp. Andreas, p. 253.

He is also the Lamb: meek and innocent (Isa. liii. 7. Acts viii. 32); the true Paschal Lamb (1 Cor. v. 7), who delivers the spiritual Israel from the wrath of God, and from the sword of the destroying Angel; and they are redeemed with His precious blood, "as of a Lamb without blemish and without spot" (1 Pet. i. 19). He is the Lamb of God Who taketh away the Sin of the World (John i. 29).

It is remarkable, that, in describing Christ as the Lamb, St. John, in his Gospel, uses the word Ἀμνὸς (Agnus) (John i. 29. 36), and so do other writers of the New Testament (1 Pet. i. 19. Cp. Acts viii. 32); and they never use Ἀρνίον. But, in the Apocalypse, St. John never uses the word Ἀμνὸς, but always uses Ἀρνίον in this book, where the word ἀρνίον occurs about thirty times. For the probable reason of this difference of usage see below, on xvii. 3.

The LAMB is here represented standing, as having been slain (cp. Isa. liii. 7. Jer. xi. 19). Although Christ was slain, yet He stands. He was not overthrown. On the contrary, by falling He stood, and makes us (who fell in the first Adam) to stand upright in Him who is the Second Adam. His πτῶμα is our σῶμα (see Matt. xxiv. 28). By dying He overcame Death; by His Death He destroyed him that had the power of it, even the Devil (Heb. ii. 14. Col. ii. 15. Hos. xiii. 14).

Observe here the contrast between the Ἀρνίον ὡς ἐσφαγμένον, the Lamb, as it were slain, in order to live for ever (see v. 12, and i. 18), and to be the cause of eternal Life to all; and what is said below in the Thirteenth Chapter concerning the head of the Beast, as it were slain to death (θηρίον, ὡς ἐσφαγμένον εἰς θάνατον, xiii. 3), and the declaration that he goeth to destruction (εἰς ἀπώλειαν ὑπάγει, xvii. 8. 11).

The Lamb is here displayed as in the midst (ἐν μέσῳ) of the Throne; "In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily" (Col. ii. 9), and He "is in the bosom of the Father" (John i. 18).

He is also described as in the midst of the Living Creatures, and of the Elders: Christ, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the World (xiii. 8), is the central figure of the Four Gospels, and also of all the Books of the Old Testament. See Luke xxiv. 25—27. 44. John i. 45.

He is represented as having been slain, and as standing. This Passage affords a striking refutation of the modern notion of the Roman Church, that Christ's sacrifice is perpetually repeated upon Earth in the Holy Eucharist. As the ancient Expositors rightly interpret the passage, "The Lamb stands," He does not lie, as a Lamb, which is slain, does. He stands, because He is risen, and dieth no more (i. 18. Rom. vi. 9). He stands, because He is our Advocate, ever living to make intercession for us (Heb. vii. 25), and because He is our Champion, ever ready to succour and defend us (Acts vii. 55, 56).

This is also manifest from the use of the perfect tense here, ἐσφαγμένον, which declares that the Lamb has been once immolated, and that the benefit of His sacrifice remains; and that He is not now continually being sacrificed (σφαζόμενον), and therefore He is here manifested in glory to St. John, as having triumphed over death by dying, and as having been made perfect through suffering (Heb. ii. 10). See Andreas, Arethas, and Haymo here.

This is also further intimated by the conjunction ὡς, as. St. John does not say that he saw a Lamb being sacrificed, but that he saw a Lamb standing, as if it had been sacrificed: that is, bearing marks of its sacrificial immolation that was past; as Christ showed the prints of the nails, and the mark of the spear in His side, to His disciples (Luke xxiv. 39, 40. John xx. 20. 27). Consequently, the song of the heavenly host is not, Worthy is the Lamb that is being slain, but Worthy is the Lamb that hath been slain (v. 12), and Worthy art Thou to receive the Book, for Thou wast slain (ἐσφάγης, observe the aorist), and didst redeem us by Thy blood (v. 9, see note).

Therefore, although Romish Divines affirm that the Sacrifice on the Cross is continued in the Holy Eucharist, and that Christ is every day immolated on the Altars of their Churches (see above, on Heb. x. 12), yet it is allowed by the best Romish Expositors of the Apocalypse, that this passage literally and grammatically interpreted is not to be expounded in that sense, "although the Holy Spirit may seem here to allude to it." See A Lapide here.

— κέρατα ἑπτά] seven horns, i. e. universal dominion (see Matt. xxviii. 18). The horn is an emblem of power. See above, ἑπτὰ, ἅ εἰσι τὰ ἑπτὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ πνεύματα τὰ ἀποστελλόμενα εἰς πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν. 7 Καὶ ἦλθε καὶ εἴληφε τὸ βιβλίον ἐκ τῆς δεξιᾶς τοῦ καθημένου ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου. 8 Καὶ ὅτε ἔλαβε τὸ βιβλίον, τὰ τέσσαρα ζῶα καὶ οἱ εἰκοσιτέσσαρες πρεσβύτεροι ἔπεσαν ἐνώπιον τοῦ ἀρνίου, ἔχοντες ἕκαστος κιθάραν, καὶ φιάλας χρυσᾶς γεμούσας θυμιαμάτων, αἵ εἰσιν αἱ προσευχαὶ τῶν ἁγίων· 9 καὶ ᾄδουσιν ᾠδὴν καινὴν λέγοντες, Ἄξιος εἶ λαβεῖν τὸ βιβλίον, καὶ ἀνοῖξαι τὰς σφραγῖδας αὐτοῦ, ὅτι ἐσφάγης, καὶ ἠγόρασας τῷ Θεῷ ἐν τῷ αἵματί σου ἐκ πάσης φυλῆς καὶ γλώσσης, καὶ λαοῦ καὶ ἔθνους, 10 καὶ ἐποίησας αὐτοὺς τῷ Θεῷ ἡμῶν βασιλεῖς καὶ ἱερεῖς, καὶ βασιλεύουσιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς.

on Luke i. 69, and cp. below, xii. 3; xiii. 1. 11; xvii. 3. 7. 12. 16. Seven is the number of completeness; a symbol of Universality.

The Seven Horns are on the Head of the Lamb; all the spiritual power and privileges of Churches and of Christians is due to their foundation and elevation upon Christ. He is the Rock on which the Church is built. (Matt. xvi. 18.)

— τὰ ἑπτὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ πνεύματα] the seven spirits of God. See above on i. 4.

7. καὶ ἦλθε] And He came, and hath taken the roll out of the right hand of Him that sitteth on the Throne. Observe the perfect tense (εἴληφεν) here (He hath taken), marking not only an act, but a state (see above on 1 John iii. 9, and cp. vii. 14; viii. 5). He hath taken the book, and holds it. St. John sees Him in the Vision as holding the Book.

Christ hath taken it, and holds it as His right by virtue of His obedience and sufferings (see Phil. ii. 9). Contrast this with the call to John to take the little roll (x. 8).

8. ὅτε ἔλαβε] when He took; not "when He had taken." The heavenly song of praise to the Lamb coincides in time with Christ's act of taking the Roll.

— ἔχοντες] having each of them a harp, and vials (broad and shallow bowls) of gold, full of incense, which (bowls) are (i. e. signify, see i. 20) the prayers of the saints.

The word φιάλη (connected with φίω, suf-fio, which may be compared with θύω, and thus, incense) does not signify a vial or bottle, but a broad shallow vessel, as the Latin patera from pateo, whence also paten, like a saucer or bowl-like dish (see the authorities in Wetstein, p. 769), in which θυμίαμα, frankincense, was offered (cp. viii. 8; above, Luke i. 9. 13), which was a Hebrew emblem of prayer. (Ps. cxli. 2.) The word φιάλη is borrowed from the Temple-worship, and describes the sacred bowls in which aromatic incense (Exod. xxx. 7—10), lighted by coals taken from the great brazen Altar of sacrifice, in the outer Court of the Temple, was offered on the golden Altar in the inner Court or Holy Place before the Veil, in front of the Holy of Holies. Cp. Lightfoot on Rev. viii.

The Elders are represented here as having a twofold character. They are enthroned and have triumphal crowns of gold (see iv. 2). But they also fall down and worship the Lamb: and sing praises to Him and offer prayers. This corresponds with the twofold office of Holy Scripture. It has a divine power and authority, as God's Law. It is a royal Law (James ii. 8). Thus it is enthroned and wears a crown. But it is also expressive of man's desires and praises to God for His mercies in Christ. The Scriptures declare the longings of holy men for the Gospel, and they record their gratitude for it.

Observe that the Angels of heaven themselves are represented here as taught by the Living Creatures, and by the Elders, to praise the Lamb.

This also corresponds with the office and prerogative of Scripture. St. Peter declares that the Angels themselves desire to look into the things which are revealed in the Gospel. (1 Pet. i. 12.) And St. Paul says, that "now unto Principalities and Powers in heavenly Places (that is, even to the Holy Angels themselves), is made known through the ministry of the Church the manifold wisdom of God." See note above on Eph. iii. 10.

The Golden Candlestick, or Lamp, of the Church is illumined by the oil of the Spirit poured into it by the Holy Scriptures (see below, xi. 4). And thus the Church being enlightened by God's Word, is enabled to enlighten the world, and even to illuminate Angels, who thence learn a new song, and have a fresh theme for praise to God, and for adoration of Christ.

Accordingly, S. Victorinus, writing in the third century, observes here, that "it is the preaching of the Old Testament, together with that of the New, which enables the World to sing a new song. New indeed is the song, which speaks of God becoming man. New is the song, which speaks of the Manhood raised to heaven. New is the song, which declares that men are sealed with the Holy Ghost. And the theme of praise in the mouth of the many Angels is the salvation of the World by Christ."

Such a revelation as this from St. John, representing Angels in heaven as receiving a knowledge of holy Mysteries from the Scriptures, and as adoring the Lamb, would afford a salutary safeguard to his Asiatic Churches, who needed cautions against the worshipping of Angels, to the disparagement of the Majesty of Christ. Cp. note above on Col. ii. 8.

9. ὅτι ἐσφάγης] because Thou wast slain, and didst purchase to God by Thy blood men from every tribe and tongue, and people, and nation, and madest them priests and kings to God, and they reign on the earth.

After ἠγόρασας τῷ Θεῷ, Elz. has ἡμᾶς, us; but this is not in A, and is not received by Lach., Tisch.; and indeed it seems to be inconsistent with the reading αὐτοὺς, them, after ἐποίησας, in v. 10, where αὐτοὺς, them, and not ἡμᾶς, is exhibited by A. B, and by at least forty Cursives, and by the Syriac, Coptic, Æthiopic, Arabic, and other Versions, including the Amiatine MS. of the Vulgate; and is received by Griesbach, Scholz, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Bloomfield.

On the sense of ἐν here to specify the price paid, see 1 Chron. xxi. 24. Winer, p. 348.

The English Authorized Version has the perfect tense here, "Thou hast redeemed; Thou hast made priests." But the original has the aorist ἐσφάγης—ἠγόρασας, Thou wast slain, and, by being slain, Thou didst purchase or redeem men by Thy blood, that is, Thou didst effect this blessed work at a special time, by a special act, namely, by Thy death, suffered once for all, on the cross; and thus Thou madest men to be priests to God.

This Vision represents the unanimous consent of Holy Scripture glorifying the Lamb for the universal Redemption accomplished by His death. By the price of His blood shed once for all on the cross, by which He made "a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world" (see above on v. 6), He purchased to Himself an universal Church (Acts xx. 28; cp. 1 Cor. vi. 20; vii. 23, ἠγοράσθητε τιμῆς), redeeming all men from the bondage of sin and Satan; and paying their ransom to God (λύτρον, see on Matt. xx. 28. Eph. i. 7), and procuring for them pardon from Him (see on Rom. iii. 23—25), and purchasing for them a heavenly inheritance (see above on Eph. i. 14).

This doctrine of Universal Redemption by Christ, is represented here in its practical bearings and moral influence on human conduct. The privileges announced in it are coupled with a declaration of duties. All men, redeemed by Christ, are "redeemed to God;" that is, Christ ransomed them from the bondage of Satan to the service of God. They were made Kings and Priests to our God; Christ purchased for them a Kingdom, the Kingdom of Heaven, and has invested them with a share of His own royalties, by virtue of their mystical incorporation in Him, and by means of the royal unction which flows down from Him their Head on all His members. But these princely prerogatives are conditional on their being also Priests, presenting themselves, their souls and bodies, a living sacrifice to God (Rom. xii. 1, 2), and being a holy Priesthood, offering up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ (1 Pet. ii. 5), Who "gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people zealous of good works." (Titus ii. 14. Cp. Eph. i. 4; ii. 10.)

The Alexandrine MS. has βασιλείαν here, a Kingdom, and so Lach. and Tisch. Cp. i. 6.

— καὶ βασιλεύουσιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς] and they are reigning on the earth. Observe the present tense here; the reading of A, B, and Syr., Arabic, Coptic, and some other Versions, and so Lach., Tisch. Many Cursive MSS. have βασιλεύσουσι (they shall reign) in the future; and Elz. reads βασιλεύσομεν (we shall reign). For a further exposition of the passage, see below on xx. 4.

CH. VI.] The LAMB opens the SEALS of the Roll which represents a prophetic view of the History of the Christian Church, from the first Advent of Christ to the end of the World.

The FIRST SEAL opened—

1, 2. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seven seals, and I heard one of the four Living Creatures saying, as the voice of thunder, Come and see. And I saw and beheld a white horse: and He that sitteth on him, having a bow; and there was given unto him a crown of Victory, and he went forth conquering and that he might conquer.

The opening of this the FIRST SEAL displays the victorious majesty of CHRIST, and of His Gospel going forth in its primitive purity and power. The horse, especially among the Jews, was symbolical of war (see above on Matt. xxi. 5, and cp. Ezek. xxvi. 10). The Rider on the White Horse is Christ. This is declared by St. John himself in the latter portion of the Apocalypse, where he says, "I saw heaven opened, and behold a White Horse; and He that sitteth upon him called Faithful and True (cp. iii. 14, where this is the title of Christ), and His Name is the WORD of GOD." (Rev. xix. 11—13.)

This is also evident from the colour of the horse, white, λευκὸς, white as light, lux, lucidus. This word λευκὸς, as used in the Apocalypse, is not the Latin albus, but it is candidus; "aliud est candidum esse,—id est luce quâdam nitenti perfusum, —aliud album, quod pallori constat esse vicinum." Servius in Æn. xii. 84. (Wetstein.)

This colour is an emblem of purity and victory (see Wetstein), and is applied in the Apocalypse to Christ, and is even consecrated by a special restriction and limitation to Him. Thus we read of His hair white as wool (i. 14). He promises to His faithful followers a white stone (ii. 17): they will walk with Him in white (iii. 4). He rides on a white cloud (xiv. 14); they follow Him on white horses (xix. 11. 14). His Bride is attired in white (xix. 8). He will sit on a great white Throne (xx. 11).

The Apocalypse here, as elsewhere, reproduces the imagery of ancient Hebrew Prophecy. David had seen and described Christ, riding as a Conqueror on a horse, and bearing in His hand a bow, as He is here seen by St. John. The Psalmist had greeted Him from afar, "Gird Thee with Thy sword upon Thy Thigh, O Thou most Mighty, according to Thy worship and renown; Good luck have Thou with Thine honour. Ride on, because of the word of truth, of meekness, and righteousness, and Thy right hand shall teach Thee terrible things. Thy arrows are very sharp, and the people shall be subdued unto Thee." (Ps. xlv. 4—6.)

Christ appeared in this form in the first age of the Church. This is what is here revealed in the First Seal. When our Lord had ascended in triumph into heaven (says Victorinus here) He sent His Holy Spirit; and His words went forth like arrows from the Bow of Evangelical preaching, and pierced the heart (cp. Heb. iv. 12), and vanquished the unbelief of the world. Therefore," he adds, "the white Horse represents the trumpet of Christ's Gospel preached throughout the world by the aid of the Holy Ghost." See also the excellent comment of Aug.? and Primasius on this seal. Indeed, all the ancient Expositors recognize CHRIST here as the Rider on the white horse. The Rider on the white horse (say the Ancient Greek Expositors in Caten. p. 263) is He of whom the prophet Habakkuk speaks, "Thou didst ride upon Thine horses and chariots of salvation. Thy bow was made quite naked." (Hab. iii. 8, 9.)

The poetical features of the noble description in the prophecies of Zechariah may also be recognized here. "When I have bent Judah for Me, and filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece, and made thee as the sword of a mighty man. And the Lord shall be seen over them; and his arrow shall go forth as the lightning." (Zech. ix. 13, 14.) The Apostles and Evangelists were "sons of Zion," they were taken from among the Jews; and they were like Arrows in the Quiver of Christ, Who "bent Judah" as a Bow, and "filled His Bow with Ephraim," when He sent them forth, who were from the seed of Judah and Ephraim. He sent them forth as Evangelical arrows, discharged by His mighty power from His divine Bow, as from that of a Royal Warrior. He routed His enemies and overthrew the opposing armies of Greece, that is, the Gentile World, by their means, and brought it into subjection to the mild yoke of the Gospel. (Cp. 2 Cor. x. 4.) As S. Jerome says (on Ps. xlv. vol. ii. p. 686), "Paul was like an arrow of the Lord, shot forth from the Lord's bow from Jerusalem even to Illyricum." (Rom. xv. 19.) Compare Andreas here.

Jesus Christ, in the days of his humiliation, had ridden on the foal of an ass into the Holy City, the Earthly Jerusalem, His own Capital, the City of the Great King; and had there been saluted with hosannas (Matt. xxi. 9), His path had been strewn with palms of victory (John xii. 13), and He had fulfilled the ancient prophecy of Zechariah, who had predicted that royal Entry (Zech. ix. 9); and by riding on the foal into Sion He had prefigured the peaceful triumph of the Gospel over the Heathen world, subjected to His sway. See above on Matt. xxi. 5. Mark xi. 2—10. John xii. 14.

After His Ascension, the same Christ is now displayed in this Seal as no longer riding on the foal of an ass, meek and gentle, but as a Mighty Conqueror riding on a White Horse, "conquering and to conquer," and having on His head a crown, the crown of victory, στέφανος. He has now overcome Death and Satan. He has triumphed over them by the Cross, which becomes to Him a triumphal Chariot (see on Col. ii. 15), and He rides upon it a mighty victor (see on 2 Cor. ii. 14); and He has given His disciples power to conquer (1 Cor. xv. 55. 57), and has sent forth His Holy Spirit from heaven to enable them to bear His standard in triumph throughout the world, and to cast down "every thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God." (See on 2 Cor. x. 4, 5.)

The most striking characteristic of the First Age of the Church was the wonderful success of Apostolical Preaching, after the outpouring of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost. "The Lord gave the word, great was the company of the Preachers" (Ps. lxviii. 11); "their sound is gone out into all lands, and their words into the ends of the world" (Ps. xix. 4). "We Christians" (said a Father of the second century) "are but of yesterday, and we have filled the world,"—"Hesterni sumus, et orbem implevimus." Tertullian (Apol. 38).

This marvellous success of Christianity was therefore the appropriate subject of the prophetic vision of the First Seal.

The First of the Four Living Creatures is here introduced as calling attention to this glorious spectacle. He says (v. 1), "Come and see." That is, Come and see the Victory of Christ, the Royal Rider on the White Horse. This was a fitting office for the first of the Living Creatures. For he is described (iv. 7) as having a face like a Lion, the King and Conqueror of Beasts. The Living Creature who has the face of a Lion invites us to behold the Victory of the Lion of the royal tribe of Judah (see v. 5). The first Gospel, that of St. Matthew, specially called the attention of the Church to contemplate the character and office of Christ as King: see above, Introduction to the Gospels, p. xli.

The Second Seal opened.

3, 4. καὶ ὅτε] And when He opened the second Seal, I heard the second Living Creature say, Come. And there went out another horse, that was red as fire (πυρρός): and it was given to him that sate thereon to take Peace from the earth, and that they should slay one another; and there was given unto him a great Sword (μάχαιρα).

Christ, Who has been displayed on the white horse, is followed, in the second, third, and fourth Seals, by another Power, riding on three Horses, in succession, of three different colours.

The Power introduced in these three seals is opposed to Christ.

Christ, Who rides on the white horse, is described in the latter part of the Apocalypse as "He that sitteth on the horse" (xix. 19. 21). The white horse is "the horse;" it is the only Horse on which Christ rides. At the end of the Apocalypse He is still riding on the white horse, and the Armies in heaven follow Him on white horses (xix. 11. 14). White is the colour appropriated to Christ: see above, v. 2. The other Horses in the second, third, and fourth Seal vary in colour from one another, and are all opposed to white; they are red, black, ghastly green. They carry a Power adverse and antagonistic to Christ.

This appears also from the fact that they are attended by Allies who are Enemies of Christ. The Rider on the third of these horses is "Death, and the Grave follows with him;" and, as we read in another part of the Book, "Death and the Grave" are afterwards destroyed by Christ (xx. 13, 14).

Further; the declaration that Christ went forth conquering and to conquer (v. 2), is equivalent to an intimation, that He would have Adversaries to encounter, whom He will overcome. Christ comes forth first. Truth is before Error. God's first Will is, that all men should be saved. (1 Tim. ii. 4. See Introduction to Romans, p. 194). The good seed is sown before the Tares (Matt. xiii. 27). Christ came forth in the first Seal. The Adversary appears afterwards in different forms in the second, third, and fourth Seal.

The ancient Interpreters were agreed that the Horse in the first seal carries Christ, and that the Horses in the second and the two following seals introduce a Power antagonistic to Christ. This ancient Exposition is thus expressed by Victorinus, Primasius, Bede, and Haymo, who say, "In the first seal we see Christ and the glory of the primitive Church; in the next three seals we behold three forms of war (triforme bellum) against her." And before them, S. Irenæus thus speaks; "The Lord was born, in order to conquer, and of Him John speaks in the Apocalypse, 'He went forth conquering and to conquer'" (Iren. iv. 21. 3).

This opinion is confirmed, as we shall see, by the other incidents of the three seals. And this interpretation of the Seals conveys a striking and important moral.

In the first seal we see Christ on the white horse, going forth conquering and to conquer. Such He appeared in the primitive age of Christianity. And if we turn to the last Vision of earthly things at the close of the Apocalypse, He there reappears. There is the same white horse, and the same Rider upon it. "I saw heaven opened," says St. John, "and, behold, a white horse; and He that sitteth upon him is called Faithful and True, and in righteousness He doth judge and make war. On His head were many crowns. And He was clothed in a vesture dipped in blood, and His name is called The Word of God. And the armies which were in heaven followed Him on white horses. And out of His mouth goeth a sharp sword: and He treadeth the winepress of the wrath of God" (xix. 11—15).

We here see the Majesty of Christ. Earthly powers will be shaken; His throne is immoveable. He rides on, conquering and to conquer. Worldly things pass away; but His "years will not fail" (Ps. cii. 27). He is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever" (Heb. xiii. 8).

The Second Seal represents the first assault, which Satan made against Christ and the Church, after the Ascension.

That assault was by Persecution. He first stirred the Jews against the Apostles. James the brother of John was killed by the Sword (xii. 2). The rancour of the Jews against the Gospel in different parts of the world, is described in the Acts of the Apostles (see Acts xiii. 50; xiv. 2. 19; xvii. 5. 13; xix. 33; and on 1 Thess. ii. 14, 15). Therefore St. Paul could say even then, "For Thy sake we are killed all the day long, we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter" (Rom. viii. 36).

Soon afterwards the Spirit of Persecution broke out in the Roman Empire against the Church. The Cæsars, "who bare the sword" of the world (Rom. xiii. 4), unsheathed it against her. The Apostle of the Gentiles was killed by that sword. St. Peter perished in the same cause, at the same place, Rome (see Introduction to Epistles to Timothy, pp. 423, 424).

The Rider on the Red Horse (red like fire) went forth in the second and third centuries. To cite the words of the ancient Greek Expositors (in Caten. p. 265), "In this seal we see a prophecy of what we ourselves have seen fulfilled by the Martyrs of the Church; the Power here represented wields a sword, and takes away Peace from the earth, according to Christ's own language, 'I came not to send Peace on Earth, but a sword'" (see Matt. x. 34).

This is the exposition which all the ancient interpreters have given of this seal. Satan has already been declared by Christ Himself to be the Author of Persecution (see ii. 10). Christ rides on a horse that is white like light (λευκὸς, lux): but the Enemy rides on a horse that is red like fire (πῦρ). The same word πυρρὸς is applied to the Dragon, Satan, who persecutes the woman, the Church; see below, xii. 3. The rider has in his hand a sword (μάχαιρα), the instrument of persecution, and used in Scripture as the symbol of it. Thus St. Paul asks, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?" (Rom. viii. 35.) And the Apostle, writing under the guidance of the same Spirit who inspired St. John, adds, "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors (ὑπερνικῶμεν) through Him that loved us." The Apostles and other Martyrs were enabled to conquer him who rode on the red horse, and wielded the Sword of Persecution; they conquered him by the blood of Christ (Rev. xii. 11), Who ever rides on the White horse, and went forth conquering and to conquer.

This exposition is further confirmed by what is said under the fifth seal (v. 9), "I saw under the altar the souls of them that had been slain (the same word as that used in the second seal), for the Word of God, and for the testimony (μαρτύριον) which they held." Those Martyrs had been slain by the sword of him who rides on the red horse.

This Vision had been in part fulfilled when St. John wrote, and was to receive a still larger accomplishment.

Tertullian, speaking of the first Heathen persecution against the Church, adopts the emblem which St. John sees in the Rider's hand in this Vision,—the sword. "The Emperor Nero," he says, "was the first who raged against the Church with the sword of the Cæsars" (Apol. 5). The emblem of St. Paul as a Martyr, is the sword. Many of the Christians in the first age suffered death by fire. They were burnt by night, to enlighten the streets of Rome. See above, on Phil. ii. 15. They suffered under the violence of the Rider on the horse of fire, who wielded the sword.

St. John himself was a Martyr in will, under the power of Rome (see i. 9). Some of the most eminent of his disciples died the death of Martyrs, at the command of the imperial Power, which had the sword of the world. Their language illustrates this Vision of the Apocalypse. They felt this Rider's rage, when they thus wrote, "Why have I given myself up to death, to the fire, to the sword, and to the wild beasts? Yea, verily, when we are near the sword, we are near to God; when we are in the midst of wild beasts, we are in the hand of God. I endure all things in the name of Christ who strengtheneth me to suffer with Him." (S. Ignatius ad Smyrn. 4: cp. his words, ad Rom. 5). And S. Polycarp, the Bishop of Smyrna, said to the Roman Proconsul, the executioner of Persecution against the Christians, "Thou threatenest me with fire, which burns only for a short season, but thou knowest nothing of that fire which is never quenched, and is reserved for the wicked" (Martyr. Polycarp. c. 11).

The Rider on the horse of Fire, wielding the sword, went forth against Christ and the Church in Ten successive persecutions: First, under Nero; Second, under Domitian; Third, under Trajan; Fourth, under Marcus Aurelius Antoninus; Fifth, under Septimius Severus; Sixth, under Maximinus; Seventh, under Decius; Eighth, under Valerian; Ninth, under Aurelian; Tenth, under Diocletian; making a period of about 240 years, i. e. from A.D. 64, to A.D. 304. This is the enumeration of S. Augustine, de Civ. Dei xviii. 52. Cp. Euseb. viii.—x. Lactantius, de Morte Persecutorum, cap. 7—24. See the authorities in Gieseler, Ch. Hist. §§ 42. 56, and 57. A Poet, who has traced the History of the Church in our own land in pictures which often recall to the mind the imagery of the Apocalypse, thus speaks of one of these Persecutions,—

> "Lament: for Diocletian's fiery sword
> Works busy as the lightning . . . .
> Against the followers of the Incarnate Lord
> It rages."
> (Wordsworth, Ecclesiastical Sonnets, Sonnet vi.)

In this seal the second of the Living Creatures is represented as saying Come. Some MSS here add καὶ ἴδε, and others read, βλέπε, i. e. and see; but in A, B, C, and many cursives and versions, Ἔρχου stands alone: and this reading is adopted by Lachm. and Tisch. The same remark is applicable, with some slight modification, to the reading of verse 5 and verse 7, where A, C have ἔρχου only, and so Lach. and Tisch.

The invitation to see the sufferiug inflicted on the Martyrs fitly proceeds from the second of the Living Creatures, whose face is like a Calf or Ox (iv. 7), the sacrificial animal, and whose special office it is to display the sufferings of Christ (see above, Introduction to the Gospels, p. xli; and to St. Luke's Gospel, p. 163), Who is "the faithful and true MARTYR" (i. 5; iii. 14), the Exemplar and hope of all "the Martyrs of Jesus" (xvii. 6). See on Acts vii. 60, concerning the death of the Protomartyr, St. Stephen.

The THIRD SEAL opened.

5. καὶ ὅτε] And when He opened the third seal, I heard the third Living Creature say, Come and see. And I saw, and lo a black horse, and he that sitteth on him, having a balance in his hand.

And I heard a voice in the midst of the four Living Creatures say, "A quart of wheat for a penny (or day's wages), and three quarts of barley for a penny (or day's wages), and the oil and the wine hurt thou not.

This Seal represents the Adversary of Christ and His Church in a new form.

He has now sheathed the Sword, the emblem of Power, and he has taken a Balance, the emblem of Equity, in its stead. He has dismounted from the horse of a fiery red, and now rides on a black horse; and a voice is heard, not from one of the Living Creatures singly as before, but from the midst of the Four, "A chœnix of wheat for a denarius, three chœnixes of barley for a denarius."

The measure here mentioned, the chœnix, is about a quart measure (see Hussey on Ancient Measures, pp. 209—214), and was equal to two sextarii in liquid measure; and to two libræ, or pounds, in dry measure (see Wetstein, p. 773); and the denarius was a day's wages for a labourer (see Matt. xx. 2), and the daily pay of a soldier (Tacit. Annal. i. 17). The chœnix was only the eighth part of a modius; and a modius of wheat was usually sold for a denarius, and sometimes for half that sum (Cicero, Verr. iii. 81, and de Divin. c. 10).

Therefore this Seal denotes a Famine. The circumstance that corn is weighed in a balance, as if it were spicery, and not measured out in bushels, is itself a sign of Dearth. Cp. Lightfoot here.

The voice from the midst of the four Living Creatures says, "Hurt thou not the oil and the wine." It shows that they were in danger of being hurt. This voice restrains the power of the enemy, and forbids him to do what otherwise he would have done. It is a divine voice checking Satan's power, and protecting the Church.

Some modern Expositors have supposed that this Vision portended only a natural dearth and scarcity. But the Rider on the white horse was Christ, and the Power who follows on the other horses is opposed to Christ.

Therefore we must adopt here the opinion of the Ancient Interpreters, who say that the present seal represents a season of spiritual scarcity, a famine of the Word of God (Amos viii. 11), a leanness of the soul (Ps. cvi. 15). The prohibition to the Rider, "Hurt not thou the oil and the wine," a prohibition proceeding from the midst of the four Living Creatures, who adore Christ, is a restraint on the evil design of the Rider who would injure the spiritual oil and wine, that is, the means of Grace, which had been typified under those symbols in Ancient Prophecy (Ps. xxiii. 4, 5), and also by the words and acts of Christ, the Good Samaritan, pouring in oil and wine into the wounds of the Traveller, representing Human Nature, lying in the road (see above, on Luke x. 31).

The Horseman riding on the black horse and opposing Christ Who is on the white horse, and having Spiritual Famine in his rear, and being restrained from hurting the Oil and the Wine, holds in his hand a Balance (ζυγὸς = τάλαντον, τρυτάνη, Etym. M.), the emblem of Justice. While therefore he practises wrong, he professes right: as the Prophet Hosea says, there is "in his hand a balance of iniquity" (ζυγὸς ἀδικίας, LXX, Hos. xii. 7). He is like a false Prophet, coming in sheep's clothing, but inwardly a ravening wolf (Matt. vii. 15).

This Vision has been interpreted by the History of the Church. At first, Satan assailed her by open violence, by the fire and sword of Persecution. That attempt has been foreshown in the second Seal. Satan was disappointed. He was foiled and frustrated in that design. She was enabled to resist him by the power of Him Who had ridden forth on the white horse a conqueror and to conquer. The Power of Christ was seen in the sufferings of the Martyrs, who triumphed in death, and over it. Thus Satan's devices recoiled on himself. The charity, patience, and courage of Christian Martyrs, not only men, but tender women, and even children (see S. Clement of Rome, Epist. c. 6), led others to seek and obtain that divine grace, which enabled them to pray for their murderers, and to rejoice in their sufferings, and to die with praises on their lips. They thus excited others to follow them in the path of earthly affliction to the kingdom of heavenly glory.

As the Ancient Christian Apologist said to the heathen Persecutors, "Your cruelty draws others to us. The more we are mown down by you, the more our harvest grows; the blood of Martyrs is the seed of the Church" (Tertullian, Apol. ad finem. See above, on Acts viii. 1—4).

Satan therefore altered his plan of attack. He exchanged the sword of open violence for the balance of seeming Equity: and he dismounted from the fiery horse of Persecution; and next he rode forth upon the black horse of Heresy. He raised up many persons in the Church, who, under specious pretences of regard for Justice, Reason, and Peace, endeavoured to corrupt the Faith. He who had stirred up Persecution was the Author of Heresy. He who sows tares in Christ's field is the Enemy (Matt. xiii. 25. 39). The Christian Fathers ascribe Heresies to him. Thus Theodoret (Præf. in Hæret. fab. lib. iii.), "Heresies have arisen from the malice of the Devil."

The imagery of the Apocalypse is derived from ancient Hebrew Prophecy. The groundwork of its language here is in that of Hosea xii. 7, concerning Ephraim. Ephraim in the Apocalypse is a representative of enmity to Judah, the Church of Christ (see below on vii. 8). And Hosea thus describes Ephraim, "He is a merchant; the balances of deceit are in his hand, he loveth to oppress."

The characteristic of Heresy is to be a Merchant, and it bears a balance in its hand. "The Rider," says Aug.? "has a balance in his hand, for he professes that he is dealing equitably, and yet he is doing wrong." They who teach things contrary to sound doctrine, endeavour "by good words and fair speeches to deceive the hearts of the simple." (Rom. xvi. 18. Cp. Eph. iv. 14; v. 6. Col. ii. 4.)

The Balance is also a symbol of traffic. Here also we have light from Hosea (xii. 7) concerning the bearer of the false balance, "Ephraim is a Merchant." It is a mark of Heresy to trade in spiritual things for its own profit. They who brought in "heresies, denying even the Lord that bought them," are characterized by the Apostle as "making merchandise of souls, through covetousness, with feigned words." (2 Pet. ii. 3. Cp. note on 2 Cor. ii. 17.) They have men's persons in admiration because of advantage (Jude 16), and are therefore compared to Balaam, "who loved the wages of unrighteousness" (2 Pet. ii. 15).

Besides, it is the practice of Heretical Teachers to weigh the articles of Christian Doctrine in the Balance of Human Reason, or of its own carnal Will. Hence early Christian writers traced the origin of Heresy to heathen Philosophy. See Irenæus, ii. 14. 2. Tertullian, c. Hermog. c. 8; de Animâ, c. 3. 23; Præscr. Hæret. c. 30; and S. Hippolytus (Philosophumena, lib. v.), whose language illustrates the present passage of the Apocalypse; "We (Christians) derive our knowledge of divine truth from no other source but the oracles of God. Let us examine, therefore, what the Holy Scriptures declare, and let us acknowledge what they teach; not dealing with these things (the mysteries of Faith) according to our own Reason, or our own Will, nor doing violence to what God reveals; but let us see them in that light in which He has been pleased to unfold them in His Word. (S. Hippolyt. c. Noet. § 9.) Heretics forsake Holy Scripture and profess Geometry." (S. Hippolyt. ap. Euseb. v. 28.) They weigh mysteries in the balance of Reason.

Satan having failed in his endeavours to destroy the Church by violence, transformed himself into an Angel of Light. (2 Cor. xi. 14.) He raised up Heresiarchs who made plausible professions; and by their instrumentality he undermined the foundation of the Christian faith, and of virtuous practice, which is grounded upon it. (See above, Introduction to St. Peter's Second Epistle, p. 71, and to St. John's First Epistle, p. 103.) They distracted and weakened the Church by schisms. Therefore this second attack was more perilous than the former. "Persecution makes Martyrs; but Heresy makes Apostates." Tertullian, Præscr. Hæret. c. 4. Cp. Dean Stanhope on the Gospels, iv. 478—480.

This Third Seal represents the machinations of Heresy against the Church; and the invitation to behold them comes from the third of the Living Creatures, whose face was like a Man (iv. 7). The disbelief of the Incarnation of Christ was the source of almost all the primitive heresies. See above on 1 John iv. 2, 3. "By this ye know the Spirit of God. Every spirit that confesseth Jesus Christ come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not Jesus come in the flesh is not of God; and this is the spirit of Antichrist." The doctrine of the humanity of Christ, not properly understood, was perverted into an occasion of a denial of His Consubstantiality with the Father. Arius, the promoter of that Heresy, is described by ancient authors as distinguished by those characteristics of philosophical calmness and seeming impartiality, which are symbolized by the Balance. See his character as drawn by Socrates (i. 5), and S. Ambrose (de Fide, i. 8), and S. Jerome (adv. Lucif. 3), who says that the Arian Heresy allied itself with the wisdom of this world, and derived its arguments from the Aristotelian Philosophy; and cp. Hooker, V. xlii. 2, and V. lii., where he traces the history of the Heresies concerning the Incarnation, and Two Natures and Person of Christ, from Arius to Nestorius and Eutyches.

It is therefore well said by some ancient Expositors, e. g. Anselm, Bishop of Havilburg, that in this seal we may recognize the growth of Arianism and its progeny. "The Balance is the instrument of Heresy, which holds a balance of deceit in its hand, making a semblance of equity, and thereby deceiving the unwary." Cp. Bede here.

This interpretation is in harmony with the other incidents of this seal. "A voice is heard in the midst of the Four Living Creatures." It is not a voice uttered by any one of them singly, as in the other seals, but it comes forth from the midst of them all. This voice proclaims the true character of the rider on the black horse. It declares, that, whatever he may feign himself to be, he is an agent of ill.

Christ had been already described as in the midst of the Four Living Creatures (v. 6). He ever speaks in the Four Gospels. And His Words, there recorded by the Holy Ghost, enable the Church to detect and to refute Heresy. As the ancient Expositor (under the name of Aquinas) says here, "The Voice comes from the Four Living Creatures, namely, from the harmonious concord of the Four Evangelists, and reminds us that in evil days we must resort to the Sacred Page. Christ, by the Power of His Word, restrains the Evil One from hurting the oil and the wine of the Christian Sacraments." He has protected, and ever will protect them, against the assaults of the Enemy. Cp. Primasius here, "In vino et oleo vim sacramentorum prohibet violari." The doctrine of the Sacraments is identified with that of His Manhood; see above, Introduction to St. John, pp. 259—264, and to the Epistle to the Ephesians, pp. 275, 276. By guarding the one He defends the other.

The Voice which checks the course of the Evil One, and protects the true Doctrine of the Word and Sacraments of Christ from the enemy's arts and arms, comes forth from the midst of the Four Living Creatures—the Four Gospels. And we see a happy illustration of this prophetical Vision in the fact that in the ancient Councils of the Church, which were summoned for the repression of Heresy, the Four Gospels were placed on a Throne in the midst of the Synod. They were the Royal code by which the deliberations of those Councils were regulated and determined. In one of the Epistles of the great Council of Ephesus to Theodosius, the Emperor, it is said that "the Fathers of that Synod were assembled in the Church; and the Holy Gospels were placed on the Throne in the midst (ἐν τῷ μεσαιτάτῳ θρόνῳ), and displayed CHRIST Himself present among them." Act. Concil. Ephes. p. 175, and see ibid. p. 179, where similar expressions are used, τοῦ ἁγίου Εὐαγγελίου ἐν μέσῳ κειμένου, καὶ δεικνύντος ἡμῖν παρόντα τὸν τῶν ὅλων δεσπότην Χριστόν. Other passages to the same effect are cited by Suicer, Thesaur. v. εὐαγγέλιον, p. 1227.

The Truth of this Vision portending the rise of Heresy—next in order to Persecution—by the agency of Satan against Christ and the Church, is clearly manifested by the testimony of ancient Church Historians. Theodoret, in the fifth century (Eccles. Hist. i. 2), giving a summary of the History of the Church after the cessation of Persecution, and the establishment of Christianity by Constantine, speaks in remarkable words, which afford a clear illustration of the Apocalyptic Visions of the Third Seal. "Then Churches were repaired, and Christians were appointed to be rulers of the Gentiles, and the temples of Idols were closed; and there were joyful assemblies in the Church. But the malignant and envious demon, the Foe of the World, could not brook this change from storm to peace; and he stirred up Heresies, in order to submerge the ship of the Church. He saw that the errors of Paganism had been exposed, and that the cheats of demons had been detected, and that the creature was no longer worshipped, and that the Creator was adored. Wherefore, he no more excited open assaults against God our Saviour, but having found certain men, graced with the Christian name, but slaves of ambition and vain-glory, he chose them as instruments of his machinations. Thus he brought men back to their old error, not indeed by leading them to adore the creature, but by endeavouring to degrade the Creator of the World to the rank of the creature. At that time there was a certain Presbyter of Alexandria, Arius. The adversary of the Truth suborned him, and by his means made confusion in the Church, and tempted him to oppose the Apostolic Doctrine of Alexander, the Bishop of that Church."

A similar view is presented by more recent Ecclesiastical Annalists. A compendium of Church History (derived from Fleury, Tillemont, Alexander, and Ceillier) presents the following summary: "The first attack which Satan made against the Church during three centuries, having been unsuccessful, he devised a second: 'il va substituer à la vaine Philosophie des faux sages, les vains raisonnements des faux Docteurs; il va employer contre la foi de l'Eglise l'abus du raisonnement soutenu par l'abus du pouvoir souverain.'" (Abrégé Chronol. de l'Histoire Ecclés. Paris, 1778. Tom. i. p. 259.) Lord Bacon, in his "Essay on Controversies," supplies an excellent historical comment on the prophetical Visions of the Second and Third Seals. "When the fiery trial of Persecution ceaseth, there succeedeth another trial; which, as it were, by contrary blasts of doctrine, doth sift and winnow men's Faith."

On the whole, then, we may acquiesce in the ancient interpretation of the first three Seals. The early Expositors may be safely followed here, because they are speaking of prophecies which had been fulfilled in their day. Their judgment on this matter is thus expressed in the Commentary published under the name of Aquinas,—

"The first Seal represents the primitive state of the Church.

"The second Seal displays the Persecution of the Church by the Heathen, in the days of the Martyrs.

"The third Seal unfolds the Persecution of the Church by Heretics."

Lastly, we may here apply the prophecy concerning Christ, "Thou shalt go upon the Lion and the Adder; the young Lion and the Dragon Thou shalt tread under Thy feet" (Ps. xci. 13). "The Devil," says Augustine, commenting on that prophecy, "is there represented as a Lion, and also as an Adder. And Christ's Victory over him in both these characters is signified in this Psalm. The Devil rages as a Lion; and he lies in ambush as an Adder. When the Martyrs were slain, then the Devil raged as a Lion; and when Heretics lay snares against the Church, then he lies in ambush as an Adder." But He who went forth conquering and to conquer, "goes upon the Lion and the Adder, and treads them under His feet." His Voice ever speaks in the Gospels, and reveals the wiles, and restrains the power, of the Enemy, and defends the Christian Sacraments. The Creeds of the Church, uttered by His Voice within her, are her symbols and watchwords; and the faithful in every age are enabled by His grace to contend earnestly for the faith, and to "tread on serpents and scorpions, and all the power of the Enemy." (Luke x. 19.)

The FOURTH SEAL opened.

7, 8. καὶ ὅτε] And when He opened the fourth seal I heard the Fourth Living Creature say, Come and see. And I saw and behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hades followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with the sword, and with hunger, and with death, and by means of the Beasts of the earth.

The Horse here mentioned is described as χλωρὸς, gilvus, of a pale yellowish green, a livid ghastly colour, like that of a corpse. See the authorities in Wetstein here, p. 773. The word χλωρὸς is joined with grass, below, viii. 7, and in Mark vi. 39.

The Rider here is Death, and by his side is Hades, the personification of the Region of departed spirits (see on Luke xvi. 23, and above, i. 18). Hades is joined with Death, below, xx. 13, 14, where Death and Hades are cast into the Lake of Fire. Compare xxi. 4, and St. Paul's words in 1 Cor. xv. 55, derived from those of Christ Himself in the prophecy of Hosea, "O Death, I will be thy plagues; O Grave (Hades), I will be thy destruction." (Hosea xiii. 14.)

The word used in this seal for sword is different from that in v. 4, and signifies properly a Thracian sword, framea (Hesych.); it is not the imperial sword (μάχαιρα) of lawful Authority, such as that of the Emperors of Rome, but it is rather the barbarian scymitar (ῥομφαία) of savage invaders; and it expresses the violence of wild and uncivilized marauders.

The Beasts of the earth here, θηρία τῆς γῆς, are savage powers exercising an earthly dominion for earthly ends (cp. the Apocalyptic phrase, "those who dwell on the earth," see on iii. 10).

Observe the article here, "the Beasts," showing that although they have not yet been mentioned, they are present to the divine foreknowledge, and will be described more fully in later parts of the Apocalypse. See particularly xi. 7; xiii. 1—17; xiv. 9—11; xvi. 2. 10. 13; xvii. 3—17; xix. 19, 20; xx. 4. 10.

This prophetic use of the definite article is striking and sublime. It shows that all the imagery of the future is present in the Panorama of Omniscience to Him who inspires St. John.

These words, the Beasts of the Earth, thus introduced, connect the time of this seal with the time of other prophecies in other portions of the Apocalypse.

The words thus used in this book may be called chronological catch-words. They serve to rivet prophecies of contemporaneous events, and to mark identity of subject, as well as sameness of time. See above, Introduction, pp. 147, 148.

Here the Beasts are mentioned by anticipation. Similarly below, in ch. xi. 7, in the Vision of the two witnesses, it is said that "the Beast which riseth from the abyss" will make war with them. Nothing had as yet been said concerning the Beast, but he is afterwards described under that name in xvii. 8, and he is already present to the mind and eye of the Writer, illumined by the Holy Ghost.

The careful observation of these catch-words will often supply a clue to the sense of the prediction, and to its proper time and place in the prophetical volume. Evidences of the truth of this principle will be seen in the succeeding pages.

The Apocalypse is composed with marvellous accuracy and minute verbal precision (see above on chaps. ii. and iii.); and the use of a phrase in one part of the book serves often to determine its sense in another. This is what might be expected. The Apocalypse is a prophetical book; and the interpreter needs such helps as these; and the more he examines the language of the Apocalypse, the more he will be convinced that they are not denied him.

Let us apply this principle here. We find, on examination, that the word θηρίον, Beast, is used in no less than thirty-seven places of the Apocalypse, and always in a special sense, signifying a particular power; we may therefore reasonably infer that this word is used in the same sense in the passage now before us. Cp. notes below, x. 3, and on xi. 9.

This Seal, therefore, presents a compendious view of the sufferings which the Church of Christ would have to endure from various workings of the Evil One.

In the second seal the instrument of the Enemy was Persecution, in the third it was Heresy. But here in the fourth seal the evil is multiform.

History explains this.

In the fifth and next following centuries the Heresies and Divisions of Christians gave occasion to incursions of Barbarians, such as the Goths (A.D. 410), the Huns (A.D. 452), the Vandals (A.D. 455), and other hordes, which overran a great part of Europe and Africa. They are represented in this seal; and its range extends to the ravages of Mohammedanism in the seventh century (A.D. 622), and beyond it.

The words Famine and Death signify the moral and spiritual woes of this period; woes consequent on Heresies and Schisms. The voice of sound learning and scriptural exposition had become feeble. Spiritual Dearth and Death were dominant in Christendom.

At length, also, in the ninth and tenth centuries, another Power began to domineer, which, on account of the extent and duration of its sway, will be more fully described in subsequent prophecies; and is now characterized by a few striking words, "the Beasts of the earth;" words which point out the chronological place of the present prophecy, and prepare the reader for the fuller description which will be presented to him hereafter. See chap. xiii. 1—18; xvii. 3—17; xix. 19, 20; xx. 4. 10.

The colour of the horse in this seal,—pale, or ghastly as a corpse,—and the companionship of Death, as well as Hunger, seem to bespeak the prevalence of deadness of soul, and of Infidelity.

The invitation to view the incidents of this seal is represented as proceeding from the Fourth Living Creature, who had the appearance of a flying Eagle (iv. 7). It was the special office of St. John, the writer of the Fourth Gospel, the Evangelical Eagle, to declare in that Gospel the divine power of Christ after His Resurrection (John xx., xxi.), when, like an Eagle, He had moulted the plumage of the Grave, and renewed His strength, and became young (Ps. ciii. 5), and mounted up with wings like an Eagle (Isa. xl. 31), and carried His young on His wings from their earthly nest, and soared with them to heaven. (See above on Matt. xxiv. 28. Luke xvii. 36.) And St. John in his Apocalypse describes Christ's Victory over those adversaries, Death, Hades, and the Beasts, which are arrayed against Him in this seal. See below, xix. 20; xx. 13, 14.

The FIFTH SEAL.

9—11. καὶ ὅτε] And when He opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that had been slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held fast. And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, the Holy One and true, dost Thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

And a white robe was given unto each of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little time, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that are to be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.

The reading of the last word here is disputed. Elz. has πληρώσονται, which has not much authority. Lach. has πληρωθῶσιν, with A, C, and this seems the preferable reading. Tisch. has πληρώσωσιν, with B.

St. John being "in the spirit," was enabled to see departed spirits: he beheld them with the spiritual eye enlightened by the Holy Ghost. Tertullian (de Animâ, c. 8) says, "in spiritu factus animas martyrum conspicit." Cp. ibid. c. 10, and de Resur. carnis, c. 25. The souls of Martyrs are represented here as under the Altar; because they had been slain as Victims to God; their bodies had been sacrificed on His Altar, and their blood, in which is the life (Gen. ix. 4), had been poured out upon it, and flowed down beneath it, and cried from the ground, as did that of Abel the first Martyr. (Gen. iv. 10. Matt. xxiii. 35.)

The imagery of this Vision is derived from the sacrificial service of the Temple (Exod. xl. 29); "the blood of the victims being received by the sacrificing Priest in a vessel was poured out at the foot of the Altar" (Jahn, Archæol. § 377; see Levit. iv. 7; viii. 15. Isa. xxix. 1). The sacrificial word (ἐσφαγμένων) here rendered slain, is the same as is applied to Christ, the True and Faithful Martyr, the Lamb slain (see v. 6. 9. 12; xiii. 8), and to the Martyrs (in xviii. 24). This imagery had been already adopted by the Apostle St. Paul at Rome, on the eve of his own martyrdom; "I am already being poured out, and the time of my departure is at hand" (2 Tim. iv. 6).

St. John sees here the disembodied souls of departed saints; and he represents them, not as sleeping in insensibility, but as conscious of the past; and even as measuring the lapse of time, "Lord, how long?" and as earnestly longing and praying for the Coming of Christ. "How long, O Lord, the holy and true, dost Thou not judge?" "The souls of Martyrs," says Tertullian (Scorpiace, c. 12), "repose in peace under the Altar, and cherish a spirit of patience (patientiam pascunt) until others are admitted to fill up their communion of glory." And S. Irenæus says (v. 31, Grabe), "The souls of the departed go to the place assigned them by God, and there abide until the Resurrection, when they will be reunited to their bodies: and then the Saints, both in soul and body, will come into the presence of God." Cp. S. Cyprian de Lapsis, p. 446; and de Bono Patientiæ, p. 592.

The souls here seen by St. John are those which repose "in Abraham's bosom," and have a foretaste of future glory (Luke xvi. 22). See the Catena here, pp. 274, 5; and Aug. (?), who says, "The souls of the saints are in Paradise (Luke xxiii. 43), but they are said to be under the Altar, because their blood is shed on the earth, and crieth from the ground."

St. John, in another part of the prophecy (see xx. 4), reveals a similar vision of the disembodied souls of the Martyrs in the intermediate state. That revelation is similar to St. Paul's representation of the present condition of the departed spirits of the Ancient Patriarchs, who wait till the General Resurrection and Day of Judgment for their "perfect consummation and bliss, both in body and soul, in eternal and everlasting Glory" (Office for the Burial of the Dead). See Heb. xi. 40.

In the mean time, they enjoy the rest and refreshment of Paradise (Luke xxiii. 43), and are in Abraham's bosom (Luke xvi. 22). Therefore, as the Apocalypse says, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labours" (xiv. 13). The voice here assures them that the time of their rest is short, that is, it is short, compared with the time of future fruition of joy in eternity; and that ere long, when the number of their fellow-servants and brethren, God's Martyrs, has been accomplished, their bliss will be consummated by the Resurrection of their bodies, and by the gracious invitation of Christ to "inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the World" (Matt. xxv. 34).

As to the sense of ἐκδικεῖς, see above, on the prayer of the poor widow, Luke xviii. 3. 5; and below, xviii. 20, and the words of the Psalmist, zealous for the vindication of God's honour by the execution of His judgments on those who blaspheme His Name: Ps. lxxix. 10—13.

It is well said by Bede here, "Those souls which offered themselves a living sacrifice to God, pray eternally for His Coming to judgment, not from any vindictive feeling against their enemies, but in a spirit of zeal and love for God's glory and Justice, and for the Coming of that Day, when sin, which is rebellion against Him, will be destroyed (see Heb. ix. 28), and their own bodies will be raised. And so in that prayer wherein Christ teaches us to forgive our enemies, we are also taught to say, 'Thy Kingdom come.'"

11. στολὴ λευκή] a white robe. Elz. has here στολαὶ λευκαὶ, white robes, but the reading of A, B, C, στολὴ λευκὴ, in the singular, is far preferable, as indicating that the one and same white robe of Christ's righteousness was given to each of them (cp. xix. 14). All their unrighteousness is forgiven, and their sin is covered by that white robe (cp. James v. 20. 1 Pet. iv. 8), and they have a delightful consciousness of God's favour, and are with Christ (Phil. i. 23), and enjoy a blissful foretaste of heavenly and everlasting felicity.

Introduction to the SIXTH SEAL.

In the Apocalypse the number six always introduces a time of severe trial and suffering, previous to a seventh or Sabbatical period of Rest which ensues, and closes the series.

St. John saw the Visions of the Apocalypse on the Lord's Day (i. 10), the First Day of the week; and all these Visions are arranged in groups of sevens. Seven Epistles are sent; seven seals are opened; seven trumpets sound; seven vials are poured out. They all end in a Sabbath of rest, after an hexäemeron or six days' course of labour and sorrow. The number seven occurs nearly fifty times in the Apocalypse; see below, note at end of chap. xi.

There is a Harmony between the seven seals, indicating the seven successive periods of the sufferings of the Church, and the seven days of the Passion Week of Christ.

The first day of that week was Palm Sunday. Christ then came forth riding into Jerusalem, and was welcomed as a Conqueror and King. See on Matt. xxi. 1—11. Mark xi. 1—11. Luke xix. 29—44. John xii. 12—16.

So it was in the first seal. Christ came forth riding on the white horse, conquering and to conquer. See above, v. 2.

On the second day of that week, "the Chief Priests, and Scribes, and Chief of the People sought how they might destroy Him." Mark xi. 18. Luke xix. 47.

The Second Seal displays a similar working of the power of the Adversary against the Church (v. 3); and like analogies may be traced between the other days of the Passion Week of Christ, and the sufferings of the Church, as displayed in the seals.

The climax of Christ's Passion Week was Friday. The sixth Day was the Day of the Crucifixion.

So the Sixth Seal reveals the crisis of greatest suffering for the Church; it is the Friday of her Passion Week.

But it is also the eve of the Sabbath of her rest.

On the day of Christ's Passion, there was a strange and unnatural darkness. So, as this Seal reveals, will it likewise be in the sixth age of the Church, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find the Faith on earth?" see Luke xviii. 8. On Good Friday, there was desertion of Christ; and the Kings of the Earth stood up, and the Rulers took counsel together against the Lord and against His Anointed (Ps. ii. 2. Acts iv. 26, 27). So it will be in the last age of the Church. The Love of many will wax cold (Matt. xxiv. 12). Men will not endure sound doctrine (2 Tim. iv. 3). The Woman will suffer persecution, and be driven into the wilderness (Rev. xii. 6. 14). As at the Crucifixion there was an Earthquake, and the rocks were rent (Matt. xxvii. 51), so it will be then. As Christ's Death brought confusion and overthrow to Satan and his adherents, and Victory to all true believers, and was their entrance to Rest and a Glorious Resurrection; so the sufferings of the last age will be succeeded by, and crowned with, everlasting felicity. Then especially the Church—and every true member of the Church—will find and feel that we must through much tribulation enter the Kingdom of God (Acts xiv. 22), and if we suffer with Him we shall also reign with Him: cp. Rom. viii. 17.

The Sixth Seal.

12—17. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw when He opened the sixth seal, and there was a great Earthquake, and the Sun became black as sackcloth of hair; and the whole Moon became as blood; and the Stars of heaven fell to the earth even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind; and the Heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every Mountain and Island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the chief captains, and the rich men, and the mighty men, and every man bond and free, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains: and they say to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great Day of His wrath is come: and who is able to stand?

This prophetic description may be combined with that in vii. 1—3, revealing "the preparations for the accomplishment of the number of the Elect."

Some Modern Interpreters have supposed that this Sixth Seal refers only to the establishment of Christianity in the Fourth Century.

But all the ancient Expositors were agreed, as was observed before, that the Sixth Seal brings the prophecy down to the last age of the Church and the World. Cp. Tertullian, adv. Hermog. c. 34; and S. Hippolytus, pp. 113. 115 (ed. Lagarde); and the Auctor Anonym. adv. Novatianum, p. 781 of S. Cyprian, Works, ed. Venet. 1758; and the Ancient Greek Expositors here, in Caten., p. 282; and Primasius and other Ancient Latin Interpreters of the Apocalypse.

As it is essential to the right understanding of the Apocalypse that this point should be settled, the following considerations are submitted to the reader, in confirmation of the Ancient Exposition.

(1) The Apocalypse is a sequel to the Book of Daniel. St. John takes the thread of Prophecy from the hand of Daniel. He deals with many of the same subjects, and adopts his imagery and language.

It is therefore highly probable that the Holy Spirit, Who inspired Daniel and St. John, and Who is a Spirit of Wisdom and Order, would present the prophetic Visions to their minds, according to the same plan.

In examining the prophecies of Daniel, we find that the Holy Spirit first presents a rapid sketch of the future from Daniel's age to the Day of Doom. This is done in the vision seen by Nebuchadnezzar, and revealed by God to Daniel, and interpreted by Daniel under the divine inspiration (Dan. ii. 31—45).

That first Vision in the Book of Daniel has its parallel in this first Vision of the Apocalypse.

Each of these Visions—that of the image in Daniel, and this of the Seals in St. John—displays a brief view of the future, even to the end of the World.

Again; in the Book of Daniel the Vision of the quadriform Image is succeeded by the Vision of the Four Beasts (vii. 1—27), in which the subject of the former prophecy is displayed in a different and ampler form; and that Vision is succeeded by other subsidiary Visions (viii. 2—25), in which some of the elements and features of the former Visions are exhibited in clearer outline and larger dimensions.

Precisely the same method is employed in the Apocalypse. See above, Introduction, pp. 147, 8.

(2) If we scrutinize the context and contents of the Sixth Seal, we shall see that it cannot refer to the age of Constantine, nor to any other age than the last age of the Church.

The phenomena of this Seal do not belong to the fourth century. It could not be said then, that "the Great Day of the wrath of the Lamb was come" (v. 17); or that it was a time of general panic and confusion; or that it was succeeded by the completion and gathering together of God's elect from all nations under heaven, and by an universal triumph of His people, and by an universal ascription of praise to Him and to the Lamb, and by the admission of the Saints to stand before His throne, and to serve in His Temple day and night (vii. 15). When the Day of Universal Resurrection and of the Last Judgment shall come, then—but not till then—will the Saints be admitted into heaven, to stand before God's throne, and to serve in His Temple for ever. See above, vv. 10, 11.

The Events just specified form the immediate Sequel of the Sixth Seal.

Hence it is evident that the prophecies in the Sixth Seal were not fulfilled in Constantine's age, nor will they be accomplished till the eve of the consummation of all things.

(3) This appears also from the tenor of the prophecies in the preceding seals; which lead by a successive series of visions from the Time of Christ's First Advent to the last age of the Church.

Here then we have a clue to the interpretation of this Seal; and we shall find that the succeeding Visions are cleared up by this exposition, and reflect additional light upon it, and augment the evidence of its truth.

The imagery of this Seal is similar to that with which our Blessed Lord Himself describes the circumstances of His own Second Coming to Judgment (see Matt. xxiv. 29—31). "The Sun shall be darkened, and the Moon shall not give her light, and the Stars shall fall from heaven, and all the powers of the heavens shall be shaken; and then shall appear the Sign of the Son of Man in heaven, and then shall all the tribes of the Earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds with power and great glory."

This prophecy of our Lord introduces the mention of the last Trumpet, and the gathering together of His elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to another. Matt. xxiv. 31.

Here is another parallel to this Seal; in which a command is given to the four Angels at the four corners of the earth, not to hurt the earth till the Servants of God are sealed; and then the number of the elect is completed (vii. 4—9).

Our Lord also in another place thus describes His own Second coming, "There shall be signs in the Sun, and in the Moon, and in the Stars, and upon the Earth distress of Nations, with perplexity, the Sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that shall be coming on the Earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken; and then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory" (Luke xxi. 25—27). See also the prophecies of Isaiah (li. 6. 2 Pet. iii. 7. 10, 11) concerning the last days. Those prophecies, and that of our Lord just quoted, harmonize with the Vision of this Seal, and show its reference to the same events.

Lastly, the imagery of this Seal connects it with other Visions in the Apocalypse itself, descriptive of the condition of the World in the last age.

The mention here of the war and rout of the Kings of the Earth, i. e. the powers of this world opposed to Christ and to the Kings from the East (xvi. 12), and the mention also of the great Earthquake in this Seal, and the moving of Mountains and Islands, seem to show that the time of this Seal coincides with that of the Sixth and Seventh Vials, described in the sixteenth Chapter as follows: "12. And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon that great river, Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way might be prepared of the kings from the East. 13. And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs from the mouth of the dragon, and from the mouth of the beast, and from the mouth of the false prophet. 14. For they are spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great Day of God Almighty. 16. And they gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

"17. And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done. 18. And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great. 19. And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell; and Babylon the Great came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of His wrath. 20. And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found."

In v. 12, after σελήνη, A, B, C have ὅλη, whole, which is omitted by Elz.

a Dan. 7. 2. VII. 1 a Καὶ μετὰ τοῦτο εἶδον τέσσαρας ἀγγέλους ἑστῶτας ἐπὶ τὰς τέσσαρας

In v. 15 Elz. has πᾶς before ἐλεύθερος, but πᾶς is not in A, B, C. The panic and distress of this convulsion are described as so great that even slaves, who in the ancient States would not be much concerned by the distress of their masters, are involved therein.

15. πᾶς δοῦλος] every bondman and every freeman. Cp. Isa. xxiv. 2, and below, xiii. 16; xix. 18.

16. λέγουσι τοῖς ὄρεσι] they say to the Mountains, Fall upon us. Compare above, on Luke xxiii. 30. The Kings of the Earth and Great Men of this world, who have not used their power as Vicegerents and Deputies of Christ, for the maintenance of His Truth, and for the promotion of His Glory, will then be fain to hide themselves in caves and dens of the earth, as the kings of Canaan did, when flying from Joshua, the type of Jesus (Josh. x. 16—22); but in vain.

— κρύψατε ἡμᾶς—ἀπὸ τῆς ὀργῆς τοῦ Ἀρνίου] hide us from the wrath of the Lamb. Awful and striking words. Save us from the wrath of Him whom we despised as weak and gentle as a Lamb, and whom we now find to be strong and terrible as the Lion.

He who was preached to us as the "Lamb of God, taking away the sins of the World," and dying to save us, is now become the Author of our punishment and woe. Dreadful discovery! Compare xiv. 14.

Perhaps also this will be said by some in a tone of desperate derision and fiendish blasphemy. Cp. xvi. 9. 11. 21.

Contrast this exclamation of agony with the ascription of salvation to God and the Lamb on the part of the servants of God (vii. 9). They will pass in safety through the great tribulation (vii. 14), and will stand for ever before the Throne of God and the Lamb (vii. 9), and the Lamb will lead them to waters of Life (vii. 17).

Brief Retrospect of the preceding SEALS.

In the First Seal we saw our Blessed Lord and Saviour arrayed as a mighty Warrior, crowned, riding in triumph on a white horse, conquering and to conquer. Such He appeared at the period of the First Seal; that is, in the primitive age of Christianity.

The succeeding Seals have displayed Satan, the Adversary of Christ and His Church. Christ, we have seen, is ever one and the same. He is ever on the white horse; ever pure, ever true, ever victorious. But Satan changes his form and colour. He is first terrible, on a horse of blood, and brandishes a sword. He next appears on a black horse, and holds a balance. He then comes forth on a pale horse, with Death, and Hades, and Hunger, and Beasts in his train. Christ is ever the same; but Satan assumes different shapes and colours, and has different weapons and allies, to suit the temper of the times. When he is foiled in one device, he resorts to another. He knows where men are most vulnerable, and assails them accordingly: and so it will ever be to the end of the world; when, having exhausted all his arts, he will, like the fabled Proteus after all his changes, return to his original shape, and fiercely persecute the Church (xx. 8, 9).

But now look at the end.

The day will at length come, when all his efforts will be defeated. Look at the close of the Apocalypse. He Who is on the White Horse has subdued all His enemies. The two Beasts (xiii. 1. 11), the allies of Satan, are taken by Christ, "and cast alive into the lake of fire" (xix. 20). "Death and Hades are cast into the lake of fire; which is the second death" (xx. 14). And at last, Satan himself is "cast into the lake of fire, to be tormented for ever and ever" (xx. 10).

The purpose therefore of the Seals is to assure the Christian Church that Christ has gone forth conquering and to conquer; and that whatever His enemies may do, His Victory is certain, and will be eventually complete.

They also warn her, that she must not look for peace, or for perfect purity on earth. They reveal to her that she must expect to be tried by manifold forms of persecution from without, and of error from within. But she is also cheered with the assurance that all who remain true to Christ will be partakers of His Victory.

This design of the Seals is clearly brought out by the answer of the Angel at the end of the Vision of the sixth Seal, just before the final consummation, when he describes the whole company of those who are saved, even from the first Advent of Christ. "These," he says, "are they that are coming out of the great tribulation, and who washed their robes white in the blood of the Lamb" (vii. 14).

We are taught also by these Visions how History ought to be written, and how it ought to be read. And in speaking here of History we may include History not only of the Church, but of the World. Our Lord says, "the Field is the World" (Matt. xiii. 38). The Church is universal in time and place, and whatever concerns the World concerns the Church, and whatever concerns the Church, concerns all men.

We learn from these Visions to study History in this spirit. We learn to contemplate its events not only as facts teaching civil wisdom, but to regard them as St. John teaches us to do; that is, as exhibiting the operations of two opposite Powers, the power of Christ on one side, and the power of Satan on the other. Thus the early Christian Historians treated historical events; here is their great excellence. They looked on Persecution, and Heresy, and Superstition, and Infidelity, as weapons of Satan against Christ. In them they saw the Evil One riding, as it were, on the red horse, and the black horse, and the pale horse, against Him who sitteth on the white horse. If we do likewise, we shall study History with the spirit of St. John.

Lastly: to whom do we now belong? Whom are we following? Him Who rideth for ever on the white horse? or him who sitteth, now on the red horse, now on the black, now on the pale horse? Christ, or Satan? Doubtless in this world Satan has strong allies and terrible weapons; the sword, famine, the beasts, the grave. But prospice finem. Let us have our eye fixed on the end. Where shall we be then? With those who "follow Christ on white horses?" or with "the Beasts, the Grave, and Satan, who will be cast into the lake of fire, which is the Second Death?"

CH. VII. The SEALING of the SERVANTS of God; the accomplishment of His Elect.

1. καὶ μετὰ τοῦτο] So A, B, C. Elz. ταῦτα. And after this I saw four angels standing at the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that no wind should blow on the Earth, nor on the Sea, nor on any Tree. And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the Earth and the Sea, saying, Hurt not the Earth, neither the Sea nor the Trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads. On these verses compare above, vi. 12. The Four Angels are represented as standing at the Four Corners of the Earth, ready to gather in God's Elect from the four winds of heaven (see Matt. xxiv. 31), and to execute His Judgments on the ungodly. Compare Matt. xiii. 39. 41, and 2 Thess. i. 7, 8, where the Angels are represented as ministers of His power and retributive justice on His enemies.

Another Angel appears, ascending from the East or sunrising (ἀνατολή). This Angel is either Christ Himself, or a special Messenger from Christ. Christ is described in Scripture, and particularly in this Book, as the Ἀνατολή, or East (see on Luke i. 78, and below, on xvi. 12), and this Angel is a superior Angel, for he here gives a command to the four Angels; and they are his ministers and agents.

Hurt not ye the Earth, he says, neither the Sea, nor any Tree, till we have sealed the servants of our God on their foreheads. The four Angels therefore are not only empowered to hurt, but they are also commissioned to Seal. The Sealing must first take place, before the infliction of vengeance.

The four Angels are commanded to restrain the Winds, or blasts of destruction, from blowing on the Earth, that is, on Earthly Powers, opposed to those of Heaven (see on i. 7; iii. 10), and from blowing on the Sea, the element of storms, which is the Apocalyptic emblem of Nations in a state of restless agitation, swelling, raging, and tossing their waves on high against God (cp. Ps. xxix. 9; xlvi. 3; lxv. 7); and from hurting the Trees, the Great and Powerful ones of this world, flourishing in the verdure and luxuriance of earthly prosperity. The Rich and Powerful of this world are often compared in Scripture to Trees, and are symbolized in its poetic imagery by Cedars of Lebanon, and Oaks of Basan for stateliness and strength, and by green Bay-trees for prosperity. Cp. Job xxix. 19. Ps. xcii. 12—14. Isa. ii. 13. Jer. xvii. 8. Ezek. xvii. 3, 4. Dan. iv. 10—16. Hos. xiv. 6, 7.

The Sealing takes place first; the Vengeance follows. The important fact is thus made manifest, that the main design and primary purpose of God's workings in this world is the preservation and beatification of His servants; and that the Punishment of the opposing powers of this World which are His Enemies, and are here represented by the Earth, Sea, and Trees, is only secondary and subordinate; that it is not directly designed by Him, but consequent on their sins. Cp. Matt. xxiv. 41.

The Angels are restrained from inflicting punishment, until they have sealed the servants of God on their foreheads. This action of sealing with the seal or signet of God, is equivalent to a declaration, that they, who are so sealed, appertain to God, and are distinguished as such from others who do not belong to Him, and are assured by Him of His protection against all evil; and that they are completed in number and consummated in happiness: cp. the use of σφραγίζω, to seal, in Isa. viii. 16. Dan. ix. 24. John iii. 33; vi. 27. Rom. xv. 28. Eph. i. 13; iv. 30.

This Vision may be compared with the Vision in Ezekiel (ix. 4—6), where the Saints are sealed with the letter Thau, the last letter of the Hebrew Alphabet (see the original Hebrew there, and also Vulg.); showing their constant perseverance to the end, and the unfailing protection of God. Cp. Bishop Andrewes, ii. p. 76.

The forehead is specified as that on which the divine impress is received. Cp. Rev. xxii. 4. The forehead is the most conspicuous part of the human body; as the ancient Fathers observe, it is the seat of boldness and constancy both for evil and good (see Jer. iii. 3. Ezek. iii. 7—9); and it shows whether a man is a faithful soldier of Christ, or sold in slavery to the Evil One.

Hence the Cross is impressed on the forehead in the Sacrament of Baptism (which was often called σφραγὶς, or seal, by ancient Christian writers. See Euseb. iii. 23, in a narrative concerning St. John. Greg. Naz. Orat. xl. Suicer, Thesaur. p. 1198, v. σφραγὶς), in order that he who bears it "may not be ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified, but may manfully fight under His banner against Sin, the World, and the Devil, and continue His faithful soldier and servant unto his life's end."

The Antichristian Power is also represented as imitating this by a similar process with regard to its own servants, whom it seals on the forehead (Rev. xiii. 16; xiv. 9; xx. 4).

4. καὶ ἤκουσα] And I heard the number of them which were sealed: and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of every tribe of the children of Israel. Of the tribe of Judah were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Reuben twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Aser twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Nepthalim twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Manasses twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Simeon twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Levi twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Issachar twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Zabulon twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.

With regard to the last of these verses it may be observed that Elz. repeats here the word ἐσφραγισμένων twelve times after χιλιάδες; but it is found only twice in A, B, C, and many Cursives. Also, Elz. has ιβ' instead of δώδεκα, which is in A, C; and in v. 4 Elz. has ρμδ' instead of the fuller orthography of the numerals.

What do these ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOUR THOUSAND represent?

They do not signify the literal Israelites; but they represent the "blessed company of all faithful people," gathered together from all parts of the World, and constituting the Church Universal, redeemed by Christ's Blood, and sealed by His Spirit, and continuing stedfastly in the doctrine preached by His Apostles, sent by Him and taught by the Holy Ghost.

This is evident as follows:

(1) They do not signify the literal Israel.

One of the main designs of the Apocalypse is, to show that believers in Christ are the true Israel of God; and that all the promises made by God to Abraham, the Patriarchs, and the Prophets, are fulfilled to those who are incorporated in the Mystical body of Christ, the true seed of Abraham, and abide in Him unto the end. See above, Introduction, p. 144.

St. John does not concede even the title of Jew to the literal Israel. "They say that they are Jews, and are not" (ii. 9; iii. 9). The Jerusalem, of which the Apocalypse speaks, is always the Christian Church (see iii. 12; xxi. 2. 10). The Sion is the spiritual Sion (see xiv. 1), the Royal City of Christ, Who has the key of David (see iii. 7), and Who is the Root and offspring of David (v. 5; xxii. 16).

In this respect the language of the Apocalypse had been already anticipated by the Apostle of the Gentiles. "He is not a Jew," says St. Paul, "who is one outwardly, neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh: but he is a Jew who is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart" (Rom. ii. 28, 29); and he says "We are the Circumcision" (Phil. iii. 3; cp. Col. ii. 11). "If ye be Christ's ye are Abraham's seed" (Gal. iii. 29. Rom. ix. 8). "Ye are come to Mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to the spirits of just men made perfect." (Heb. xii. 22, 23; cp. Gal. iv. 26.)

Here was a source of inexpressible comfort to all the children of Abraham, especially in the latter days of St. John's age, when the literal Jerusalem was trodden under foot by the Gentiles. Its glories had been eclipsed by those of the Christian Church, or rather they had been swallowed up in its splendour. The spiritual Sion had risen on the ruins of the material Jerusalem. No longer were the eyes of the faithful to be fixed on the stones and buildings of the Temple, and on the transitory glories of its evanescent Ritual. They needed not the Levitical shadows, for they possessed the Evangelical substance. They were now "fellow-citizens with the saints," in every age and clime, and they looked upwards to the solid fabric and glorious solemnities of "the city that hath foundations;" "the Jerusalem that is above, which is the mother of us all." (Gal. iv. 26.) They beheld with the eye of Faith the great High Priest of their profession, ministering in the Heavenly Sanctuary within the Veil.

(2) Nor do these 144,000, who are sealed in this Vision, represent only the Jews who believe in Christ; they represent all the faithful, whether Jews or Gentiles.

The names of the Tribes specified here are not to be understood literally as signifying Tribes of Israelitish Christians. This is clear from the fact that one of the twelve tribes, that of Dan, does not appear at all in the List. It cannot be imagined that not a single person would be saved of that Tribe, to which many holy men had belonged.

Besides, if the names of the Tribes were to be taken literally, so ought also the number of those who are sealed in each tribe:

But it is incredible, that precisely the same number of persons should be saved from each of the Twelve Tribes here mentioned; and only so small a number as 144,000 should be saved in all.

(3) Therefore, we may rest assured that the interpretation is sound, which is supplied here by the ancient Expositors, and is adopted by some of the best modern commentators, especially Vitringa and Hengstenberg in his notes on xi. 13. Neither the names, nor the numbers, in this Vision are to be understood literally.

The present Vision becomes clear, when we regard these ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOUR THOUSAND as representing the glorified company of the whole Church of the Saints of God. The number 144,000 represents their consummation. As is well said by S. Augustine (de Doctrinâ Christianâ), "The number Twelve multiplied into Twelve makes One Hundred and Forty-Four, the number in the Apocalypse, which designates the uni- versal Society of the Saints;" and so Aug.? here, "centum quadraginta quatuor Millia omnis omninò Ecclesia est."

The number here mentioned, 144,000, is produced by Twelve squared, multiplied into Ten cubed. Twelve is the number of the Apostles; and being multiplied into itself and by a Thousand, it offers an apt representation of the Company of believers, "of a thousand generations," holding the Apostolic doctrine and discipline unto the end, in solid constancy and unity.

Geometrical dimensions were often used by the ancients, as exponents of moral qualities. Thus we have ἄνδρα χερσί τε καὶ ποσὶ καὶ νόῳ τετράγωνον (a man perfectly squared), in Plato (Protag. 339, B). Compare Horace's metaphor, "Fortis et in se-ipso totus teres atque rotundus." 2 Sat. vii. 86.

The Number Twelve in the Apocalypse represents what is Apostolical. Thus the faithful Church is crowned with Twelve Stars (xii. 1); the Church glorified in the heavenly Jerusalem has Twelve Gates, and Twelve Angels, and has the names of the Twelve Tribes of Israel inscribed upon the Gates (xxi. 12); and it has Twelve foundation-stones, and on them written the names of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb (xxi. 14); and the heavenly City lies four square, with 12,000 furlongs on each side, and its walls are 12 × 12,000 cubits high (xxi. 17); and its Twelve Gates are Twelve Pearls (xxi. 21); and the Tree of Life yields Twelve Fruits (xxii. 2); all in harmony with our Lord's words to His Apostles, "Ye shall sit on Twelve Thrones judging the Twelve Tribes of Israel." (Matt. xix. 28.)

Compare the note above, Matt. x. 2, on the Moral and Theological value and signification of the Number Twelve, and also on its components Three and Four; and see below on xi. 3.

This number, like the other numbers in the Apocalypse, has therefore a didactic character. The number Twelve times Twelve thousand, describing the Servants of God sealed in their foreheads, exhibits a fundamental principle, which may be demonstrated from other parts of Holy Scripture. It displays the duty of internal union, and of visible communion, and of stedfast continuance "in the doctrine and fellowship of the Apostles, and in breaking of bread and prayers." (Acts ii. 42.) "The sameness of the number sealed in each of these Twelve tribes," say the ancient Greek Expositors, p. 287, "shows the universal dissemination of the same Apostolic seed; and the multiplication of twelve times twelve by a thousand shows the fruitfulness of the seed sown by the Apostles, who were the chosen disciples and divinely commissioned ministers of Him who was the Grain of Corn that fell into the earth and died, and brought forth much fruit" (John xii. 24). By the gracious influence of the Holy Ghost, poured out upon the seed, "a little one became a thousand, and a small one a strong Nation; the Lord hastened it in His time." (Isa. lx. 22.) "By this mystical number 144,000," says Primasius, "the innumerable multitude of the Elect is signified."

Further, lest any one should imagine, that this number of the Twelve Tribes of the sealed is to be interpreted literally, and that the servants of God make only so small a number as 144,000; or that these Tribes are literally Tribes of Israel; St. John takes care to add that they are innumerable, and come from every nation under heaven. He says, "After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of every nation, and tribes, and peoples, and tongues, stood before the Throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and they cry with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb."

It is well observed here by Aug.? and Primasius, and Bede, that St. John here combines together in one those whom he had before specified singly. He thus aptly intimates that each of the elect in each tribe, in each age, and each country, of the spiritual Israel, is well known to Him who calleth all His sheep by name (John x. 3. 11), and numbereth every hair of our heads (Matt. x. 30), and that they are also united in one body in Christ, before His throne in heaven; they are all joined in the same Root of David, and all are the Seed of Abraham, by faith in Christ.

It being therefore understood, that they, who are sealed, represent the complete number of God's servants from every nation under heaven; the question now arises,

What principle determines the arrangement and designation of these Tribes of the Christian Israel,—that is, of the Church Universal, containing both Jews and Gentiles? See Acts xv. 9. Rom. iii. 29. 1 Cor. xii. 13. Gal. iii. 28. Eph. ii. 13—16. Col. iii. 11.

For an answer to this question, we must compare the arrangement of these Twelve Tribes in this Vision, with that of the Twelve Patriarchs of the literal Israel, as regulated by order of birth in the Old Testament. See Gen. xxix. 32—35; xxx. 1—24.

This comparison will be facilitated by the following synoptical Table:

On comparing the natural order by birth, with the order in the Apocalypse, we see the following discrepancies:

Judah is here placed before Simeon and Levi, and before Reuben the first-born. Here is another evidence of the Christian significance of these tribes.

Judah is placed first, because "our Lord sprang out of Judah" (Heb. vii. 14), and is the Lion of the tribe of Judah (Rev. vii. 5), and Judah and Jerusalem are the Apocalyptic names of the true Church of God. (Cp. above, ii. 9; iii. 9. 12, and below, xxi. 2. 10.)

Simeon and Levi, the second and third in order by natural birth, are degraded in the Apocalypse to the seventh and eighth places respectively. Here also is a proof that the names are not to be taken literally, but have a moral and spiritual sense. Simeon and Levi are reprobated by the Patriarch Jacob in his prophecy, for their subtlety and cruelty in punishing the wrong done to their sister (Gen. xlix. 5); and perhaps in their degradation they symbolize here a moral truth, that good ends are not to be attained by evil means, and that furious zeal, even in God's cause, is not pleasing to Him.

[f] Ps. 3. 9. Isa. 43. 11. Jer. 3. 23. Hos. 13. 4.

The fifth son of Jacob, namely, Dan, is altogether excluded from this list.

That tribe was notorious for its unhappy zeal in receiving and propagating idolatry (see Judges xviii. 1—31). This interpretation is suggested by Jewish writers themselves (e. g. the Targum of Jonathan on Exod. xvi. 8, and on Numb. xi. 1; xxii. 41, and Deut. xxv. 18), who represent the name of Dan as a proverbial by-word for idolatry (see Wetstein, p. 776).

"The reason for the excluding of Dan," says Hengstenberg on xi. 13, "is, that the only narrative of the Old Testament, in which Dan played a part, is that respecting the worship of idols in the Book of Judges (xviii. 1—31); so that the declaration in chap. xxii. 15 of the Apocalypse, 'without are idolaters,' is here represented by the omission of Dan."

Here therefore is a protest against Idolatry, as wholly disqualifying for admission into the number of God's Saints in glory. Here also is a preparation for the Judgments denounced against Idolatry in later parts of the Apocalypse (see ix. 20; xxi. 8; xxii. 15).

Here again the Prophecy of the Patriarch Jacob on his deathbed, concerning his seed, the heads of the twelve Tribes, and concerning those Tribes themselves, sheds light on this Apocalyptic Vision of the Tribes of the spiritual Israel, and is illustrated by it. There is a mystical analogy between the Prophecy and the Vision which has not yet been fully unfolded. Dan is omitted here; and in the patriarchal prophecy Dan is described in ominous words. Dan is first portrayed as a Judge or Ruler, and then it is added, "Dan shall be a serpent in the way, an adder in the path that biteth the horse heels, so that his rider shall fall backward."

The imagery of that Prophecy connects it with the Apocalyptic visions of the Power of Evil represented by the Serpent (xii. 9. 14, 15; xx. 2); and the Rider in the Prophecy may have also a connexion with the Rider in the Vision of the Seals of the Apocalypse (see above, vi. 4, 5), and may represent the destiny and punishment of Evil recoiling on and supplanting itself. There seems to be an expression of this feeling in the patristic Exposition, that "Antichrist would rise from Dan," Hippolytus, p. 7, ed. Lagarde; cp. Irenæus (v. 30. 2), who notices the omission of Dan here, and connects it with Jeremiah's prophecy, viii. 16, 17, "The snorting of horses was heard from Dan —behold, I will send serpents;" and he regards Dan as a symbol of the Man of Sin.

Another name of a Tribe omitted is Ephraim.

The defection of the Ten Tribes from the House of David and from the worship at Jerusalem, commenced with Ephraim (2 Sam. ii. 9), and was mainly promoted by Ephraim (1 Kings xii. 25. Isa. vii. 9. 17).

Samaria, the capital of Israel, and the Samaritan Temple at Gerizim, distinct from Judah, and the Temple at Jerusalem, were in the tribe of Ephraim. Ephraim is often mentioned by the Prophets as the rival of Judah, and as a synonym for Israel as opposed to Judah, and even combining with the enemies of Judah and Jerusalem—the Church of God; see particularly the words in Isa. vii. 2. It was told Ahaz, Syria is confederate with Ephraim: see also vv. 5 and 17, where Ephraim is charged with the guilt of the schism of Jeroboam (see also Isa. ix. 9; cp. Jer. vii. 15).

The prophecies of Hosea abound with denunciations and warnings against Ephraim (Hos. v. 3. 9. 13; vi. 4. 10; vii. 1. 8; viii. 9. 11; ix. 3. 8. 11. 13; xi. 12; xii. 1. 14), which, assuredly, are applicable to the schisms and heresies, the unbelief and ungodliness, of a corrupt Christendom.

Therefore, in the omission of Ephraim from the number of the Saints, there is a divine caution and exhortation addressed to Christians, that they should flee from those sins for which Ephraim is condemned by the Voice of God in the Old Testament; especially from the sin of schism.

The family of Ephraim is not dealt with here precisely in the same way as Dan is. Dan and his seed are altogether omitted. But Joseph the Father of Ephraim, and Manasseh the brother of Ephraim, are both admitted into this catalogue: whereas in the division of Canaan among the Tribes, Joseph had been represented by his two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh.

This may be designed to exhibit the contrast between the earthly and heavenly inheritance; and to show that the principles by which this Apocalyptic enumeration is regulated are not natural, but spiritual.

Ephraim's seed, in so far as they are children of Joseph's faith, may yet have an inheritance; though not as far as they commit those sins which gave Ephraim a character of rivalry and hostility to Judah, the true Church of God. And though Ephraim and Manasseh were brothers in blood, yet "one is taken, the other left" (Matt. xxiv. 40. Luke xvii. 34—36), so it will be in the heavenly Canaan. It is not natural birth, but spiritual birth, not carnal brotherhood, but brotherhood in Christ, which will gain an entrance there.

Naphtali, who by birth was fifth, is sixth in order in the Apocalypse. Gad and Asher, who were seventh and eighth by birth, are here placed second and third.

These three were children of handmaids: Naphtali, of Bilhah, Rachel's handmaid; Gad and Asher, of Zilpah, Leah's handmaid; and yet they are here elevated in rank, and are placed before Simeon and Levi, the children of Leah, and before Manasseh, descended, through Joseph, from Rachel.

The moral of this transposition is, that circumstances of worldly birth are of no account in the Christian Church; the sons of the stranger are brought to God's holy mountain (Isa. lvi. 6); the Church of God herself is a Spouse wedded from the heathen world (cp. on Matt. i. 3), and the Gentile is preferred to the Jew; "there are last that will be first, and first that will be last" (Luke xiii. 30).

The last four names are the same in the order of Birth, and also of the Apocalypse. One pair of them, Issachar and Zebulun, is from Leah; the other pair, Joseph and Benjamin, is from Rachel.

There is another resemblance in the two orders of names.

In the literal Israel, the children of the same mother were born, in successive births, by pairs. Thus, from Leah came Reuben and Simeon, Levi and Judah, by successive births. From Rachel's handmaid came, in like manner, Dan and Naphtali. From Leah's handmaid came Gad and Asher. From Leah came Issachar and Zebulun. From Rachel came also Joseph and Benjamin in successive births; see the synoptical table in p. 192.

The same principle is visible in the order of the Apocalypse.

Here Judah and Reuben, from Leah, are ranged side by side; so, from Leah's handmaid, Gad and Asher. From Rachel's handmaid, Naphtali. Dan, the son of Rachel's handmaid, is here omitted; and Manasseh, from Rachel through Joseph, is introduced; but not Ephraim, who does not appear. From Leah, Simeon and Levi are placed together, and another pair, Issachar and Zebulun. From Rachel, Joseph and Benjamin.

The foundation in the Old covenant was laid on a pair of Brothers, Moses and Aaron. And Christ, in calling His Twelve Apostles, chose three pairs of Brothers— Simon and Andrew; James and John; James and Jude (see note above, on Matt. iv. 18).

Thus Almighty God has recognized and commended natural relationship as the groundwork of Christian affection and co-operation. Doubtless it will be seen hereafter, that ties of natural kindred have been instrumental—according to the benevolent design of the Universal Father of the spiritual Israel—in promoting spiritual edification and everlasting happiness and unity in the blessed family and household of the Saints glorified in heaven.

9. μετὰ ταῦτα εἶδον] After this I beheld, and lo! a great multitude, which no man could number, of every Nation and Tribes and Peoples and Tongues stood before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands: and they cry with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb.

On the accusative περιβεβλημένους, the reading of A, B, C, cp. xiv. 14; xviii. 12; see Winer, p. 414, and p. 511. Two constructions are blended together. Observe the transition from the singular ἔθνους to the plural φυλῶν; the words φυλῶν and λαῶν declare that not the Jews only (who appropriate the terms φυλὴ and λαὸς to themselves) but all men are tribes and people of God.

salem, and after all her conflicts with spiritual Enemies, and after the gathering of her spiritual Harvest, sings Hosannas to God and to the Lamb.

13. καὶ ἀπεκρίθη] And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, Who are these who are arrayed in the white robes? and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they who come out of the great tribulation, and washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve Him day and night in His temple: and He that sitteth on the throne shall tabernacle upon them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto fountains of waters of life; and God shall wipe away every tear from their eyes.

They are clothed with white robes, and have palms in their hands, and sing salvation to our God and the Lamb. The Palm is an emblem of Victory. As such, it is found engraved on monumental slabs in the Catacombs of Rome, indicating that after the battles of life, they, who are buried there, have triumphed by the power of Christ. See Aringhi, Roma Subterranea, cap. xv., and cap. xx.

Doubtless, also, in this Vision, there is a reference to the rejoicing at the Feast of Tabernacles, ἡ σκηνοπηγία, which was the last of the three great annual Festivals of the Jews. It was in the seventh month, and lasted for seven days, and had a great sabbath on the eighth day, and was called "the Festival," the crown and glory of all Festivals, and closed the sacred rejoicings of the Hebrew year. See the notes above on John vii. 2. 37; and on Matt. xxi. 8, 9; and Wetstein here, p. 777.

That Festival commemorated the Journey of the Israelites through the wilderness, when they dwelt in Tabernacles or Tents, and God Himself tabernacled among them; and the Ingathering of the Fruits of the Harvest was celebrated with joy and thanksgiving at that feast.

They who took part in that festival bare palm branches in their hands, and cried with loud voices Hosanna, "Save us, we beseech Thee," and praised God for His mercies in the past year. 2 Macc. x. 6, 7. Indeed, the Palm branches were called Hosannas.

At that Feast also, they drew water in golden urns from the pool of Siloam, which had a typical reference to the future outpouring of the living waters of the Gospel. See on John ix. 7. They poured out that water from Siloam, on the great altar, in memorial of the water which had flowed from the smitten Rock in the wilderness, another type of Christ, 1 Cor. x. 4; and they chanted the great Hallel (Ps. cxiii.—cxviii.), in which they celebrated the deliverances from Egypt and their entrance into Canaan. "When Israel came out of Egypt; the sea saw that and fled: Jordan was driven back; Tremble thou Earth at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the God of Jacob, who turned the rock into a standing water, and the flint-stone into a springing well" (Ps. cxiv. 1—8); and to it Isaiah alludes, "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of Salvation." (Isa. xii. 3.)

That sublime prophecy had pre-announced the pouring out of the living waters of Salvation, by the effusion of the Holy Ghost, consequent on the Incarnation of CHRIST, who is the Lord JEHOVAH (Isa. xii. 2), ever "in the midst" of the true Israel (v. 6), being EMMANUEL, God with us, Matt. i. 23.

Therefore, the inhabitants of the Christian Sion may well cry aloud and shout, with Hosannas; as the literal Israel did at the feast of Tabernacles.

That Feast, which celebrated the ingathering of the Fruits of the Earth, typified the ingathering of the spiritual Harvest, consequent on the outpouring of the gracious rain of the Holy Spirit (Ps. lxviii. 9), sent to God's inheritance, the Church, through the Incarnation of Christ and His Enthronization in our Nature at the Right Hand of God.

Indeed, the Feast of Tabernacles, commemorating the dwelling of the Israelites in tabernacles, and of the God of Israel Himself in a Tabernacle in the wilderness, appears to have been designed as a Type of the crowning mercy of God in the fulness of Time, when the Son of God Himself ἐσκήνωσεν ἐν ἡμῖν, i. e. pitched His Tabernacle in our Nature (see on John i. 14); and of all the gracious gifts of the Living Waters of the Holy Ghost, and the Glorious Vision of God, and triumphant beatification of heaven, which result from the Incarnation. See above on John vii. 37.

The disciples of Christ and the People of Jerusalem, who took branches of Palms, and sung Hosannas to Christ, when He rode on the young ass in His triumphant Entry into Jerusalem, and when He gave a glimpse of His future glory, and symbolized the salvation of the Heathen World (see notes on Matt. xxi. 5. 8. 9), were moved to adopt the language and practices of the Feast of Tabernacles in their homage to Him at that time.

Hence we recognize the propriety and beauty of the imagery in this Vision of the Apocalypse.

The Israel of God, now that its journey and warfare is over, and that the Harvest of the Saints is gathered in, takes palm branches and sings Hosannas to God; and they are before the throne of God, and serve Him day and night in His temple, and God shall tabernacle upon them (σκηνώσει ἐπ' αὐτοὺς, see v. 15 here); He Who pitched His tabernacle with Israel in the wilderness of Arabia, He who overshadowed them with the Pillar of Cloud, and led them by the Pillar of Fire, He who pitched His tabernacle in us (John i. 14), shall now tabernacle upon them for ever: and as the literal Israel were fed from heaven with angels' food, and so the cravings of their hunger were satisfied, and as their thirst was slaked by the gushing stream in the sandy desert, and as they were sheltered from the scorching heat of the sun by the refreshing shade of the cloud, so the spiritual Israel shall feel God's love and goodness; they shall hunger no more, nor thirst any more, nor shall the sun light upon them, nor any heat (v. 16); and He who gave them manna from heaven and water from the rock in the wilderness; He whose mercies were celebrated and typified by drawing water from the well of Siloam; He who gave the true manna and the living waters in His Word and Sacraments, and in the gifts of the Holy Ghost, shall lead them to fountains of waters of life, and shall wipe away every tear from their eyes.

The rich store of allusions contained in the word σκηνώσει ought to be carefully treasured up in the mind of the reader, as showing that the Prophecies and Types of the Old Testament, especially in the Pilgrimage through the Wilderness, and the festive ceremonial of the Hebrew Ritual, will have their full accomplishment in the heavenly glory of Christ and His Saints (see Exod. xxv. 8; xxix. 43. Ps. lxviii. 18. Ezek. xxxvii. 27. 1 Cor. x. 11).

VIII. [1] Καὶ ὅτε ἤνοιξε τὴν σφραγῖδα τὴν ἑβδόμην, ἐγένετο σιγὴ ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ ὡς ἡμιώριον.

The SEVENTH or LAST SEAL. The End of the world.

CH. VIII. 1. καὶ ὅτε ἤνοιξε] And when He opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour. There is silence for half an hour. St. John has now a brief view of the eternal peace of heaven. "Cernit initium quietis æternæ" (Victorinus, Aug. ?, Primasius, Bede).

The silence here is described as short, because St. John has only a glimpse here of what will be described more fully hereafter (in chaps. xxi. xxii.), viz. the peace and happiness of heaven; and because he must now be called away to describe other Visions of a different kind. He is allowed to have a foretaste of the future peace of Eternity; and is then summoned from that half-hour's silence to listen to the terrible blasts of the SEVEN TRUMPETS.

This silence (say the ancient Greek Expositors, p. 298) may also serve to remind us, that the second Advent of Christ is kept secret, and cometh not with observation (Luke xvii. 20), and the silence is short, only for half an hour, for that secret Coming will soon accomplish its work, by the speedy destruction of evil.

Thus end the SEVEN SEALS. The Roll, that had been sealed up, has now been opened, and all its contents unfolded to the View. Their moral is very consolatory and instructive. Cp. above, p. 190.

In the first seal, symbolizing the first age of Christianity, Christ went forth conquering and to conquer (vi. 2), triumphing over Sin and Satan by His Death and glorious Resurrection and Ascension. Yet, after that glorious Victory, He and His Church have been opposed by Satan, in various forms, on the red horse, on the black horse, and on the pale horse (vi. 4—8). This was revealed by the Visions of the Second, Third, and Fourth Seals. It has also been revealed in the Fifth and Sixth Seals, that the will still have to endure many afflictions even to the end; and that it will almost seem to the Saints departed that Christ was tarrying too long, and had forgotten His faithful servants (vi. 9—11). It has been also revealed in the Sixth Seal (vi. 12—17), that the Last Days of the Church will bring the severest trial: and that her path will be through great tribulation (vii. 14), to the fruition of eternal felicity.

But there is also consolation in this Prophetic Roll, for Christians of every age.

Christ will at length send forth His Angels to gather His Elect from the four winds, and not one of them will be hurt in the Judgments which will overtake the world. They will all be sealed by God as His own, and be preserved in the wreck; and when the number of God's servants is completed, and gathered in from all parts of the world, to which the Gospel will have been preached (vii. 9; cp. Matt. xxiv. 14. Mark xiii. 10), then all the Enemies of Christ will be overcome; then will ensue the silence of the Seventh Seal (viii. 1). No voice will be raised any more against God. All the Earth will keep silence before Him (Hab. ii. 20). After the Storm there will be Peace. The blessedness of His Servants will be consummated in the Society of the Holy Angels, and in the beatific Vision of God; they will praise God and the Lamb as their Saviour (vii. 10). All things will then be seen to have ministered to the manifestation of the divine love, and to have "worked together for good to them that love Him" (Rom. viii. 28), and be a theme for a never-ending ascription of "Blessing, and Glory, and Wisdom, and Thanksgiving, and Honour, and Power, and Might, to God for ever and ever. Amen" (vii. 12).

St. John, having delivered this Prophecy, and having ministered this comfort to the Church of every age and country, now re-ascends to the first age of Christianity; or, as ancient Expositors express it, "recapitulat ab origine." He proceeds to reveal the prophetic History of the Christian Church from the beginning, in another form and aspect, in the SEVEN TRUMPETS.

What now is the design and character of the SEVEN TRUMPETS?

They are prophetic announcements of the Divine Judgments on the Enemies of Christ and His Church, from the time of His First Advent until the Day of Doom.

This will appear from the following considerations:

(1) The TRUMPETS follow next in order to the SEALS. The Seals, as we have already seen, have revealed a view of the sufferings of the Church from the time of the First Coming of Christ to the End of time, and of the full and final triumph of Christ, and of the everlasting blessedness of His servants, after the trials and tribulations of this world.

This prophetic view of the happiness which is reserved for the righteous, after trials, and sufferings for the Truth, is now succeeded by a prophetic view of punishment which will be inflicted on the wicked, after temporary triumphs and oppressions of the Truth.

On the one hand, God announces reward to the good; "Say ye to the righteous, it shall be well with him, for they shall eat the fruit of their doings." On the other hand, He adds a denunciation of punishment to the wicked, "Woe unto the wicked, it shall be ill with him, for the reward of his hands shall be given him" (Isa. iii. 11). This prophetic declaration displays in two consecutive sentences the substance of the moral of the SEALS, on the one hand; and of the TRUMPETS on the other.

The former sentence is the moral of the SEVEN SEALS.

The latter sentence is the moral of the SEVEN TRUMPETS.

(2) The Seven Trumpets are prefaced by Prayers of the Saints to God (viii. 2—4). The Trumpets are represented as sending forth divine answers to those prayers. The Saints of God are in a state of trial and tribulation; and their arms are Prayers and Tears. They commend their cause to God, and pray to Him for deliverance from their enemies. All Saints, whether on earth or under the altar (vi. 9), pray for the Coming of Christ's Kingdom, when all His Enemies will be put under His feet (1 Cor. xv. 24. 27), and when the happiness of all His faithful servants will be consummated both in body and soul in heaven.

The Twelfth Chapter of the Acts of the Apostles has displayed to us a striking specimen of this work of the Church, praying for deliverance from her enemies; and it has shown the result of her Prayers in the overthrow of her Enemies.

The Apostle St. James, the brother of St. John, had been slain by the sword of King Herod Agrippa; the Apostle St. Peter had been put in prison by the same King (Acts xii. 1—3). The Church makes unceasing intercessions for him (Acts xii. 5. 12). He is miraculously delivered by an Angel on the eve of the day when Herod would have brought him forth for execution; and Herod, the persecutor, is smitten by an Angel, when sitting on his Throne, in the height of his pride and glory (xii. 21—23).

That narrative presents an Epitome of the History of God's Judgments on the Persecutors of His Church; and may serve to illustrate the design of the Trumpets, preceded by the prayers of the Saints (viii. 2—4).

(3) In Holy Scripture the sound of the Trumpet is a preparative for war, especially for a war waged by God Himself and His people against their enemies. "If ye go to war in your land against the Enemy that oppresseth you, then ye shall blow an alarm with the Trumpets, and ye shall be remembered before the Lord your God, and be saved from your enemies" (see Numb. x. 9. Cp. Amos iii. 6).

The Seven Trumpets of the Apocalypse announce the goings forth of the Lord of Hosts to war, in order to save His people by punishing their oppressors.

(4) Again, in Holy Scripture, the Trumpet is the instrument to be used by the Israelites for convoking the People (Numb. x. 10).

It is also to be used to proclaim the year of Jubilee (Levit. xxv. 8—10).

Therefore, Trumpets are used with great propriety in the Apocalypse to "call the nations to see the punishment of the Antichristian power, which, though Christian in name, persecutes the faithful" (Bishop Wilson). And the sounding of the Seven Trumpets of the Apocalypse ends in an universal Jubilee for the deliverance of the People of God (xi. 15).

(5) The Trumpet is also specified in the Gospel as the signal of the Universal Judgment of the Great Day. "The Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel and the Trump of God" (2 Thess. iv. 16). "The Trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised" (1 Cor. xv. 52).

Therefore there is another remarkable fitness in the use of Trumpets in the Apocalypse, for the purposes which they here subserve.

The consequences of the Sounding of each of the Seven Apocalyptic Trumpets are of a judicial kind; the first Trumpet is followed by inflictions of chastisement on the Earth (viii. 7); the second Trumpet, by vengeance on the Sea (v. 8, 9); the third Trumpet by plagues on the Fountains of Waters (vv. 10, 11); and the fourth Trumpet by visitations on heavenly bodies (v. 12); and it is especially declared that the last three Trumpets are three Trumpets of Woe to the inhabiters of the Earth (viii. 13); that is, to the enemies of God and of the kingdom of heaven (see a Tobit 12. 15. Luke 1. 19. 2 Chron. 29. 25—28.

b ch. 5. 8. & 6. 9. & 9. 13. & 14. 18.

c Ps. 141. 2. Luke 1. 10.

2 [a] Καὶ εἶδον τοὺς ἑπτὰ ἀγγέλους οἱ ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἑστήκασι, καὶ ἐδόθησαν αὐτοῖς ἑπτὰ σάλπιγγες.

3 [b] Καὶ ἄλλος ἄγγελος ἦλθε, καὶ ἐστάθη ἐπὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον ἔχων λιβανωτὸν χρυσοῦν· καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ θυμιάματα πολλὰ, ἵνα δώσῃ ταῖς προσευχαῖς τῶν ἁγίων πάντων ἐπὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον τὸ χρυσοῦν τὸ ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου· 4 [c] καὶ ἀνέβη ὁ καπνὸς τῶν θυμιαμάτων ταῖς προσευχαῖς τῶν ἁγίων ἐκ χειρὸς τοῦ ἀγγέλου ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ· 5 καὶ εἴληφεν ὁ ἄγγελος τὸν λιβανωτὸν, καὶ ἐγέμισεν αὐτὸν ἐκ τοῦ πυρὸς τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου, καὶ ἔβαλεν εἰς τὴν γῆν· καὶ ἐγένοντο on i. 7; iii. 10). Finally, the seventh or last Trumpet of the Apocalypse is the summons of all Nations to the Judgment-Seat of Christ (see xi. 15—18).

Thus the six Trumpets represent the Judgments of God, as preparatory denunciations, warning men with a loud voice to "consider their ways," and to repent, and to prepare for the sounding of the Seventh Trumpet, which will convene them to the general Judgment of the Last Day.

Thus the design of God's Judgments, even in punishment, is mercy: "O Lord, when Thy Judgments are in the Earth, the inhabitants of the World will learn righteousness." (Isa. xxvi. 9.)

The last Trumpet reveals the complete overthrow of Christ's Enemies, and the execution of His wrath on the wicked, and the blessed reward of the righteous, and the establishment of His Kingdom for ever (xi. 15—18).

Thus it instructs the World, especially Rulers and States. It displays the infatuation of those who oppose Christ and His Gospel, and declares the misery which will be their doom. The successive sounds of the Six Trumpets which announce particular judgments, are rehearsals of the sound of the Seventh Trumpet, which announces Universal Judgment; when it will be confessed by all, that "verily there is a reward for the righteous, doubtless there is a God that judgeth the earth." (Ps. lviii. 10.)

(6) Lastly, the Apocalypse is grounded on the principle, that the Christian Church is the true Jerusalem; and that its faithful members are the Israel of God (Gal. vi. 16). It teaches the Christian Church to read her own history in that of the Israelites, and in their Exodus from Egypt, and in their passage through the Red Sea, and in their Pilgrimage through the Wilderness of Arabia. The entrance of the Israelites into the Rest of Canaan under the leadership of Joshua, and the capture of the Cities of Canaan, and the subjugation of the Kings of the Canaanites by the armies of Joshua, and the People of God, are recognized in the Apocalypse as types and figures, and as prophecies and pledges of the conquests of the Christian Church under the guidance of her heavenly Joshua, Jesus Christ, and of her admission to the everlasting joys of her heavenly inheritance. See above, Introduction, pp. 144, 145, and on ii. 9, and on vii. 4—9.

Especially, as has been observed by ancient Expositors, there is a reference in the Seven Trumpets of the Apocalypse to the history of the capture of that great City,—which is one of the scriptural emblems of the Power of this World arrayed against Christ,—the city of Jericho.

By God's command, Joshua compassed Jericho six times on six successive days. First went the armed men, then seven Priests with seven Trumpets of rams' horns; then came the Ark; then the People followed. On each of the six days, the Priests blew the trumpets once, and the People were silent. But on the seventh day the seven Priests, and the People with them, compassed the city seven times; and at the seventh time, when the seven Priests blew the seven Trumpets, all the People shouted with a great shout; and the wall of the City fell down flat, and the People went up and captured Jericho. (Josh. vi. 1—20.) And after its fall, they marched victoriously under the command of Joshua, the type of Jesus, to the possession of Canaan the promised land, the type of Heaven.

The Apocalyptic Vision reveals Seven Angels and Seven Trumpets. The first six Trumpets pre-announce successive Judgments of God. At length, when the seventh Trumpet sounds, the walls of this world's Jericho will fall flat, and the victorious army of the heavenly Joshua will follow the Captain of their salvation into their everlasting inheritance.

The PRAYERS of all Saints before the SOUNDING of the TRUMPETS.

2. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw the seven Angels which stood before God; and to them were given Seven Trumpets.

3. καὶ ἄλλος] And another Angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer.

Here is a reference to the act of the Priest ministering at the Golden Altar of Incense before the Veil in the Temple (see above on Luke i. 9, and Heb. ix. 4), and offering incense there, which is a type of prayer (see above, v. 8). And there was given unto him much incense, that he should give it to the prayers of all Saints upon the golden altar before the throne. Observe, there is no mention here, or in any other place of the Apocalypse, of an Altar before the Veil; the Veil has disappeared under the Gospel (Matt. xxvii. 51. Heb. ix. 8). The Apocalypse is an unveiling of heaven, now opened by Christ. The Holy of Holies is revealed, and the Altar is not before a Veil, but before the Throne. See above on iv. 1.

The Angel is not here represented as giving efficacy to the prayers of all Saints, but as taking part in them. There is a communication of Prayer between All Saints (namely, the Saints departed and the Saints on earth), and the Holy Angels in heaven. The Angels unite in offices of prayer with the Church on earth, and with the spirits of the Saints departed, for the deliverance of God's servants from their enemies. See Heb. xii. 22, 23, where the Saints on earth are represented as associated in one communion with the Angels and with the Spirits of just men made perfect. Cp. Bp. Pearson, Art. ix. p. 662, and Bp. Bull, Sermon on the Offices of the Angels towards the Faithful.

Some Interpreters suppose that the other Angel is Christ, our High Priest, the only Mediator between God and men (1 Tim. ii. 5), ministering in the heavenly Temple, where "He ever liveth to make intercession for us." Heb. vii. 25; ix. 24. Christ, in His human character and priestly office, may be called another Angel. He is so called, x. 1. Cp. xiv. 17; xviii. 1; xx. 1.

Hence Primasius says, "The Angel here is Our Lord, by whom all our prayers have access to God (Eph. ii. 18; iii. 12), and therefore the Apostle says, 'Through Him we offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually' (Heb. xiii. 15; cp. 1 Pet. ii. 5); and St. John says, 'He is our Advocate with the Father'" (1 John ii. 1). This interpretation is sanctioned by other ancient interpreters, such as Aug. (?) and Bede, and by Vitringa, Böhmer, and others of later date, and it represents the important truth, that the deliverance of God's people from the hands of their Enemies, smitten by His Judgments, is due to the ministry of Christ in heaven, presenting the incense of the Prayers of the Church, in the golden censer of His own merits.

The dative here, ταῖς προσευχαῖς, is a dativus commodi; the incense was given to the prayers, and made them pleasing to God. Cp. Winer, § 31, p. 193. And so the dative is rightly understood by Vitringa, Ewald, De Wette, Ebrard, and Düsterdieck.

4, 5. καὶ ἀνέβη] And the smoke of the incense (added) to the prayers of the Saints (cp. v. 3) went up before God out of the hand of the Angel. And the Angel has taken (εἴληφεν, has taken and holds; on this perfect tense, see above note, v. 7) the censer, and he filled it from the fire of the Altar (of Incense, the type of Prayer), and cast it to the Earth: and there were Voices, and Lightnings, and an Earthquake; and the Seven Angels who had the Seven Trumpets, prepared themselves to sound their Trumpets.

Voices, Thunders, Lightnings, and Earthquakes, are signs and instruments of God's Judgments against His enemies. (A Lapide, Bengel, Ewald, De Wette, Hengstenberg.) The Divine Judgments to be announced by the Seven Trumpets of the Seven Angels, are represented as consequent on the prayers of all the Saints — prayers presented in heaven by the Angel, perhaps Christ, who said, "I came to send fire on earth" (Luke xii. 49. Primasius). These judgments are preludes of the great fire of the Day of Judgment which will consume the world (2 Pet. iii. 7).

The Saints who are on earth, and the Saints departed, whose souls are in Paradise (see vi. 9), pray to God for the deliverance of His Church, and for the manifestation of His Power and Justice; and their Prayers are presented before the Throne of God; and in answer to their Prayers, He ordains or permits such penal Visitations on the world as are best adapted to those ends.

Here is a striking evidence of the power of united Prayer. It is a lever which moves the World.

φωναὶ καὶ βρονταὶ καὶ ἀστραπαὶ καὶ σεισμός. 6 Καὶ οἱ ἑπτὰ ἄγγελοι οἱ ἔχοντες τὰς ἑπτὰ σάλπιγγας ἡτοίμασαν ἑαυτοὺς ἵνα σαλπίσωσι.

The First Trumpet.

7. ὁ πρῶτος] The first Angel sounded, and there was hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the Earth: and the third part of the Earth was burnt up, and the third part of the Trees was burnt up, and all Grass that was green was burnt up.

The second seal had represented the Evil One riding on the horse of fire, and wielding the sword of Persecution, and shedding the blood of the Martyrs (vi. 4).

In that Seal, the Church suffered; in this Trumpet, her enemies are punished.

The Judgment here announced is upon the Earth,—that is, on the Earthly power, opposed to Christ and to His Church, which is the Kingdom of Heaven. This Judgment is upon the Earth (as opposed to Heaven), and upon Trees which grow from the Earth, and look stately and tall, and derive their strength from the Earth; and upon the Green Grass which clothes the Earth.

This Judgment is represented as inflicted by hail (showing a storm from the north) and fire mingled with blood; and the third part of the Earth is consumed by fire; and the third part of the Trees, that is, of Princes and Potentates, proud, powerful, and prosperous (see Isa. ii. 13; and x. 17, 18, LXX; and above, note on vii. 1. 3), is consumed by fire; and all the Grass that was green, that is, the glory and beauty of the earthly power, is consumed by fire. Cp. Isa. xl. 6—8.

Here again is a reference to the history of the ancient People of God.

This and the succeeding Judgments denounced on the worldly Power, which persecutes Christ and His Church, correspond to the Judgments inflicted by God upon the worldly power of Pharaoh, the oppressor of God's people, who was chastened by a plague of hail, and fire with the hail, which smote every herb of the field, and brake every tree of the field; only in the land of Goshen, where the children of Israel were, was no hail. (Exod. ix. 23—26.)

This imagery seems to be adopted here, in order to show the similarity of the condition of the Church under Moses and under Christ; and to indicate that the purpose of this visitation was similar to that of the Egyptian plague; in a word, that the Trumpet announces a Judgment from God on the worldly power—typified by Pharaoh—for persecuting His People.

The extent of the visitation here is indicated by the use of the words the third part (i. e. a large part) of the earth, and the third of the trees. Cp. v. 9, and ix. 15. 18; xii. 4.

When the Apocalypse was written, the Church of Christ was persecuted by the power of this world—the power of heathen Rome. The Apostle, St. John himself, the disciple whom Jesus loved (John xxi. 7), was a prisoner for the Word of God (Rev. i. 9); and he describes himself "as the brother and companion" of others "in tribulation."

The Church of Christ was then in Egypt; the Cæsars were her Pharaohs. The First Trumpet predicts the woes which would fall, like a storm of hail and fire, on the earthly power of the Roman Empire, rebelling against heaven; and would afflict the princely Oaks and tall Cedars of that proud dynasty, and would wither up its pomp and glory like green Grass scorched by the Sun.

This Trumpet is like a retributive sequel to the second seal. It represents the woes which would fall on the Roman Empire in the fourth century, when it was a prey to the fire and sword of military violence, and was smitten by a hail-storm from the north, whence the Gothic tribes descended as in a tempest upon it. See the striking language of S. Jerome (de morte Nepotiani, ad finem), who gives a summary view of the miseries of the Roman Empire, and of the divine judgments executed on its Emperors, Constantius, Julian, Valentinian, Valens, Gratian, Valentinian II., and on Roman Princes and Potentates, and even private persons, and exclaims, "The mind shrinks with horror from contemplating the ruins of our age." "Horret animus ruinas nostri temporis persequi; Romanus orbis ruit, nostris peccatis (he speaks as a Roman) barbari fortes sunt." And in his second book against Jovinian (ad fin.), he addresses Rome and says, "If thou art penitent like Nineveh, thou mayest escape the malediction with which the Saviour of the world threatens thee in the Apocalypse." The irruption of the Goths into Italy is compared to a storm of hail, and is called a judgment from heaven by Claudian, de bello Gætico, v. 172, "Seu gravis ira Deûm seriem meditata ruinis Ex illo quocunque vagos impegit Erinnys Grandinis aut morbi ritu." Compare Bp. Wilson's note here.

The Second Trumpet.

8. καὶ ὁ δεύτερος ἄγγελος ἐσάλπισε] And the second Angel sounded, and as it were a great Mountain burning with fire was cast into the Sea; and the third part of the Sea became blood:

9.] And the third part of the creatures which were in the Sea, the things which had lives, died, and the third part of the Ships were destroyed.

The Second Trumpet follows naturally from the first. Here also is mention of fire and of blood. "He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity, he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword" (xiii. 9).

A great Mountain burning with fire is cast into the sea, which is the Apocalyptic emblem of tumultuous commotion and turbulent rage (see v. 13; vii. 1. 3; xxi. 1, and compare above, note on iv. 6).

The removal of Mountains, and the casting of them into the sea is a scriptural metaphor, descriptive of violent commotions, as in Ps. xlvi. 2, "We will not fear, though the Earth be moved, and the Mountains be cast into the midst of the Sea."

This present prophecy indicates the convulsion of a great and conspicuous Earthly power, which had been firmly fixed, like a Mountain, on a solid basis, and rooted in the earth. This Earthly power is also compared to a burning Mountain; it is like a volcanic Mountain burning with fire, and pouring forth its desolating streams of lava, withering and scorching the neighbouring territory.

Here is a noble image of a proud earthly military Dynasty, sending forth the torrents of its legionary forces to waste provinces, and to burn villages and cities as with a flood of fire.

The Prophecy predicts the precipitation of this volcanic Mountain into another element of a very different kind, one of fluid restlessness and tumultuous agitation.

In the Old Testament, the great City and Empire of Babylon is called "a destroying Mountain, which destroyeth the Earth," and God threatens to roll it down from the rocks and make it a burnt mountain (Jer. li. 25).

In like manner, the Empire and City of Rome are here compared "to a great Mountain," on account of its grandeur and power. And it might well be called a "burning Mountain," for it used its power to destroy the servants of God by fire in its own streets (see above, on Phil. iii. 15), and in many cities of the Empire.

In this respect, this mention of fire, characterizing Rome as a Mountain, serves to connect this Judgment of the Second Trumpet with the Second Seal, where the Enemy of the Church is described as riding on the horse like fire (πυρρός).

That Great imperial Mountain was uprooted by the assaults of the Goths, Vandals, and Huns; and the mighty Empire was dismembered and decomposed; and its solid Mass was dissolved and melted away into a swelling Sea, which was long agitated by the winds and waves of revolutionary storms and political hurricanes.

Thus the Christian reader of the Apocalypse was led to recognize in the incursions of Barbarians into the Roman Empire, a divine judgment upon it for its sins, especially in persecuting the Church. The Second Trumpet revealed the judgments inflicted upon Rome for the wrongs it did in the Second Seal.

Indeed, those barbarians proclaimed themselves to be executioners of God's judgments on Rome; Salvian (a Latin Christian writer of that age), in his treatise on the Divine Government (lib. vii.), says, "they confessed that what they did, was not their own doing, and that they were hurried on by the Divine Command." "Ipsi fatebantur non suum esse quod facerent; agi enim se divino jussu et perurgeri." Hence, says he, we may infer the magnitude of our sins, since these barbarians are impelled, against their will, to punish us.

It may also be observed, that in the incursions of these hordes of barbarians into the Southern provinces of Europe, the wisdom ἐβλήθη εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν· καὶ ἐγένετο τὸ τρίτον τῆς θάλασσης αἷμα, 9 καὶ ἀπέθανε τὸ τρίτον τῶν κτισμάτων τῶν ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ, τὰ ἔχοντα ψυχὰς, καὶ τὸ τρίτον τῶν πλοίων διεφθάρη.

and power of God were glorified, and His truth was manifested, and His Kingdom was advanced, and "the fierceness of man turned to His praise" (Ps. lxxvi. 10).

For, by means of those immigrations, these barbarous tribes received the knowledge of Christianity. Many of them embraced the Gospel with fervour, and founded Christian Kingdoms in Europe. See Dean Jackson's remarks on God's Providence in raising up the Huns to punish Rome.

"The rule of God's liberality in disposing Kingdoms, is the correspondency or proportion which temporal greatness holds with the execution of His will; whether for punishing those which have made up the measure of their iniquity, or for the propagating or preservation of His Church already planted, or for preparing or ploughing up the hearts of wild and unnurtured Nations for better receiving the seed of His Gospel.

"When the measure of that prosperity which God, for these and like purposes, had allotted Rome Heathen, and 'her iniquity became full,' she and her Provinces became a swifter prey to barbarous Nations, than any neighbour countries had been to her. The incredible success of the Goths and Vandals, of the Franks and Almains, &c., especially of the Huns, whose furious progress was like to the vulture's flight, and seemed to presage the slaughter which they made, will justify the probability either of Xenophon's stories concerning Cyrus; or of Curtius, Arrianus, or other writers of Alexander's conquests. Howbeit, this great power was not given them altogether to destroy others, but withal to edify themselves in the faith, and to be made partakers of God's vineyard, which He had now in a manner taken from these ungrateful husbandmen whom they conquered. The Franks became Christians through fear of the Almains. Dread of the Huns did drive the Burgundians to seek sanctuary in the same profession. And no question, but such of the ancient Christian inhabitants as outlived these storms, did believe God and His servants better afterwards than they had done before. Never were there any times more apt or more powerful to kindle devotion in such as were not altogether frozen in unbelief, or benumbed with the custom of sinning, than these times were. Rome, which had been the watch-tower of politic wisdom, became more stupid than Babylon had been, when the day of her visitation did come upon her. Her citizens (were a mere politician to be their judge) deserved to be buried in their city's ruins, for not awaking upon such and so many dreadful warnings as she had." Dean Jackson on the Creed, book vi. pt. ii. chap. xxvii. vol. v. p. 436.

9. τὰ ἔχοντα ψυχάς] the things which had lives, died. This phrase is to be explained from other similar ones in this book. The saints of Christ are described as not loving their lives (τὰς ψυχὰς) unto death (xii. 11), and as conquering by the blood of the Lamb. And in the plague of the second Vial, every ψυχὴ ζωῆς is said to have died (xvi. 3), and Babylon at her fall is represented as despoiled of every desire of her ψυχὴ (xviii. 14), that is, all the delights of animal existence and gratification; all "the lust of her eyes and the pride of life."

In accordance with this sense of the word ψυχὴ, the word ψυχικὸς is opposed to πνευματικὸς in the New Testament. The former is the carnally-minded, the latter is the spiritual (see above, 1 Cor. ii. 14; xv. 44. James iii. 15. Jude 19).

Next, it is to be remembered, that, in the Apocalypse, the verb ἔχω signifies to hold fast, as a treasure, to grasp tenaciously as the main good (see vi. 9; xii. 17).

Hence it follows that the sense of these words (τὰ ἔχοντα ψυχὰς, ἀπέθανε) is, that they, who amid the Judgments that came upon Rome, would not be weaned from the pleasures of this life, but still doted upon them; they, who thus clung to their mere animal life (ψυχὴ), died, died in body and soul by that death which is indeed to be called death.

On the other hand, the faithful Christian was assured, that whatever might happen to his ψυχὴ, or animal life, in this world, he would be preserved for another world, in body, soul, and spirit (see on 1 Thess. v. 23), by the power of Him Who overcame Death, and Who is "the Resurrection and the Life." Thus Christ's own words would be true, that they who found their life (ψυχὴν), would lose it; and that they, who lost their lives for His sake, would find them (Matt. x. 39), or, as He expresses it elsewhere (Luke xvii. 33), "he that seeks to save his life (ψυχὴν) shall lose it, and he who loses it, shall make it live" (ζωογονήσει); and again (John xii. 25), "he that loveth his life (ψυχὴν) shall lose it, and he that hateth his life in this world, shall keep it to everlasting life" (ζωήν; where the distinction between ζωὴ and ψυχὴ is to be carefully observed).

Probably St. John had these words of our Lord in his mind, when he wrote the Apocalypse; and he supposed that his readers would remember them, and apply them to the interpretation of his own language here and throughout this book. Hence it is rightly said by some ancient Expositors here, e. g. Aug.? that the ungodly are here described by St. John as those "qui habebant animas, in carne vivi, sed spiritualiter mortui."

Observe also, that St. John appropriately uses here the neuter gender to describe these worldly-minded persons who cling to their animal life and its pleasures; they are τὰ ἔχοντα ψυχάς. He does not call them men, but things, the things which have lives, animal lives, and nothing more; they die, while they seek to live, and because they seek life, and that only; and he thus contrasts them with the male child of the Church mentioned below (xii. 5), that is, those noble, masculine spirits who are the genuine offspring of Christ, and willingly lay down their lives for Him Who died to redeem them, and thus live in death, and by death; being born thereby into that endless life (ζωὴν αἰώνιον), which alone deserves to be called life.

The carnal lives and voluptuous habits of the Roman Princes and Potentates of this time, the Trees of the Second Trumpet, are described by Ammonius Marcellinus (xiv. 6, and xxviii. 4), in passages cited in the xxxist chapter of Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire.

It is remarkable, that, at the capture and plunder of Rome by Alaric and the Goths in the third siege (A.D. 410), when "at the hour of midnight the Salarian gate was silently opened, and the inhabitants of Rome were awakened by the tremendous sound of the Gothic Trumpet" (Gibbon, chap. xxxi.), the fury of the invaders was restrained in a marvellous manner from injuring the Christian Church. Alaric said that he "waged war with the Romans, and not with the Apostles" (Isidor. Chronic. p. 714. Cp. Oros. vii. 39, and Procop. de bell. Vand. i. 2, cited by Gibbon). S. Augustine in his work "De Civitate Dei," written on the occasion of this event, in order to vindicate the Christian Religion against the allegations of Heathens who imputed their woes to the wrath of their Heathen Gods against those who had renounced Heathenism for Christianity,—observes, "that the Barbarians spared the Romans for the sake of Christ. Witness," says he, "the tombs of the Martyrs, and the Churches of the Apostles, which received as in an asylum both Christians and Pagans in that devastation of the City. The fury of the barbarians raged up to their doors, and there paused" (De Civ. Dei, i. 1). And he affords an interesting illustration of this text when he says, that "many Heathens thus escaped, who now revile the Gospel, which was the cause of their deliverance; and impute the woes of Rome to Christ; and the benefits they then received they ascribe to their own destiny; whereas they ought to ascribe the evils they then endured to the goodness of God, Who is wont to correct men's sins by sufferings, and to try men's virtues by affliction, and to translate Piety into a better world, or to retain it on earth for godly uses; and they ought to ascribe to Christ's Gospel the wonderful fact, that, contrary to the custom of wars, the Barbarians spared those who took refuge in places dedicated to the worship of Christ; and they, who made use of His Name in order to escape temporal death, ought to be impelled to resort to Him, in order to escape the pains of death eternal." See also ibid. i. c. 3, 4.

S. Augustine deplores the infatuation of the Romans who would not be corrected by God's Judgments inflicted on them by the armies of the Barbarians. "You," he exclaims, "have been trodden under foot by the enemy, and yet have not put a rein on your luxury; you have forfeited the benefits of your calamities, you have been made most wretched, and have remained most wicked,—miserrimi facti estis, et pessimi permansistis, et tamen quod vivitis Dei est, qui vobis parcendo admonuit ut corrigamini pœnitendo."

— τὸ τρίτον τῶν πλοίων διεφθάρη] the third part of the ships was destroyed. The Trumpet announces that ships, the instruments of Commerce and Wealth and Luxury, will be ruined. Isaiah, in a prophetic passage similar to the present, after the mention of God's vengeance against every one that is proud and lofty, typified as here by Trees, cedars, and oaks, speaks of Judgments upon ships of Tarshish (ii. 16), where the LXX has ἐπὶ πᾶν πλοῖον θαλάσσης.

It is a remarkable fact in the history of Alaric's campaign in Italy (in A.D. 409), that "instead of assaulting the Capital at once," he directed his efforts against the arsenal of its ships, the Port of Ostia, the emporium of its commerce, and magazine of its

The THIRD TRUMPET.

10, 11. καὶ ὁ τρίτος ἄγγελος ἐσάλπισε] And the third Angel sounded, and there fell from heaven a great Star, burning as a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of the waters: And the name of the Star is called the Wormwood: and the third part of the waters was turned into wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter.

Here A, B have ὁ Ἄψινθος, the Wormwood.—Elz. omits the article.

A Star, in the language of the Apocalypse, is a Luminary of the Church. The Seven Stars are the Angels of the Seven Churches (i. 20), that is, chief Ministers of the Seven Churches. A fallen Star is therefore emblematic of a false Teacher. Cp. ix. 1. He is said to be like a torch (λαμπὰς), because he has no heavenly light; but flares with earthly flame, mingled with lurid smoke. He was set by God in the firmament of the Church, to be a guide to others; but he falls and becomes like a "wandering Star, to which is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever" (Jude 13).

His name is called ὁ Ἄψινθος, the Wormwood.

Wormwood is very bitter (Billerbeck, Flora Class. pp. 213, 214), and in certain cases produces convulsions, delirium, epilepsy, and death (see Winer, R. W. B. ii. p. 688); and is here, as in other places of Scripture, descriptive of false doctrine. Take heed, says Moses, when he warns the Israelites against corrupt doctrines and practices, lest there should be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood. (Deut. xxix. 18.) And so God says by Jeremiah: Because the prophets cause My people to err, behold, I will feed them with Wormwood. (Jer. xxiii. 15; see also Amos v. 7; vi. 12.) He will choose their delusions, and punish them with their own devices. And St. Paul in the same spirit says, Look diligently lest any fail of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled. (Heb. xii. 15.) And St. John's scholar, S. Ignatius, in several places, speaks of heresy as a noxious plant, κακὴ βοτανὴ (Eph. 10, Trall. 6, Phil. 3).

This fallen Star, whose name is Wormwood, represents Heresy; and particularly those Heresies concerning the Natures and Person of Christ; and the Divinity of the Holy Spirit; and Divine Grace and Free Will; which prevailed in the fifth and sixth centuries after Christ.

Almost all those Persons who gave their name to those Heresies were gifted with great mental endowments. They were Stars; Stars set in the heaven of the Church to enlighten others. Arius was distinguished by his ready eloquence and logical acumen. Nestorius was a Bishop famous for holiness and learning. Eutychianism owed its origin to the head of a monastic body. Pelagius was remarkable for moral strictness of life.

Here also is another reference to the History of Israel. Moses, the faithful servant of God, and the leader of His people in the wilderness, cast wood, which God showed him, into the bitter waters of Marah, and made them sweet. (Exod. xv. 23.) But here the false Teacher reverses that action. The Star burning like a lamp, whose name is Wormwood, falls into the waters and makes them bitter. Instead of guiding men by the steady light of true doctrine, over the troubled sea of this world, it falls into the rivers and wells of Salvation, and embitters the sweet waters of Holy Scripture, by the infusion of heretical interpretations, and destroys the souls of men.

This exposition is authorized by ancient Interpreters. This Star represents a constellation falling from the firmament of the Church. This Star symbolizes heretical teachers embittering the waters of Holy Scripture. (Aug.? Bede, Aquinas.) And so Lightfoot here, "The third Trumpet brings the Star, 'Wormwood,' upon the rivers and fountains of waters; which seemeth to denote the grievous heresies that should be in the Church, which should corrupt and embitter the pure springs of Scripture, the fountains of truth." And so Vitringa, Bengel, and many others cited by him.

Thus we are taught to regard Heresies in their true light; that is, as punishments for the sins of men.

Grievous punishments they also were, even in a temporal sense, as was seen in the fury of the Asiatic Monophysites, of the African Circumcellions, and of the Arian Vandals, under Genseric, A.D. 477, and Huneric, A.D. 484, and Thrasimund. See the contemporary History of Victor Vitensis in Ruinhart's Historia Persecut. Vandal. 1694. and Vitringa, Anacr. p. 100.

But these and other Heresies were also trials and exercises of Faith, Hope, and Love; and so served to the manifestation of God's grace and glory, and to the purification of His Church. There must be Heresies, says the Apostle, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you. (1 Cor. xi. 19.)

Indeed, if there had been no Heresies, the Church would not possess the explicit declaration of the Christian Faith which she now has in her Creeds.

The opposition of Heretics constrained her to examine carefully the Holy Scriptures; and to proclaim clearly to the world what is the true Faith which is contained in those Sacred Writings, and which she had received from Christ and the Apostles; and to deliver a solemn protest and warning against the erroneous and strange doctrines with which Heretics endeavoured to corrupt that Faith.

Thus Heresies themselves, while they were Punishments to the godless, served to prove and confirm the belief of Christians, and to place the True Faith in a clearer light, and to establish it on a more solid foundation.

This was a blessed consummation of trial; and such a result as that might well be the object of the prayers of Saints.

Here also we may observe the difference of treatment of similar subjects in the Trumpets and Seals respectively; and this serves to bring out the difference of their character. In the Seals, Heresy is represented as a trial of the Church, and as a severe suffering to be endured by her (vi. 5, 6). In the Trumpets, Heresy is treated as a Judgment inflicted on men for sin, and brought upon them by themselves.

This Trumpet leads the way to

The FOURTH TRUMPET.

12. καὶ ὁ τέταρτος ἄγγελος ἐσάλπισε] And the fourth Angel sounded, and the third part of the Sun was smitten, and the third part of the Moon, and the third part of the Stars: so that the third part of them should be darkened, and the day should not shine for a third part of it, and the night likewise.

Here we pass from visitations on the elements of earth to judgments in a higher region, that of heaven. The Sun is smitten, and the third part of the Moon, and the third part of the Stars.

Here we see a prophecy of a great prevalence of errors, defections, apostasies, and confusions in Christendom; such as abounded in the Seventh Century.

This view prepares us for

The FIFTH TRUMPET.

13. καὶ εἶδον] And I beheld and heard one Eagle flying in mid-heaven, and saying with a loud voice, Woe, Woe, Woe, to the inhabiters of the Earth by reason of the remaining voices of the trumpet of the three Angels, which are yet to sound!

The reading ἀετοῦ (an eagle) is in A, B, and in several Cursive MSS., and in many Versions, and is received by Griesb., φωνῇ μεγάλῃ, Οὐαὶ, οὐαὶ, οὐαὶ τοῖς κατοικοῦσιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἐκ τῶν λοιπῶν φωνῶν τῆς σάλπιγγος τῶν τριῶν ἀγγέλων τῶν μελλόντων σαλπίζειν.

a Luke 8. 31. & 10. 18. ch. 17. 8.

IX. 1 [a] Καὶ ὁ πέμπτος ἄγγελος ἐσάλπισε· καὶ εἶδον ἀστέρα ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ

Scholz, Lach., Tisch.—Elz. has ἀγγέλου. No copyist would have substituted ἀετοῦ for ἀγγέλου here; and therefore, on this and other grounds, ἀετοῦ is to be preferred.

The flying Eagle announces a triple Woe to the inhabiters of the Earth—that is, to those who are of the earth, earthy: and are not loyal subjects of Christ, and faithful citizens of the Kingdom of heaven. See above on iii. 10.

Observe also, St. John says that he beheld and saw one Eagle, ἑνὸς ἀετοῦ. The Eagle in mid-heaven here is called εἷς ἀετὸς, One Eagle. This Oneness marks some special messenger. This One Royal Bird, this King of Birds, here probably signifies Christ Himself, who is called in the Apocalypse "the Great Eagle" (xii. 14, where see note).

There is a similar use of the numeral εἷς, one, in xviii. 21, εἷς ἄγγελος ἰσχυρὸς, One special Angel who is strong, and xix. 7, εἶδον ἕνα ἄγγελον ἑστῶτα, I saw One Angel standing. In both these cases the One Angel seems to designate Christ. On this emphatic use of εἷς, see Winer, § 18, p. 106.

Christ's Royalty, in His Human Nature, especially as triumphing over Death, and as ascending in glory into Heaven, is marked by the emblem of the Eagle (see on Matt. xxiv. 28. Luke xvii. 37; above on iv. 7), as it is in another respect, by that other emblem in the Apocalypse, where He is called the Lion, the King of Beasts (v. 5). In chap. x. 3, He is said to roar as a Lion. Why may He not therefore be here said to fly as an Eagle? especially as Jehovah Himself deigns to speak of Himself under this similitude, in His care for His People, in their deliverance from Egypt, and in their passage through the wilderness, to which there is a continual reference in this Vision of the Trumpets. "As an Eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings, so the LORD did lead him." (Deut. xxxii. 11, 12.)

The Eagle flies ἐν μεσουρανήματι, in mid-heaven, i. e. in the zenith (see Eustath. ad Iliad. ix. 68. Wetst.), so as to be manifest to all, like the sun at noon.

What now is the moral of this Vision?

It is this: The Trumpets, as we have seen, were introduced by a Vision of the heavenly Temple, and by the ministry of an Angel—probably Christ Himself, as Man, in His Priestly character—presenting before the Throne in heaven the prayers of All Saints (viii. 2—5).

The deliverances of God's Church, and all the discipline with which He purifies her in this World, by means of the Divine Judgments announced by the Trumpets, and executed by Him on the dwellers upon the earth, that is, on the proud and godless of this world, have been already represented as results of the Prayers of the Saints, presented by the Angel in the golden censer in heaven.

Thus the Church has been assured of God's protection; and she is encouraged to trust in Him, and pray for the Coming of Christ.

What next follows?

Three several and extraordinary Woes are now announced with a special preamble, and by a special Vision. One Eagle is seen stretching out his wings and flying in mid-heaven, and is heard crying, "WOE, WOE, WOE, to the inhabiters of the Earth, by reason of the remaining voices of the three Angels, which are about to sound."

Thus the Church is assured, that, however terrible these judgments may be, they are foreknown and controlled by Him who bore His people out of Egypt of old, and carried them through the wilderness on Eagles' wings; and that, whatever may betide the inhabiters of the Earth, in the storm of His wrath against them for their ungodliness, she herself, who is not of the Earth, but has her hopes and her heart in heaven, "will be defended under His wings, and be safe under His feathers," as it is said in the Psalm (xci. 4); and that He will protect her from her Enemy the Dragon, as is written in the same Psalm concerning Christ, Who is "the great Eagle" (Rev. xii. 14). "Thou shalt go upon the Lion and the Adder, the young Lion and the Dragon Thou shalt tread under Thy feet." (Ps. xci. 13.)

This exposition is illustrated and confirmed by the language of the Apocalypse in the Twelfth chapter, to which a reference has just been made. See xii. 2, 3. 13, 14.

There we read, "Woe to the Earth" (xii. 12), as here, "Woe to the inhabiters of the Earth;" and that when the Dragon saw that he was cast out, he persecuted the Woman, i. e. the Church; and that "to the woman were given the two wings of the great Eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness into her place"—just as the Ancient Church fled from Pharaoh, the persecuting King of Egypt, a type of the worldly oppressors of the Church—and there she is nourished from the face of the Serpent (xii. 14); and she may now say, "I will get me away far off, and remain in the wilderness, I will make haste to escape, because of the stormy wind and tempest." And the Spirit comforts her with words of peace, "O cast thy burden on the Lord, and He shall nourish thee, and shall not suffer the righteous to fall for ever; As for my enemies, O God, Thou shalt bring them into the pit of destruction." (Ps. lv. 7, 8. 23, 24.)

The FIFTH TRUMPET;

CH. IX. 1—11. καὶ ὁ πέμπτος ἄγγελος ἐσάλπισε] And the fifth Angel sounded, and I saw a Star that had fallen from heaven unto the earth: and to him was given the key of the bottomless pit.

And he opened the bottomless pit (or abyss): and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit.

And there came out of the smoke Locusts upon the earth: and unto them was given power, as the Scorpions of the earth have power.

And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; except only the men who have not the seal of God on their foreheads.

And to them it was given that they should not kill them, but that they should be tormented five months: and their torment is as the torment of a scorpion, when it hath struck a man. And in those days shall the men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them. And the forms of the Locusts are like unto horses prepared unto battle; and on their heads are as it were crowns of gold, and their faces as the faces of men. And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as teeth of lions. And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle. And they have tails and stings like unto scorpions, and in their tails is their power to hurt the men five months: they have over them a King, the angel of the bottomless pit; his name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, and in the Greek tongue he hath a name Apollyon.

The Vision here, in v. 1, represents the Star not as falling, but as having already fallen (πεπτωκότα), and to this Star is given the key of the bottomless pit (τοῦ φρέατος τῆς ἀβύσσου), literally, of the pit of the abyss; or, in other words, of the aperture, by which there is egress from, or ingress into, the abyss. The φρέαρ is the "orificium abyssi." (Bengel.)

The sense of the word ἄβυσσος has been already examined in the note on Luke viii. 31. It does not mean the Lake of Fire, from which it is distinguished in the Apocalypse. See on xx. 1—3, compared with xx. 10. It does not mean that final abode of the Evil One, and of his associate spirits, but it signifies his present residence and stronghold.

A Star, in the language of the Apocalypse, is a Christian Teacher (i. 16. 20; viii. 10). The Star which had fallen from heaven to the earth, represents the heretical apostasy of some who were designed to be Lights in the Church. This Star has the key of the abyss, and opens the pit. Heretical Teachers are thus represented as being the cause of the opening of the abyss, and of the issue of the smoke from it, which is described as darkening the air and the sun; that is, obscuring the heavenly light of Christ and of His Gospel.

Smoke issues from the Pit; and an army of Locusts comes forth out of the smoke upon the earth. They do not come directly from the Pit itself, as the Beast does, in chap. xi. 7, but the army of Locusts issues forth out of the smoke.

They are described as like unto Scorpions of the earth.

Our Lord had spoken of Scorpions in a spiritual sense, as instruments of Satan. "I give you power to tread on serpents and scorpions." (Luke x. 19.) And in the mention of them here, there is also a reference to the enemies by which the Ancient Church of God was assailed in the wilderness, and to the mercy of Almighty God, "Who led her through the great and terrible wilderness, wherein were fiery serpents and scorpions." (Deut. viii. 15.)

These Locusts of the Apocalypse are represented as enemies to the soul; "they have no power to injure the Grass, or any green thing, nor any Tree, except (εἰ μὴ) the men who have not the seal of God on their foreheads." Elz. has μόνους, only, here after ἀνθρώπους, but it is not in A, C, and is probably only a gloss. It is added in v. 10, that they have power to hurt the men five months. Observe the article τοὺς before ἀνθρώπους; "they have power to hurt the men," i. e. the men mentioned here, who have not the seal of God on their foreheads.

Observe here also the use of εἰ μὴ, save only: these Locusts cannot hurt the vegetation of the earth—and therefore they are not natural locusts—but they only hurt men, and only a particular class of men, viz. those men who have not on their foreheads the seal of God, which declares them to be His, and assures them of His defence. (See above, vii. 3.)

These Locusts are described as conquering: they have golden crowns of Victory (vi. 2, στεφάνους); their faces are human; their hair is long like that of women: and they are in form like Horses of War, to which even natural Locusts bear some resemblance (see Joel ii. 4. Winer, R. W. B. i. 487), and Locusts are therefore called in Italy "cavallette."

But, whereas natural Locusts are described in Scripture as "not having any king" (ἀβασίλευτον γένος, Prov. xxx. 27), these spiritual Locusts are represented here as having a king over them, who is the Angel of the abyss, and whose name is expressed here in Hebrew (אֲבַדּוֹן, Abaddon), and also in Greek (Ἀπολλύων), both names signifying Destroyer; and thus he stands in contrast as the Adversary of the Creator and Preserver, whose name is specified in Scripture in those two languages, viz. in Hebrew אַבָּא (Abba), and in Greek Πατὴρ, Father. See on Rom. viii. 15. Gal. iv. 6.

The name is given in both languages in both cases, because the one is the universal Enemy—Satan, the other is the Father of all, "rich in mercy to all" (Rom. x. 12), both Jew and Greek (Rom. iii. 29).

It is specified here as a characteristic of these Locusts, that they are withheld from killing men; but permission is given to them to exert their power under a control and restraint, so that men should be tried, and tormented by them five months. Observe the change of voice here, from active to passive. God restrains them from killing men; and He suffers that men should be tried by them for a certain period. The language of the original marks the Divine agency in a more striking manner (ἐδόθη αὐτοῖς ἵνα μὴ κ.τ.λ.); it was given to them that they should not kill them, but that men should be tormented by them.

When we consider these circumstances, and review the characteristics of the Trumpets, and contemplate the events predicted by the preceding Trumpets, we see good reason for believing, with many learned and judicious Interpreters, that the present Trumpet, the Fifth, announced the woes inflicted by Mohammedanism.

In further corroboration of this opinion, it may be observed, that the judicial Woe of this Trumpet is represented as due to the agency of the Star which has fallen from heaven; that is, to the operation of the false doctrine and corrupt worship of those who ought to have been Luminaries in the firmament of the Church. The Locusts issue from the smoke that arises from the pit of the abyss, unsealed by the fallen Star.

Mohammedanism owed its origin to Heresies, Schisms, and corruptions in Christendom.

When the Arians had propagated their pernicious dogma, that the Son of God is a creature, and when it had been affirmed by others in Christendom, that He was a mere man, it followed as a natural consequence, that other persons would be represented as eqnal or superior to Him. If Jesus Christ was no more than a Prophet, then Mohammed, who came after Him, might be greater than Jesus Christ. In other respects also, defection and degeneracy in the faith and ritual of Christendom, were preparatory and auxiliary to the spread of Islamism. The doctrine of the Divine Unity, studiously asserted in the Koran, gave an advantage to the new religion as contrasted with the popular form of Christianity, which was tinctured by superstition and idolatry. "Mahomet," says Neander (Church History, vol. v. p. 111), "proclaimed that he had been sent by God to be a restorer of pure Theism, and to cleanse it of those strange elements, with which it was mixed in Judaism and Christianity. The war which he waged was directed against the vain corruptions of those earlier Revelations; and he might be fairly justified in accusing the professors of Christianity, such as he saw it, of falsifying the original worship, as when he assailed the adoration of the Virgin Mary and of the Saints [and of images]. And the Schisms and bitter animosities among the different sects of Christians, presented another point of comparison, in which the religious unity displayed by the votaries of the Koran appeared in a favourable light." Neander has also observed (Ch. Hist. v. 114), that the divisions which existed among the Oriental Christians, and hindered them from making any well-organized resistance to the aggressions of the enemy, gave great facilities to the victorious advance of the Mohammedan Saracens.

The emissaries of this plague, in the Fifth Trumpet, are called Locusts, and they are compared to Horses and Scorpions. All these physical objects are associated with Arabia, the native country of Mohammedanism. The Locusts which were brought by Moses as a plague upon Pharaoh and upon Egypt, came from Arabia. (Exod. x. 13. Cp. Winer, R. W. B. i. p. 490.) The Mohammedan military power was distinguished by its cavalry. "Arabia," says Gibbon, "in the opinion of the naturalist, is the genuine and original country of the horse; the merit of the Barb, the Spanish and the English horse, is derived from a mixture of Arabian blood." (Gibbon, Decline and Fall, &c., ch. l., near the beginning.) The noblest description of the war-horse was probably written in Arabia (Job xxxix. 19). Scorpions also are mentioned in Scripture as characteristic of the Arabian wilderness. (Deut. viii. 15.) All the features of this Vision attract the mind to Arabia.

These Locusts are described as conquerors, having crowns of Victory on their heads, and the sound of their wings is like that of many horses running to battle. Islamism propagated itself by conquest; and the rapidity with which its conquests were achieved, and the vast extent of its dominion, and the splendour of its victories, are almost without a parallel in the history of the world. In eighty years it overran, or rather flew with wings, over Palestine, Syria, Armenia, a great part of Asia Minor, Persia, part of India, Egypt, Numidia, Portugal, and Spain.

Another characteristic of these Locusts is, that they have faces like Men, and hair as of Women, that is, long hair. (Cp. 1 Cor. xi. 14.) Mohammed himself is thus described; "his hair, hanging over his shoulders, retained its dark colour to the day of his death." (Arnold's Ishmael, p. 86.)

The Arabians and Saracens are described by ancient writers as wearing their hair "long and flowing, and sometimes plaited like women." See Plin. N. H. vi. 26. Ammian. Marcellin. xxxi. 18, where Valesius says, "Such was the costume of the Saracens, wearing their hair long and braided, hanging down on their backs, 'crinitis vittatisque capitibus.'"

A recent writer on Islamism thus speaks, "Moslem historians maintain that the Locust Armies carried on their wings the Arabic inscription 'We are the Host of Allah; every one of us carries ninety-nine eggs; and if we had a hundred, we would destroy the world and all that is therein.'" Dr. J. M. Arnold's Ishmael, p. 252. Thus they identified themselves with the Locusts of the Apocalypse; the brood of Abaddon, the Destroyer: thus also they owned that they were restrained by a controlling Power.

It is also specified in the Vision that these Locusts are restrained from killing the men, but that men would be tormented by them five months.

The Persecution waged by Mohammedanism was distinguished in this respect from that of ancient Heathen Rome, which martyred Christians as such, and is represented in the Apocalypse as riding on a horse of fire, with a sword in its hand (vi. 3, 4). And the Persecution carried on by Mohammedanism was also distinguished from the Persecutions waged on the Saints of God by the two Beasts of the Apocalypse, who make war with the Saints, and kill those who do not worship the image of the Beast (xiii. 7—15; cp. xvii. 6).

Mohammedanism did indeed tempt men by many allurements to adopt its own creed; and this was a severe torment. It was, in the strict sense of the word, a βασανισμός; it was a touchstone (βάσανος) of their faith. Cp. 1 Pet. i. 7, where the Apostle compares persecution to the trial of precious metals.

Christians were subjected to many disabilities and humiliating distinctions and oppressions, if they refused to profess Islamism; but they were not compelled to renounce their faith. This fact is established by the authorities in Gibbon's Decline and Fall, chap. li., near the end; and by the quotations from the Koran by Gieseler, Church Hist. § 127, who says, "Jews and Christians were tolerated by the Arabs on condition of paying a poll-tax; and though sometimes severely oppressed (βεβασανισμένοι), they were not compelled to change their religion; still, however, the advantages held out to those who adopted Islamism attracted many converts. Mahomet, in the Koran, made it a duty of believers to carry on religious war for the purpose of exterminating idolatry, and making Jews and Christians tributary."

In the conquest of Egypt by Amru, circa A.D. 639, the Bishop and Community of the Coptic Church near Memphis, "submitted to the invaders, and paying a poll-tax secured to themselves their property and liberty of conscience." Arnold's Ishmael, p. 222, ed. 1859.

Neander observes (Church Hist., Third Period, First Section, near the end), "The Saracens, who, in the course of the seventh and eighth centuries, exercised rule in Asia, in Syria, and the neighbouring provinces, and in Northern Africa, did not persecute the old Christian inhabitants on account of their faith, if they paid the appointed tribute: but there were not wanting occasions for the exercise of wilful oppression, insult, and cruelty; those who only adhered in uncertainty to a dead faith" (i.e. "they who had not the seal of God on their foreheads") "might allow themselves to become converts to a religion which was extending itself by manifold influences, and flattered the passions of the natural man, and was supported by all the weight of authority."

It is said in this prophecy (v. 6), that in those days shall the men seek death. Observe here "the men," the men who have not the Seal of God (v. 4; cp. v. 10). This is a scriptural description of extreme misery, and represents the torment to which those men would be reduced under Mohammedan rule. Cp. Jer. viii. 3, where the prophet speaks of the sufferings of the rebellious Jews scattered abroad; "Death shall be chosen rather than life, by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which remain in all places whither I have driven them, saith the Lord of hosts." Not that the dispersed Jews did really all prefer death, for few had the courage to be martyrs; but the misery of their life is thus described by a comparison which represents it as worse than death. Cp. Job iii. 21, where Job's wretchedness is represented in similar terms, "Wherefore is light given to him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter of soul, which long for death, but it comes not, and dig for it more than hid treasures?" The language of the Patriarch of Arabia appropriately describes the sufferings of Arabian Christians under the rule of the Arabian false-Prophet and his Saracenic followers.

The question concerning the meaning of the five months, during which these Locusts are described as hurting men (v. 10), will be considered hereafter in a general note on the times and numbers in the Apocalypse, at the end of chap. xi.

In the mean time, it may be observed that natural Locusts have that time (viz. five months) appointed to them; their power of hurting extends from April to September, when they are rendered torpid by the cold. Bochart, Hierozoic. pars post. iv. c. 8, p. 495. Cp. Eichhorn, Ewald, De Wette.

And the moral of this sentence is, that, as natural locusts have their season of five months prescribed and limited by God, so these spiritual locusts will not be able to exercise their power of injuring men beyond the period which is determined by Him; and thus it will be seen and acknowledged, that the wonderful conquests of the Saracenic and Turkish armies were not achieved by their own inherent strength and energy, but by the Divine Permission, and for the execution of Divine Judgments.

It may perhaps be asked by some, in reference to this exposition;

How can it be said that Mohammedanism did not hurt any thing save only those men who had not the Seal of God on their foreheads? Did not Mohammedanism hurt some faithful Christians, who had the Seal of God on their foreheads?

The answer to this question is supplied by other parts of Holy Scripture.

They who hurt are compared here to scorpions: their power is called ἐξουσία, authority, permission, from God (cp. Rom. xiii. 1—3), and the word used here for to hurt is ἀδικεῖν (vv. 3, 4). Also, the word here used for "it was commanded" is ἐρρέθη; and this word, used about twenty-five times in the New Testament, is always predicated of God. It was God therefore Who restrained these scorpions from hurting (ἀδικεῖν) any "who have His Seal on their foreheads."

Let us now refer to the words of our Blessed Lord to His disciples, as recorded by St. Luke, x. 18, "I was beholding Satan falling as lightning from heaven." Compare the star fallen from heaven here (v. 1). Our Lord then says, "Behold, I give you the power" (τὴν ἐξουσίαν, authority, the same word as here), "to tread upon" (ἐπάνω, over, and upon) "serpents and scorpions, and upon all the power" (δύναμιν, physical force, distinguished from ἐξουσία) "of the Enemy; and nothing shall in any wise hurt you" (ὑμᾶς οὐ μὴ ἀδικήσῃ, the same word as here).

Therefore, whatever injuries might be inflicted by those scorpion-like Locusts upon the dwellers on the earth who have not the Seal of God on their foreheads, the Locusts would be subject to His rule, and be restrained by His control, and they would not be able to hurt (ἀδικεῖν) any of His faithful servants, the true members of Christ, "Who has bruised the head of the Serpent" (Gen. iii. 15), and Who would bruise Satan under their feet (Rom. xvi. 20), and Who has assured His disciples of every age that they would have the power—the authority—(τὴν ἐξουσίαν) "to tread upon serpents and scorpions, and upon all the power of the Enemy." Whatever might happen in this world to their perishable bodies, their sufferings would redound to their greater glory (Rom. viii. 18. 2 Cor. iv. 17. 1 Pet. i. 6, 7; iv. 13), and they "would be more than conquerors through our Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. viii. 35—37. 1 Cor. xv. 57), "For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and His ears are open unto their prayers, but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil. And who is he that will harm you if ye be followers of Him that is good (τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ μιμηταί)? But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye, and be ye not afraid of their terror, neither be ye troubled, but sanctify the Lord God in your hearts" (1 Pet. iii. 12—15).

The following historical, doctrinal, moral, and practical inferences may be deduced from this vision of the Fifth Trumpet.

(1) Mohammedanism is not to be regarded as a true religion: but as an emanation from the bottomless pit, the abode of the Evil One.

(2) Mohammedanism was permitted by God to come forth from the abyss to scourge mankind for corrupting the true Faith and Worship, and for their manifold schisms and divisions, and for their want of zeal and earnestness in maintaining and propagating the Truth.

(3) Heresy and Schism, Superstition and Idolatry, are great evils, not only in themselves, but in their consequences. The fallen Star unsealed the Pit, and the Pit sent forth the smoke, and the smoke sent forth the Locusts. Arianism introduced Islamism. The schisms of Christendom made it a prey to the sword of the False Prophet. Superstition and Idolatry gave an easy triumph to the armies of him who proclaimed as his watchword, "There is One God." God Himself pointed out the sins of Christians by the punishment which He inflicted upon them. He adapted their punishment to their sins; and thus called them to repentance. They had despised the love of the True Prophet, revealing Himself as God, and they were chastised by the cruelty of the False Prophet. They were distracted by feuds; and they were made to bow their neck to the yoke of a Power which would have forced them all into unity. By the worship of the creature they had almost fallen into Polytheism, and they were chastised by him who proclaimed himself the restorer of Monotheism.

(4) The spirit of comparative forbearance, which in some respects characterized Mohammedanism, was not due to any moderation in its author; for the Locusts are described as under the rule of him who is called the Destroyer (v. 11); but solely to the restraining power and mercy of Almighty God.

(5) Mohammedanism itself, with its rapid and extensive conquests, not having in it the sinful and debasing elements of Idolatry, may be regarded as having served as a barrier against the incursions of Pagan Idolatry from without, and as a safeguard against the corruptions of Superstition within the Church; especially in the East; and thus, in a certain sense, may be recognized as subservient to God, in preserving Christendom from even a worse evil. It had the effect of stimulating the courage, and of reviving the faith of many; and perhaps the condition of Christianity in Asia, Africa, and Greece, might have been far more miserable than it was, if the Christians had not been awakened from their slumber, and excited by their trials to put forth new energy, and to flee with fervent devotion to God as their only refuge in adversity.

(6) Whatever woes may be inflicted on the world under the tyranny of Mohammedanism, or of any other false religion, yet the true servants of God, who have His Seal on their foreheads, are safe from harm.

They have "authority from Him to tread upon serpents and scorpions and on all the power of the enemy, and nothing will in any wise hurt them."

Therefore the True Faith is to be held fast as the Christian's armour, and as a safeguard in all the perils of his pilgrimage through this transitory world to his heavenly rest.

(7) The sway of Mohammedanism is not only limited by God in degree, but in time: its power is to hurt the men (i. e. the careless and faithless, and not the true Christian, v. 4) for an appointed season, called in the prophecy five months. Then its power will fall, perhaps as rapidly as it rose. Here is another proof of its earthly origin. Islamism has its "five months," but the Gospel of Christ is everlasting (Rev. xiv. 6). The Locusts have a King over them, the Destroyer, and he goeth to destruction. But Christ is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, and His Kingdom will have no end (xvii. 14; xix. 16).

12. ἡ οὐαὶ] The first woe is past; behold, there come two woes more after these things.

The Sixth Trumpet.

13. καὶ ὁ ἕκτος] And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar before God,

14.] saying to the sixth angel, who had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which have been bound at that great river, Euphrates.

15.] And the four angels were loosed, which had been prepared for the hour, and day, and month, and year, for to slay the third part of men.

16.] And the number of the army of the horsemen were two myriads of myriads: I heard the number of them.

17.] And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breastplates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone: and the heads of the horses are as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issueth fire and smoke and brimstone.

18.] By these three plagues was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the smoke, and by the brimstone, which issueth out of their mouths.

19.] For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails; for their tails are like unto serpents, and have heads, and with them they do hurt.

In v. 12 A has ἔρχεται, and B has οὐαὶ καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα. In v. 14 B has λέγοντος, but A has λέγοντα, and A, B have ὁ ἔχων. Elz. has ὃς εἶχε. In v. 18 A, B, C have πληγῶν, which is omitted by Elz. In v. 19 B, C have ἡ γὰρ ἐξουσία τῶν ἵππων (A has τόπων). Elz. has αἱ γὰρ ἐξουσίαι αὐτῶν. In v. 20 Elz. omits the article τὰ (which is in A, B, C) before εἴδωλα.

In order to understand this Vision, it must be borne in mind that the design of the Trumpets is not to represent the doings or sufferings of the good; nor the sins of the wicked, but the punishments inflicted upon them for their sins.

Next it must be observed that the Vision of this Trumpet, the Sixth, stands in remarkable contrast, in some respects, with that of the preceding or Fifth Trumpet. The Woe represented by the fifth Trumpet proceeded from the pit of the abyss, opened by a Star that had fallen from heaven. That Woe was produced by a power which had fallen from God.

But here, in the Sixth Trumpet, the agency which becomes a Woe, is represented as proceeding from God.

The signal which sets it in operation is not, as there, from below, and from the Evil One, but it is from above, even from the presence of God Himself. I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar before God, saying to the Angel, who had the Trumpet, Loose the four Angels that have been bound.

The Loosing of the Four Angels is, therefore, a divine act.

Next, the Four Angels, which are here loosed, are Angels of God.

The word Angels is of very frequent occurrence in the Apocalypse; but in no instance, when thus placed absolutely, as here, does it signify an evil Angel.

The number four, as used in this Book, indicates Universality, which appertains to Him in Whose Hand are the four corners of the Earth (see chap. xi. at the end). And these four Angels in αὐτῶν· [19] ἡ γὰρ ἐξουσία αὐτῶν ἐν τῷ στόματι αὐτῶν ἐστι, καὶ ἐν ταῖς οὐραῖς αὐτῶν· αἱ γὰρ οὐραὶ αὐτῶν ὅμοιαι ὄφεσιν ἔχουσαι κεφαλὰς, καὶ ἐν αὐταῖς ἀδικοῦσι.

the Sixth Trumpet which are His agents in punishment may be compared to those Four Angels in the Sixth Seal (vii. 1, 2), who stand at the four corners of the Earth, to whom it is given to hurt (ἀδικῆσαι, vii. 2, 3, the same word as is used here in vv. 10, and 19) the Earth and the Sea.

Besides, the number here assigned to the Army, here displayed, is two Myriads of Myriads: and this is an immense number, far exceeding any human force.

The number Myriads of Myriads had already been used in this Book to describe the number of Angels about the throne of God (see v. 11). And Daniel uses the same number in speaking of God's Angels (Dan. vii. 10), and St. Jude speaks of the Lord coming with myriads of His Holy Angels (Jude 14. Cp. Heb. xii. 22). And the number of God's Angels in Ps. lxviii. 17, when literally translated, is precisely the same as here.

Again, the colour of their breastplates serves also to mark these armies as belonging to God.

No one will despise inferences from colours as well as from numbers, who has carefully considered their use in the Levitical Ritual; which is, as it were, an Ante-Chapel to the inner shrine of the Apocalypse.

This colour jacinth appears as a sacred colour in the Levitical Dispensation, where the word jacinth is used by the LXX, in the description of the curtains and ornaments of the Tabernacle (Exod. xxv. 5; xxvi. 14; xxxv. 7. 23; xxxvi. 19; xxxix. 34), and the holy garments of the High Priest (Exod. xxviii. 5—8), and the breastplate and the Ephod (xxviii. 15. 28. 29. 33), and the Veil of the Holy of Holies (xxxvi. 35; xxxviii. 18: cp. 2 Chron. iii. 14), and the covering of the Ark (Numb. iv. 6), and of the Table of Shewbread (iv. 8), and of the Golden Candlestick, and of the vessels of the Holy Place, and of the Golden Altar of Incense (iv. 9—13). Compare the remarks of Bahr, Symbolik, i. 303, and 325, where he shows that jacinth (dark blue) was set apart under the Levitical Law as a sacred colour. The deep blue of the Sky, and of the Sea, in which God's majesty and glory are conspicuous, are like natural exponents of this symbolical consecration.

The word ὑακίνθινος (of jacinth, or deep blue), as well as λευκὸς, white, in the Apocalypse, indicates a sacred colour. It adorns the livery of God's servants, and the uniform of His soldiers. One of the precious stones of the Twelve Apostolic Foundations of the heavenly Jerusalem in the Apocalypse is jacinth (xxi. 20).

The heads of the horses in this Apocalyptic Vision are described as like heads of Lions (v. 17). Already the first of the heavenly Living Creatures had been described as like a Lion (iv. 7), and in two places of the Apocalypse Christ Himself, in His royal and prophetical office, is described as a Lion (above, Rev. v. 5; below, x. 3).

Besides, the purpose for which these Angels are loosed, and this Army is sent forth, is a holy one.

It is, in order that men should repent; and it is said, as it were, with indignant surprise, that the men who were not killed by this visitation did not repent of the works of their own hands (v. 20).

This then seems to be clear, that these Angels are Angels of God; that this army is an army of God; and that it is set in motion by a command of God, and with a design worthy of God.

But it may be said, Are there not other circumstances in this Vision which are at variance with this divine character?

(1) The Angels are said to kill (ἀποκτείνειν) the third part of men, v. 15.

True, but precisely the same thing is said of the agency of the Two Witnesses, mentioned in the eleventh chapter, who are clearly sent by God, and are called His Witnesses (xi. 3), and are received up to Him in triumph and glory (xi. 12); and the same word is used in the description of the punishment inflicted on those who reject them. If any one wills to hurt them he must be killed (ἀποκτανθῆναι, v. 5), and the consequences of their triumph are, that 7000 men were killed (ἀπεκτάνθησαν).

The attention of the reader is specially invited to that Vision of the Two Witnesses (xi. 3—14), which seems, when carefully examined, to leave no room for doubt as to the true interpretation of this Vision of the Four Angels. Indeed, both these Visions are designated by the same name: both represent "the Second Woe." See ix. 12, and xi. 14.

Further, the same action of killing is predicated in the Apocalypse of Christ Himself. He describes Himself as killing the children of the False Teacher with death (ii. 23). And we read, that "the rest of the men (who are arrayed against Him) were killed by the sword of Him Who sitteth on the Horse; by the sword that proceedeth out of His mouth" (xix. 21).

Indeed, all these sayings are repetitions of what He Himself declares in the Gospel, "Those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before Me" (Luke xix. 27).

(2) Again, it may be objected, that an army of God could not be described under such a figure as this; "out of their mouths issueth fire and smoke and brimstone; by these three plagues was the third part of men killed, by the fire and by the smoke and the brimstone, which issueth out of their mouths" (vv. 17, 18).

But here again it may be observed, that precisely the same thing is predicated of the Two Witnesses of God, in the next chapter. "If any man willeth to hurt them, fire issueth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies; and if any man willeth to hurt them, he must in this manner be killed; these have power over the waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth, as often as they will, with all plagues" (xi. 5, 6).

It may be also remembered, that, in the Hebrew Prophets, smoke and fire are represented as coming forth from God's countenance (as in Ps. xviii. 8) to consume His foes. And it is predicated of God's enemies in this book, that they shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the Holy Angels, and in the presence of the Lamb (xiv. 10; cp. xix. 11). Thus Fire and Brimstone are represented as instruments of the wrath of the Lamb (see above, vi. 16), the Meek and Holy One Himself, Who shed His blood to take away the sins of the world, and Who is infinite in mercy to those who love and obey Him; but to those who despise and resist Him our God is a "consuming Fire" (Heb. xii. 29).

The Trumpets represent God's wrath and indignation against His enemies; and the execution of His retributive Judgments upon them for their abuse of His mercies, and contempt of His Majesty, and violation of His Law.

No wonder, therefore, that the elements of Hell itself should be represented as weapons of His Justice, and as His "instruments of death" (Ps. vii. 13) against the rebellious. Cp. Isa. xxx. 33.

(3) It may also be objected that an army sent by God could not be compared to horses "whose power is in their mouth, and in their tails; for their tails are like serpents, and they have heads, with which they hurt" (v. 19).

To this it may be replied, that God's dispensations in this world, and His messages to it, are likened, by Hebrew Prophets, to an army of horsemen, especially in His judicial retributions on Egypt, the Enemy of His People. "Thou didst ride, O Lord, upon Thine horses and Thy Chariots of Salvation. Thy bow was made naked, even Thy Word; Thou didst walk through the sea with Thine horses; through the heap of great waters" (Hab. iii. 8, 9. 15).

In the Apocalypse Christ is represented as a Warrior riding on a Horse, and His armies follow Him on horses, and His enemies are killed by the sword of Him Who rideth on the Horse (xix. 11. 19. 21), and the blood of the winepress of His wrath cometh up to the bridles of the Horses (xiv. 20).

Next, as to the imagery of the Serpents, we may refer again to the circumstances of the Exodus, which are perpetually recurring in the Apocalypse, especially in the Visions of the Trumpets. The very badge of office of the Hebrew Legislator, the instrument by which Moses wrought his miracles, by which God punished His enemies and delivered His people, was changed into a serpent. (Exod. iv. 2. 4, LXX.)

This was its first appearance. And it is added, "Moses fled from before it." (Exod. iv. 3.) But God commanded him to take hold of it by its tail, in which is the serpent's sting; and which is noted in this Apocalyptic Vision as noxious to God's enemies (v. 19); "and Moses put forth his hand, and caught it, and it became a rod in his hand" (v. 4). Thus it was shown that God's faithful servants (Heb. iii. 2—6) can take hold and handle that which is destructive to His adversaries, and that they can work wonders with it. This was a very significant emblem of Holy Scripture, the first books of which were written by him who bore the rod of power, which became a serpent. In the Septuagint Version of the same chapter (iv. 17), we read that God said to Moses, Thou shalt take into thine hand this rod, which has been changed into a serpent (τὴν στραφεῖσαν εἰς ὄφιν), and with it thou shalt do signs . . . And Moses returned into the land of Egypt, and took the rod of God in his hand (iv. 20; see viii. 5. 16; x. 13; xiv. 16).

When Moses and his brother Aaron came before Pharaoh, in order to show that the power was not in Moses himself, but from 20 [1] Καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, οἳ οὐκ ἀπεκτάνθησαν ἐν ταῖς πληγαῖς [1] Lev. 17. 7. Deut. 32. 17. Ps. 106. 37. & 115. 5, &c. & 135. 5.

ταύταις, οὐ μετενόησαν ἐκ τῶν ἔργων τῶν χειρῶν αὐτῶν, ἵνα μὴ προσκυνήσουσι

God, Aaron was commanded to take the rod, and to cast it before Pharaoh and his magicians; and the rod of God became a serpent: and after a trial, in which God allowed the magicians to exercise some supernatural power, for they cast down their rods and they became serpents, Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods (vii. 10—12).

Again, in the wilderness, a serpent of brass, by God's command, was made the instrument of health to the faithful Israelites, who were cured by it from the bite of the serpents of fire, by which He punished the wicked for unbelief. (Numb. xxi. 6. 9. 1 Cor. x. 9.) And this serpent of brass was a figure of Christ,—the Saviour of all who believe, the Healer of the wounds inflicted by the bite of the old serpent of Fire. (See notes on John iii. 14, 15. Gal. iii. 13.)

Therefore, we arrive at the conclusion, that the Army in this Apocalyptic Vision is an Army of God.

The question now arises, What agents of God are specially represented in this Vision?

In answer to this inquiry, let us observe, that—

The cause of the punishment is intimated in the words, "Loose the four Angels that have been bound at the river Euphrates."

Some Expositors understand by these Angels and their host, some great earthly powers,—Turkish, Saracenic, Oriental,—and suppose that they will come forth from the literal river Euphrates.

But this opinion is untenable. The Euphrates is the river of Babylon; and Babylon in the Apocalypse is always used in a figurative sense: it designates the Great City, concerning which more will be said hereafter. We cannot therefore concur with those Interpreters, who, while they understand Babylon in a typical sense, interpret the river of Babylon in a literal sense. If Babylon is figurative (as doubtless is the case), Euphrates, the river of Babylon, must be figurative also.

What City is typified by Babylon will be considered hereafter.

The Four Angels of God are represented here as having been bound by an evil power in the mystical Babylon. They are bound as Christ was bound: and He was sent bound (δεδεμένος, the same word as here; see on John xviii. 24) to Caiaphas and Pilate. (Mark xv. 1.) Here again is another resemblance to what is represented in the next chapter as done to God's Two Witnesses. They are represented as in a worse state than bound—even killed, as Christ also was killed: killed in "that great City," namely, the mystical Babylon. (See note on xi. 8.)

The Divine Angels are now loosed; their number is four, signifying the universality of their commission.

They are said to be prepared for the hour and day. Observe the definite article here (v. 15).

This is one of the passages, in which great mistakes have been made and propagated, from want of attention to the original. Even a chronological period has been deduced from this passage, understood to mean an hour, a day, a month, and a year; and on the hypothesis that a prophetical day is equivalent to a year, that period has been imagined to be 391 years.

But the hour can be no other than the hour of God's judgment, as it is explained hereafter in chap. xiv. 15; cp. xi. 13. The day can be no other than the great Day of His wrath (xvi. 14; cp. vi. 17). "The Day," says St. Paul (1 Cor. iii. 13), "shall make it manifest," i. e. the great Day. The month and the year are the Month and Year of God's Vengeance on the wicked. See Isa. xxxiv. 8; lxi. 2. Jer. li. 6. Cp. Hos. v. 7. Zech. xi. 8.

This is elucidated by what our Blessed Lord Himself says, "He that rejecteth Me, and receiveth not My words, hath One that judgeth him—the Word that I have spoken, that shall judge him in the Last Day" (John xii. 48).

The Four Angels represent the Divine Word; and there is a propriety in the number Four in that respect also, inasmuch as the Divine Word is summed up in the Fourfold Gospel. The fourfold Evangelium is preached by the Four Angels.

At the awful Day of Doom the power of God's Word will be felt and recognized by all. That Word is prepared for "The Day," to be the rule and standard by which every sentence pronounced at that great Day of Assize will be determined, and according to which all to whom it has been preached will be judged at that Day.

On the whole, we may conclude that this Vision represents the diffusion of the Fourfold Gospel to the four quarters of the Earth. It predicted that the Word of God would be bound. This prophecy has been fulfilled. God's Word has been bound. It was bound for a long time; it was not read to the people; it was chained in the fetters of a dead language; and so it remained, as it were, in prison for many centuries. And even to this day, in many countries, the Word of God is bound by some who profess themselves to be Chief Rulers in the Church of God.

The Ancient Expositors of the Apocalypse had not the benefit of the light which has been thrown on this prophecy by events, such as they could never have anticipated. They had not seen the binding of the four Angels, and their subsequent release in later days. They had not seen the Holy Scriptures chained and imprisoned, and afterwards let loose by God. And yet even some of the Ancient Interpreters of the Apocalypse concluded, from the tenor of this prophecy, that the Angels here mentioned must be Messengers of God. Thus Arethas and Œcumenius.

This Vision has revealed also the result which we have seen, and now see. It foretold that the Holy Scriptures, though bound as captives for a time, would be loosed by the command of God, and that they would traverse the world like an innumerable Army. And although they are God's Army, and therefore are divine, and ministers of salvation to many, yet the Vision has declared that the Holy Scriptures would be like instruments of punishment and death to the enemies of God.

Therefore this Vision inculcates an important religious and moral truth. It reminds us that the present diffusion of the Holy Scriptures may be a terrible Woe. The Scriptures are not to be regarded simply as a blessing to those who receive and obey them; and a blank and cipher to those who reject or slight them. No. Scripture is like the rod in the hand of Moses. It is a rod by which the hand of Faith works miracles for God's people; and it is a serpent to destroy His enemies. It is either Life or Death. It either saves or kills. As Christ was set for the fall of some, and the rising of others (Luke ii. 34), and is a precious stone to many (Isa. xxviii. 16), and the head-stone of the corner (Matt. xxi. 42); but whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken; and on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder (Matt. xxi. 44. Luke xx. 18. Cp. 1 Pet. ii. 7, 8); so it is with His Word; "it is a savour of Life unto Life" to those who receive it, but "of Death unto Death" to those who disobey or despise it (2 Cor. ii. 15, 16).

The Flood, which was a type of Baptism (see on 1 Pet. iii. 21), saved Noah and his family; but it destroyed the unbelieving. The other Sacrament brings life to those who receive it aright; but they who do not discern the Lord's body, eat and drink condemnation to themselves (1 Cor. xi. 29).

So it is with all God's gifts to men. They have all a double edge. Especially is this the case with Holy Scripture. It is a Woe to the wicked. And this is what the present Trumpet declares.

Our Lord Himself authorizes and confirms this interpretation of the Vision now before us.

He describes His own Presence as a Woe to some. "Woe unto thee, Chorazin, Woe unto thee, Bethsaida; for if the mighty works which were done in thee had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes" (Matt. xi. 20, 21). Compare what is said here, v. 20, "they repented not of their works."

"If I had not come and spoken unto them they had not had sin, but now they have no cloke for their sin" (John xv. 22).

In v. 18, the four Angels are said to smite the world with plagues (πληγαῖς). And precisely the same thing is said to be done by God's Two Witnesses; "They smite the Earth with every plague as oft as they will," below, xi. 6; and Christ says of Himself, "O Death, I will be thy plagues," Hos. xiii. 14.

Men and Nations may despise Scripture, and defy its warnings, and break its commandments; and, in the language of this Vision, they may be destroyed by the fire and smoke and sulphur which issue from the mouth of God's host: they may be made desolate by War, Plague, and Famine, which are His Ministers, executing His righteous judgments on mankind for their disobedience to His Word; and yet they may not be conscious of the cause of their sufferings—for this very reason, because they do not revere His Word in which that cause is revealed.

The Holy Scriptures which were bound as captives for many generations have now been set free. Thus the four Angels have been loosed, which were bound at the river Euphrates.

The Word of God has been translated into all languages. Thus the Angels have been loosed. By the aid of Printing, copies of the Scriptures have been multiplied innumerably. Thus, also, the Angels have been loosed. The Scriptures, in τὰ δαιμόνια, καὶ τὰ εἴδωλα τὰ χρυσᾶ καὶ τὰ ἀργυρᾶ καὶ τὰ χαλκᾶ, καὶ τὰ λίθινα καὶ τὰ ξύλινα, ἃ οὔτε βλέπειν δύναται, οὔτε ἀκούειν, οὔτε περιπατεῖν· 21 καὶ οὐ μετενόησαν ἐκ τῶν φόνων αὐτῶν, οὔτε ἐκ τῶν φαρμακειῶν αὐτῶν, οὔτε ἐκ τῆς πορνείας αὐτῶν, οὔτε ἐκ τῶν κλεμμάτων αὐτῶν.

a Matt. 17. 2. ch. 1. 15, 16.

X. 1 [a] Καὶ εἶδον ἄλλον ἄγγελον ἰσχυρὸν καταβαίνοντα ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, swiftness and strength, like an innumerable Army of Horsemen, are now sweeping over the world. Their sound is gone forth into all lands, and their words unto the ends of the world (Ps. xix. 4). These are the Chariots of God's Power. This is His Host. Christ, the Word of God, is with them, and leads them on to Victory.

And let us be sure that this Propagation of the Gospel is, to those who disregard and disobey it, a terrible Woe.

Therefore, well might the Sixth Angel take up the trumpet, and sound, Woe to the World. Woe to the World because of offences. Woe to the World, for its neglect of the Gospel. Let us hear the heavenly blast now sounding in our ears. Some nations have set at nought, in their Laws, the clearest precepts of the Gospel. Many of the wise of this world deny its Inspiration. Others are overwhelmed with the cares of this world; others live in the pleasures of sin, and the lusts of the flesh, as if the Scriptures did not exist. Even Churches have bound the Angels, and killed the Witnesses. And yet the Gospel is the Voice of God. The Word of God is the Army of God. Alas! for all who despise it. Woe to all who reject it. Plagues, Pestilences, Famines, Wars are the penalties on mankind for their contempt of it in this world; and in the world to come,—the Second Death.

20. καὶ οἱ λοιποί] And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship their devils, and their idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk: Neither repented they of their murders, nor of their poisonings, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

In v. 20 A, B, C have τὰ (which is omitted by Elz.) before εἴδωλα; and the articles here are important, as showing that men did not desist from worshipping the evil spirits, and the idols which they had been wont to worship, their idols: intimating therefore the sins of mankind before this Trumpet, and the still greater sins after it; and the punishments that might be expected as their consequences.

It is here declared, that idolatry is worship of devils, δαιμόνια; and this is the doctrine of St. Paul (see 1 Cor. x. 20) and of the Holy Spirit in the Old Testament (see Deut. xxxii. 17). Concerning the teaching of devils, see 1 Tim. iv. 1.

These passages reveal the hidden working of Satan and his associates in the world.

The rest of the language concerning idols is similar to that of Ps. cvi. 37, and cxiii. 5. 7, in the LXX.

The order of sins here recited is that in which they are recited in Holy Scripture in the Decalogue; first sins against God, Idolatry; then Murder, against the Sixth Commandment; then Fornication, against the Seventh; then those against the Eighth. This confirms the exposition just offered,—of the Vision of the Sixth Trumpet.

The word φαρμακεία—literally the use of φάρμακα, drugs—and its cognate terms, are used in the Old Testament by the LXX to describe the magical arts of the Egyptian sorcerers (Exod. vii. 22; viii. 18), and the witchcraft of Jezebel (2 Kings ix. 22), and of Babylon (Isa. xlvii. 9. 12. Dan. ii. 2. Cp. Deut. xviii. 10. Mal. iii. 5).

The scientific discoveries of modern times, and the great facilities afforded to the use of φάρμακα in slow poisons, or in other silent, insidious, and almost inscrutable processes, give a peculiar significance to these words in the Apocalypse, where they occur oftener than in the rest of the New Testament, and may serve to show the prescience of its Divine Author, and its applicability to the later ages of the world.

The word φαρμακεία—the use of φάρμακα, or drugs—is here appropriately placed between φόνοι, murders, and πορνεία, fornication; φαρμακεῖς are placed between πόρνοι, fornicators, and εἰδωλολάτραι, idolaters, in xxi. 8; and φαρμακοὶ are joined with πόρνοι, fornicators, and φονεῖς, murderers, in xxii. 15. φαρμακεία is placed between εἰδωλολατρεία, idolatry, and ἔχθραι, strifes, by St. Paul, in Gal. v. 19.

One of the uses of poisons which seems to be specially noted in Holy Scripture, and which appears to have suggested the combination of this word with the word πορνεία, is the use made of φάρμακα in producing abortion; see on 1 Tim. v. 14, and Suicer, Thes. v. φάρμακον, where it is observed that Fornication leads to the use of drugs (φάρμακα) in causing Abortion and Infanticide. The word φαρμακεία also signifies tampering with the health of others, or one's own, by means of drugs, φάρμακα, potions, philtres, often connected with magical arts and incantations, and with a view to sins of unholiness, both of bodily and spiritual fornication.

The Vision of the Sixth Trumpet,—when understood according to the interpretation just given,—prepares the way for what follows; and therefore the Vision now ensuing affords a confirmation of that exposition of the Sixth Trumpet.

The Little Book, or Roll.

Ch. X. 1. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw another mighty Angel coming down from heaven, clothed with a cloud: and the Rainbow upon his head, and his face as it were the Sun, and his feet as pillars of fire:

2.] And having in his hand a little Roll that had been opened: and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left on the earth,

3.] And he cried with a loud voice, as a Lion roareth: and when he cried, the seven thunders spake their voices.

4.] And when the seven thunders had spoken, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Seal those things which the seven thunders spake, and write them not.

5.] And the Angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his right hand to heaven,

6.] And sware by Him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there shall be no delay,

7.] except in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall be about to sound, and the mystery of God was finished, as he preached as glad tidings to his servants the prophets.

8.] And the voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go take the little Roll which has been opened in the hand of the Angel which standeth upon the sea and upon the earth.

9.] And I went unto the Angel and said unto him, Give me the little Roll. And he saith unto me, Take it, and eat it up; and it will make thy belly bitter, but in thy mouth it will be sweet as honey.

10.] And I took the little Roll out of the Angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey: and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was made bitter.

11.] And he saith unto me, Thou must prophesy again upon many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

In v. 1 observe ἡ Ἶρις, the Rainbow, as the reading is in A, B, C. Elz. omits the article. The Rainbow is an attribute of the Divine Majesty as already represented in a former vision (iv. 3), and it is here like a halo round the head of the Angel, and marks him to be no other than Christ. "The Cloud" also in which He is clothed bespeaks this (see Acts i. 9. Rev. i. 7; xi. 12; xiv. 14—16), and the words, "His face as the Sun," are also declaratory of the presence of Christ (see Matt. xvii. 2, and compare above, i. 16, and below, xii. 1). In the feet as of fire we see another attribute of Christ (see above, i. 15; ii. 18), and further, the voice as of "a Lion" (in v. 3) is also significant of Christ, "the Lion of the tribe of Judah" (v. 5). This "other Angel," therefore, is Christ (cp. viii. 3), and so the words are understood by Bede, Alcasar, Hengstenberg, and many other Expositors.

Christ is represented in this Vision, first, as "Mighty," because, as the sequel shows, He would have many adversaries, and would overcome them all.

Next, "the Cloud," in which He "is clothed," speaks of His Ascension and of His second Coming to Judgment (Rev. i. 7. Acts i. 9. 11).

"The Rainbow" expresses His Mercy to the good, tempering His Justice and Judgments to the rebellious (see above, iv. 3).

"His face as the Sun," proclaims His Divine Glory.

"His Feet as Pillars," firmly set, and "of Fire," indicate περιβεβλημένον νεφέλην, καὶ ἡ Ἶρις ἐπὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ ὡς ὁ ἥλιος, καὶ οἱ πόδες αὐτοῦ ὡς στῦλοι πυρὸς, 2 [b] καὶ ἔχων ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ βιβλαρίδιον ἀνεῳγμένον· καὶ ἔθηκε τὸν πόδα αὐτοῦ τὸν δεξιὸν ἐπὶ τῆς θαλάσσης, τὸν δὲ εὐώνυμον ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς· 3 καὶ ἔκραξε φωνῇ μεγάλῃ ὥσπερ λέων μυκᾶται, καὶ ὅτε ἔκραξεν, ἐλάλησαν αἱ ἑπτὰ βρονταὶ τὰς ἑαυτῶν φωνάς. 4 [c] καὶ that His kingdom is immoveable (Dan. ii. 44), and that although the World should rebel against it, it will never be destroyed, and that He will consume, as with fire, all who resist Him (Dan. vii. 9, 10—14; cp. above, i. 15).

[b] Matt. 28. 18. Amos 1. 2. ch. 4. 5. & 8. 5.

His Feet are firmly planted "on the Sea" (vv. 2. 5), the fluid element denoting Nations in a state of turbulence and agitation (see vii. 3; viii. 8), for He will tread beneath His feet the swelling surge of human pride and passion, as He walked on the waves of the sea of Galilee in the storm (Matt. xiv. 25). And His feet are set on the Earth, the emblem of worldly Power opposed to the Kingdom of Heaven (see i. 7; iii. 10), for all things are subject to Him (see Ps. viii. 6. Matt. xxviii. 18), and however Nations and Kings may rise up against Christ (Ps. ii. 2, 3; see below, xix. 19), He will put all His enemies under His Feet (Ps. cx. 1. Matt. xxii. 44. 1 Cor. xv. 25).

He is described as "crying with a loud voice, like the roaring of a Lion," the King of Beasts, when agitated with rage; for, "to cry with a loud voice as a Lion roareth" (says Andreas), is a sign of wrath; and Christ, as King of the World, and Lord of the Church, is indignant with those who usurp His sovereignty; and will execute vengeance upon them. Cp. Joel iii. 16.

The word here used to describe the sound uttered by the Lion is μυκᾶται. The ancient Greek Interpreters observe that this word is applied to Oxen rather than to Lions (see Wetstein here), who are said βρύχεσθαι or ὠρύεσθαι (see above, 1 Pet. v. 8). But Theocritus (xxvi. 21) has μύκημα λεαίνης. However, this utterance of the Lion seems to be the prelude of louder and more terrible signs of indignation.

This imagery aptly introduces the prophecy in the ensuing chapters (xiii.—xx.), where the two Beasts, θηρία, are represented as rising up against Him Who is the Lion, and as overcome by Him.

The SEVEN THUNDERS consequent upon the utterance of His Voice, are signs of His power and indignation.

These utterances are called "The Seven Thunders," as if they were well known, for such, as the ancient Greek Expositors observe (p. 328), is the force of the Article here. Cp. note above, on vi. 8.

Seven is the Apocalyptic symbol of completion (see i. 10; v. 6; xi. at end). The Seven thunders are all the Thunders.

Thunder is the voice of God, and accompanied the publication of His Law on Sinai (Exod. xix. 16; xx. 18), and the execution of His judgments in Egypt (Exod. ix. 23. 29), and on the world (Ps. lxxvii. 18; civ. 7).

In the xxixth Psalm (as Hengstenberg has observed) there is a sevenfold mention of the voice of the Lord (vv. 3, 4 twice, 5. 7, 8, 9). And in the Apocalypse there is a sevenfold repetition of Thunder, which marks, by successive peals, the manifestation of God's power and majesty, and their final consummation in the last Thunder of universal Judgment.

The 1st mention of Thunder is in the Vision of the Heavenly Throne (Rev. iv. 5). 2nd. In the opening of the First Seal, where the Rider on the white horse is revealed (vi. 1). 3rd. In the introduction to the Seven Trumpets (viii. 5). 4th. Before the Song of the 144,000 standing on Mount Sion with the Lamb (xiv. 2). 5th. After the sounding of the Seventh Trumpet (xi. 19). 6th. On the outpouring of the Seventh Vial of God's wrath on the Kingdom of the Beast (xvi. 18). 7th. After the destruction of Babylon (xix. 6).

The SEVEN THUNDERS are here mentioned as uttering their voices collectively with one universal peal of Judgment, and giving a rehearsal of the Judgment to come, in consequence of the utterance of the Voice of Christ, the Lion of the Royal Tribe of Judah; showing that the Thunders of God's Judgments are wielded by Christ, Who is Judge of all (John v. 22); and will serve at the awful Day for the full and final vindication of His Kingly Majesty, against those who encroach on His prerogatives, or are not loyal to His Throne. This is a fit prelude to the ensuing Visions, which reveal special judgments on adversaries within His Kingdom.

The SEVEN THUNDERS represent the consummation of God's Judgments.

St. John is commanded to seal what the Seven Thunders uttered, and not to write those things; that is, as the ancient Greek Expositors interpret the words (in Catená, p. 331), he is commanded "to keep them secret, because the full revelation of them is reserved for the last times."

The sense of σφραγίζω, to seal, as applied to words, is to be illustrated from its use in this book, and in the visions of Daniel. In xxii. 10, St. John is ordered "not to seal the words of the prophecy of this book;" for, it is added, "the season" (of their fulfilment) "is at hand." In the book of Daniel, vii. 26, we read (according to the version of Theodotion), καὶ σὺ, Δανιὴλ, σφράγισον τὴν ὅρασιν, ὅτι εἰς ἡμέρας πολλάς. There Daniel was commanded to seal the Vision, because its accomplishment was distant; it would be unsealed by Time. And in Dan. xii. 4, where the Vision is concerning the Final Consummation, as here, the prophet was commanded "to hide the words, and to seal the book, σφράγισαι τὸ βιβλίον, till the season of the end," ἕως καιροῦ συντελείας.

Then follows the oath of the Angel, which marks the parallelism of Daniel's Vision with the present, and leads the reader to consider the one as a clue to the interpretation of the other.

The sense therefore here is, "Seal thou up the things which the Seven Thunders uttered, and write them not; because they belong to the end of all things, which is yet far off; and they will make themselves heard and known by all men, when Christ comes to Judgment." Our Lord's own description of His Coming to Judgment illustrates this commission. For "as the Lightning cometh out of the East and shineth out of the West, so shall also the Coming of the Son of Man be." (Matt. xxiv. 27. Luke xvii. 24.) The season of that Coming is sealed up, and cannot be read (see Isa. xxix. 11). It is not written, but it will write itself with the Lightning's flash upon the clouds of heaven.

St. John, who is commissioned to reveal, is also commissioned to seal. He is enabled to disclose many future events, but he is not permitted to declare the time of the end. He has no message to deliver concerning the season of Christ's Coming to Judgment. He declares that Christ will come (i. 7), and that all will be judged by Him when He comes (xx. 12). But the time of that Coming is sealed up, in order that we may be always ready for it (Luke xii. 40). He thus discourages vain speculations upon it, and encourages us to watch and pray, that we may be prepared for it.

In v. 2, the LITTLE BOOK, or rather ROLL (see above, v. 1), is said to have been opened, or unrolled (ἀνεῳγμένον); and so it is again described in v. 8, opened in the hand of the Angel, intimating that the Volume had been once shut, but has now been unrolled by the Angel, and that it lies open in His hand. Such is the meaning of the perfect tense. See on 1 John iii. 9.

St. John is commanded to eat the ROLL. The Roll here is characterized by a diminutive, βιβλαρίδιον (so A, C* has βιβλιδάριον, and so B in v. 9; C has βιβλαρίδιον). It is a Little Roll, less than the βιβλίον, or Roll, described above in chaps. v. and vi., which, as we have seen, contained "a prophecy of the sufferings of the Universal Church, even to the end of the world."

This lesser Roll may be regarded therefore as containing a prophetic episode: and it is delivered by Christ, by whom it has been unrolled, to St. John.

It is, comparatively, a Little Roll, because, as we shall see, the contents of it do not concern the whole Church of all time—as the βιβλίον did—but only a portion of the Church for a particular time. The LITTLE ROLL of St. John concerns the LITTLE HORN of Daniel (Dan. vii. 8. 20). And lest we should imagine that the Little Roll is very limited in its application, its delivery to St. John is accompanied with a commission to prophesy "concerning many Peoples, Nations, Tongues, and Kings," v. 11.

St. John is commanded by a voice from heaven to ask the Angel for this Little Roll; and the Angel gives it to St. John, and commands him to eat it, to consume it (κατα-φαγεῖν), that is, to make it his own, to incorporate it in himself. On this sense of eating, see Jer. xv. 16, and cp. Acts x. 13. By this union of the divine element with himself, St. John is enabled to prophesy. He receives divine food, and is inspired thereby.

He eats the Roll, and it is in his mouth sweet as honey, but as soon as he has eaten it, his belly is bitter: doubtless because of its contents, "full of lamentation and woe." And, together with this eating of the Roll, he receives a new prophetic commission, "Thou must prophesy again upon (ἐπὶ) many Peoples, and Nations, and Tongues, and Kings," v. 11. On this use of ἐπί, upon, concerning, cp. John xii. 16. Heb. xi. 4; it is like the Latin super in "multa super Priamo rogitans, super Hectore multa." (Virgil, Æn. i. 750.) Winer, Gr. Gr. § 48, p. 351.

St. John receives a commission to prophesy concerning many Nations and Kings: and (as many commentators have observed, Grotius, Alcasar, Ewald, De Wette, Hengstenberg, Ebrard, see Düsterdieck, p. 353) he executes that commission in the following chapters, particularly xvii. 2. 10. 12. 15; xviii. 3; xix. 19; xxi. 24.

We have a parallel to, and an illustration of, this action also in Hebrew Prophecy.

The Prophet Ezekiel was commanded to take a Roll, which was spread out open before him, and to eat it; and it was in his mouth as honey for sweetness, but therein was written "lamentation, and mourning, and woe" (Ezek. ii. 9, 10; iii. 1—3); and the Prophet Ezekiel having eaten the Roll, which was as honey in his mouth, and with which he was to fill his bowels, and to cause his belly (κοιλίαν) to eat (see v. 3), was lifted up in the spirit, and went in bitterness (v. 14); or, as the original expresses it, he went away bitter, מַר, in the hot anger of his spirit, "amarus in indignatione," Vulg.; and "the house of Israel," to whom he was sent to deliver the message, is described by him as οἶκος παραπικραίνων, "an embittering house," a people causing bitterness to God and His Prophets, by their sins (ii. 5—8; iii. 9. 26, 27; xii. 2, 3. 9. 25; xvii. 12; xx. 13; xxiv. 3; xliv. 6).

That Vision of Ezekiel affords the clue for the interpretation of this Vision of the Apocalypse.

The Vision of the Throne of God and of the Living Creatures, which Ezekiel saw, and describes in the beginning of his prophecy (Ezek. i. 3—28), has been already compared with the similar initiatory Vision of St. John, at the opening of the prophetic portion of the Apocalypse (iv. 2—11).

The resemblance now becomes more striking; especially when the Vision of Ezekiel, as represented in the Septuagint Version, which was read by the Churches of St. John, is set beside that of St. John.

Let the Greek Text here of the Evangelist be compared with the words of Ezekiel in that Version,—καὶ εἶδον, καὶ ἰδοὺ χεὶρ ἐκτεταμένη πρός με, καὶ ἐν αὐτῇ κεφαλὶς βιβλίου, καὶ ἀνείλησεν αὐτὴν ἐνώπιόν μου, καὶ ἐγέγραπτο ἐς αὐτὴν θρῆνος καὶ μέλος καὶ οὐαὶ (compare "the woe" here in the Apocalypse, xi. 14), καὶ εἶπε πρός με, Υἱὲ ἀνθρώπου (Son of man, a phrase never applied to a Prophet in the New Testament, as being now consecrated to Christ), κατάφαγε τὴν κεφαλίδα ταύτην, καὶ πορεύθητι καὶ λάλησον τοῖς υἱοῖς Ἰσραήλ· καὶ διήνοιξεν τὸ στόμα μου, καὶ ἐψώμισέ με τὴν κεφαλίδα ταύτην, καὶ εἶπεν πρός με, Τὸ στόμα σου φάγεται, καὶ ἡ κοιλία σου πλησθήσεται τῆς κεφαλίδος ταύτης· καὶ ἔφαγον αὐτὴν, καὶ ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ στόματί μου ὡς μέλι γλυκάζον (Ezek. ii. 9, 10; iii. 1—3).

Ezekiel then received a commission to speak to the house of Israel: he is told that he is not sent to strangers, but to the house of Israel, to God's own Church and People (iii. 4—6), and they are an "embittering house" (v. 9).

The Roll is first sweet and then bitter to him. And the Little Roll is first sweet and then bitter to St. John.

In the next chapters (iv., v., vi., vii., viii., ix.) Ezekiel declares a prophecy of woes to Jerusalem and Israel for their sins, especially their idolatries (ch. viii.).

In this remarkable parallelism we may recognize a confirmation of the opinion, grounded on internal evidence, that the message contained in this little Roll of the Apocalypse, specially concerns the House of Israel of the Gospel Dispensation; that it concerns degenerate branches of the Christian Church, embittering God and His Prophets, and is declaratory of divine Judgments on a part of Christendom for its sins.

Let us now examine the other particulars of this Vision.

In vv. 5 and 6 the Angel lifts up his hand, as usual in oaths, and swears by Him that liveth for ever and ever. The hand is the symbol of action; and the lifting it up is a pledge that the thing sworn will surely be done (Andreas). "The Lord will make bare His holy arm" (Isa. lii. 10), and assert His power in the sight of the world. We may compare the action of the Angel in the vision of Daniel (xii. 7), who "lifted up his right hand and left hand to heaven, and sware by (ἐν) Him that liveth for ever and ever."

On this use of ἐν, = by, after verbs of swearing, cp. Matt. v. 34. Winer, § 48, p. 348.

The Angel here is Christ (see vv. 1—3). Christ is here represented in His human nature, as King of the Church and the world; what follows concerns the prerogatives of His Mediatorial Kingdom, which will one day "be delivered up by Him" to God. See on 1 Cor. xv. 24.

Observe that the opened Roll is in Christ's hand (vv. 2. 8), which He lifts up to heaven. The opened Roll is very visible.

In v. 6, χρόνος does not mean time here in the sense sometimes assigned to it; nor does χρόνος οὐκ ἔσται signify "there shall be time no longer," but it signifies "there shall be no longer delay;" and ἀλλὰ means except, or save only (see Matt. xx. 23. Mark x. 40).

The sense is, "there shall be no longer any delay, or respite for repentance to the wicked, or postponement of reward to the righteous, save only in the days of the last Angel, when he is about to sound His Trumpet to call the World to Judgment."

Almighty God in His mercy will give a brief respite on the eve of the final consummation and general Judgment, in order that the ungodly may repent. Cp. St. Peter's explanation of the delay, 2 Pet. iii. 4—9; and Rom. ii. 4: and the use of the word χρονίζει in Matt. xxiv. 48; xxv. 5. Luke xii. 45; and Heb. x. 37, ἥξει, καὶ οὐ χρονιεῖ; and above, ii. 21, ἔδωκα αὐτῇ χρόνον ἵνα μετανοήσῃ; and in the sense of delay of reward to the righteous, see the use of the word χρόνος in vi. 16. These passages afford the best comment on the sense of χρόνος here; and in this sense the words are understood by A Lapide, Grotius, Vitringa, Eichhorn, Ewald, De Wette, Hengstenberg. See Düsterdieck, p. 348.

In v. 7, καὶ ἐτελέσθη τὸ μυστήριον, "and the Mystery was fulfilled," ἐτελέσθη is the prophetic past tense, signifying, that, although the event is still future, yet it is certain; and in the divine foreknowledge and decree, it is already done. See the note above, on John xv. 6, ἐβλήθη; and compare the use of the prophetic aorist in xvi. 1. This use of καί with the aorist is derived from that of the Hebrew Vau with the Perfect. See Exod. xvi. 6; xvii. 4, where the LXX have καί with the future (Ewald, Ebrard): and cp. Winer, Gr. Gr. § 40, p. 248.

God sees the Mystery as already accomplished. It is therefore said here that He preached the glad tidings, or Gospel, of it to His own servants the Prophets. The Patriarchs "were evangelized, as well as we," Heb. iv. 6.

On the accusative after εὐηγγέλισε, v. 7, cp. Acts xiii. 32, and Winer, § 32, p. 199.

The ancient Prophets are called "God's servants" in the Apocalypse (cp. xviii. 20; xxii. 9); and thus the agreement of the Apocalypse with ancient Hebrew Prophecy is declared.

Christ lifts up His hand, and swears. This act of swearing shows, that on account of the overflow of iniquity, even in the Christian Church, the World would begin to doubt the truth of Christ's Kingdom and Universal Sovereignty. This Oath of Christ is designed to put an end to such doubts. Cp. St. Paul's remarks on the use of Oaths, as an "end of strife" or of contradiction (ἀντιλογία); especially as applicable to the Oath of God Himself, assuring the world of Christ's everlasting Priesthood (Heb. vi. 16—18; vii. 20—28).

This oath of Christ declares, that though the triumph of His Kingdom may seem improbable, on account of the multitude and power of the enemies even within His own Kingdom, yet the establishment of that Kingdom is certain; as was revealed to David (Ps. ii. 1—12), and to Daniel (ii. 44; vii. 9, 10. 14).

From these Oaths of God and of Christ, it is rightly inferred by Theologians that oaths are lawful for certain purposes, and on certain occasions, under the Gospel. See Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, vol. v. pp. 72—79, on Jer. iv. 2; and cp. notes above, on Matt. v. 34.

In v. 9, on the use of the infinitive, δοῦναι, depending on λέγων, cp. Acts xxi. 21. Col. iv. 6. Winer, § 43, p. 283.

The question arises; Why does St. John receive this commission at this particular point in the prophetical Visions, namely, under the Sixth Trumpet, or Second Woe?

The Trumpets announce God's judgments on His enemies (see viii. 2). Therefore the commission to prophesy, and to proclaim the punishments reserved for those who invade the royal prerogatives of Christ, finds properly its place in the Series of the Trumpets.

The reception also of the Little Roll fitly dates from the Sixth Trumpet, because—as we have seen—the Sixth Trumpet specially declares the punitive power of God's holy Word (see above, x. 13—21); and because this Little Roll opened in the Hand of Christ, the Incarnate Word, proclaims, as we shall see, the woes which will overtake those Christians who disobey the Law written in the opened Book of His Written Word. That Book of Books in the Hand of Christ has now been opened in the eyes of all. It has been revealed to all by the loosing of the Four Angels that had been bound (see ix. 13—21); it has been displayed to all the World by the diffusion of the fourfold Gospel to the four corners of the earth.

It has also been opened, in another sense, because what was dimly foreshadowed by types and prophecies in the Old Dispensation, is now fully unfolded in the reading and preaching of the Gospel.

For another reason also, this declaration of Judgment on degenerate Christians, despising or hindering God's Holy Word, finds its appropriate position here in the Sixth Trumpet. The Sixth Trumpet, like the Sixth Seal (see vi. 12—16), bears an analogy to the Sixth Day of Christ's Passion Week. On the Sixth Day of that week the Priests, and Scribes, and Pharisees, who bare rule in the literal Jerusalem, killed Him Who is "the True and Faithful Witness." (Rev. i. 5; iii. 14.) This they did, because they, who were the appointed Guardians and Interpreters of Scripture (Mal. ii. 7. Cp. Matt. xxiii. 2), knew not the Scriptures, that is, did not consider them, did not set themselves to discover their true meaning, nor the voices of the Prophets read every Sabbath day; therefore, they fulfilled them, in condemning Him. (Acts xiii. 27. Cp. 2 Cor. iii. 14.)

This Little Roll reveals a like sin in some of those who bear rule in the spiritual Jerusalem. It reveals the sufferings which the Word of God would have to endure from some degenerate Rulers in the Christian Church. See on xi. 7, 8. It reveals likewise the Judgments which would be inflicted upon them for their sins. See xi. 13.

In confirmation of these statements, it may be observed that the Sixth Trumpet is called "the Second Woe" (ix. 12, 13). That Trumpet announced the punitive power of Holy Scripture. And the revelation in the Little Roll concerning God's Two Witnesses ends thus: "the Second Woe is past," xi. 14.

This revelation therefore belongs to the Second Woe, and it accords with the Vision of the Sixth Trumpet, which is the Trumpet of the Second Woe. The Sixth Trumpet, which proclaims "the loosing of God's four Angels that had been bound," has revealed the punitive power of God's Word generally. The Little Roll describes His judgments on those in His Church who disobey that Word, and make it of none effect.

The ancient Greek Expositors observe (in Catenâ, p. 335), that the commission "to prophesy again concerning Peoples, and Nations, and Tongues, and many Kings," shows that the accomplishment of this Prophecy was not near at hand in St. John's age. The repetition of the words, "Peoples, and Nations, and Tongues, and Kings," in the prophecy concerning the mystical Babylon, xvii. 12. 15, indicates that this commission refers to events predicted in that prophecy; see the Retrospect, at the end of chap. xviii.

Ch. XI.] Prophetic View of the History of Holy Scripture; relatively to Rome:

1, 2. καὶ ἐδόθη μοι] And there was given me a reed like unto a Rod, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein; and the court which is without the temple cast out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and they will tread the holy city forty and two months.

After ῥάβδῳ some MSS. prefix the words καὶ ὁ ἄγγελος εἱστήκει, and the Angel stood. But this is not in A or in numerous Cursives, or in the Vulg., Coptic, or Æthiopic, and some other Versions; or in some Greek and Latin Fathers, and is rejected by Lach., Tisch., and Düsterdieck. It seems to be a gloss introduced to account for the abruptness of the diction here; but makes no alteration in the sense.

On this absolute use of the nominative λέγων, cp. iv. 1; xiv. 7; xix. 6: it is derived from the Hebrew לֵאמֹר, and is of frequent occurrence in the LXX; e. g. Isa. vii. 2; xxx. 21. See Winer, § 59, p. 474.

St. John having been directed to ask for the opened Roll, and having received it from the hand of the Angel, and having eaten it, and having been commissioned to prophesy again (x. 11), has now a Reed put into his hand, and he is commanded to measure the temple (or rather the sanctuary, ναὸν, not ἱερόν: see on John ii. 19. 2 Thess. ii. 4), and the Altar (θυσιαστήριον), and them that worship therein: and to cast out the court outside the temple, for it was given to the Gentiles; and they will tread the Holy City Forty and Two Months.

This Vision also has a parallel in the prophecies of Ezekiel, where the Prophet sees an Angel measuring a Temple and a City on a mountain in the land of Israel, purified from Idolatry and hallowed anew (xliii. 7—12). The Angel measures them with a measuring reed (καλάμῳ, Ezek. xl.—xliii.), and when they have been measured, the Glory of the Lord came upon them from the East (the type of Christ, Luke i. 78; above, vii. 2; below, xvi. 12), and His Voice was like the noise of many waters, and the Earth shined with His glory, which filled the House (xliii. 1—5).

A similar Vision appeared to Zechariah; the imagery of whose prophecies is presented in this Vision to St. John. "I lifted up mine eyes and looked, and behold a Man with a measuring line in his hand; then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem. And another Angel went out to meet the Angel that talked with me, and he said, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited, for I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the Glory in the midst of her." (Zech. ii. 1—5.)

This Vision, like the Vision of Ezekiel, undoubtedly referred to the Christian Church, and displayed the Divine Presence within her, and prepared the way for the present Vision of St. John.

The action of measuring is one of appropriation and of preservation (Numb. xxxv. 5. Jer. xxxi. 39. Hab. iii. 6. Zech. ii. 2), and also of partition and separation (2 Sam. viii. 2).

τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον, καὶ τοὺς προσκυνοῦντας ἐν αὐτῷ
2 [b] καὶ τὴν αὐλὴν τὴν ἔξωθεν τοῦ ναοῦ ἔκβαλε ἔξω, καὶ μὴ αὐτὴν μετρήσῃς, ὅτι ἐδόθη τοῖς ἔθνεσι· καὶ τὴν πόλιν τὴν ἁγίαν πατήσουσι μῆνας τεσσαράκοντα καὶ δύο.

b Ezek. 40. 17, 19, 20. ch. 13. 5. Ps. 79. 1. Luke 21. 24.

The Temple of God here (ναὸς), is always the Church in the Apocalypse, and in the Apostolic Epistles generally; see above on 2 Thess. ii. 4. It is never used in them, or in the Revelation, to designate the literal Temple of Jerusalem. See above, iii. 12; vii. 15; xi. 19; xiv. 15. 17.

The Altar refers to the Golden Altar of Incense which stood in the ναὸς, sanctuary, or Holy Place.

Hence the action of measuring here is not only applied locally, but personally: St. John is ordered to measure the worshippers; the living stones, which make the true Temple of God. "Ye are the Temple of God" (ναὸς Θεοῦ), says St. Paul (1 Cor. iii. 16; vi. 19. 2 Cor. vi. 16), "and the whole body of the faithful grows together" (as a living thing) "in Christ into a Temple holy to the Lord." (Eph. ii. 21.) And St. Peter speaks of them as "living stones, grounded on Christ the Corner-Stone, and built up into a spiritual house;" and not only as living, but as sentient, acting, worshipping; set in the Church "to offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Him." (1 Pet. ii. 5, 6.)

The true worshippers of Christ have His protection guaranteed to them. They are girt in with the measuring line of His Omnipresent Love. Cp. Matt. xxviii. 20.

Further, the Head of the Church, by commanding St. John to measure the Temple, or rather the Sanctuary (ναὸν), and the Altar, assures the faithful of all ages, that, whatever may be the power and rage of those who are here called ἔθνη, Gentiles, that is, men separate from, and hostile to, the true Israel, the Christian Sion (see ii. 26, compared with ii. 9, iii. 9), yet her Sanctuary and Altar will always be preserved and protected by Christ, as His own peculiar portion; He will be "a wall of fire round about it, and will be the Glory in the midst of it." (Zech. ii. 5.)

This assurance has been fulfilled by the preservation of the Holy Scriptures, and of the Sacraments, of Christ, and of an Apostolic Ministry, offering the Incense of Prayer, and ministering the Word and Sacraments. They have been defended by Christ against all the arms and artifices of Satan, from without and from within, who has ever been endeavouring to "hurt the oil and the wine." See above, vi. 6.

There is one remarkable difference between this Vision of St. John and the two parallel visions of Ezekiel and Zechariah.

In those Visions of the two Hebrew Prophets, the measuring Reed was in the hand of an Angel (Ezek. xl. 3. Zech. ii. 1—3). And an Angel was the Agent in measuring the City and Temple.

But here, in the Apocalypse, the Reed is given into the hand of St. John, and he is commanded to measure the Temple; and this command is from Christ Himself (see v. 3, and cp. x. 1).

To this observable difference it may be added, that the measuring Reed (κάλαμος), put into St. John's hand by Christ, is described as like to a Rod. And the word ῥάβδος, Rod, is coupled three times in the Apocalypse with the adjective σιδηρᾷ, iron (ii. 27; xii. 5; xix. 15). And in the same places it is coupled also with the verb ποιμαίνειν, to tend, as a Shepherd does. The idea is thus suggested of a pastoral staff.

These circumstances may be explained as follows:

Holy Scripture is the Rule of Faith to the Christian Church. Holy Scripture is the Reed by which the sanctuary and the Altar, and those that worship therein, are to be measured (see above, on Gal. vi. 16. 2 Tim. iii. 15, and 1 Pet. iv. 11). The Greek word κάλαμος, Reed, used here, and by the LXX, about fifteen times in the Vision of Ezekiel, where the Angel measures the Church, is the equivalent to the Hebrew קָנֶה (kaneh). From that Hebrew word, kaneh, the word Κανὼν, canon (rule), canna, reed, cane, comes, and has passed into our own theological language; the Canon of Scripture,—that is, the canonical Books of the Two Testaments,—is our Rule of Faith (Art. vi.). In the words of Bp. Cosin (Canon of Scripture, p. 1), "The Books of Scripture are therefore called Canonical, because they have in all times been acknowledged by God's Church to be the Infallible Rule of our Faith."

Cp. Credner (Geschichte des Kanons, Halle, 1847, p. 6). Das griechische Wort κανὼν, verwandt mit κάννα, Rohr (Reed), entspreche dem alt-hebräischen קָנֶה welches von der Grundbedeutung Rohr, Halm (κάλαμος), die weiteren Bedeutungen gerader Stab, Mess-stab, gerader Schaft, u. s. w. ableitet. . . . . Vergl. Apokalypse, xi. 1. κάλαμος ὁμοῖος ῥάβδῳ und dazu Victorinus Petavionensis (Gallan. Bibl. Patr. iv. p. 59). "Hæc est arundo et mensura Fidei." Origen de Princip. 1, præf. "Certa linea perfectaque Regula (κανών)."—S. Amphilochius ends his verses enumerating the books of Scripture thus, οὗτος ἀψευδέστατος Κανὼν ἂν εἴη τῶν θεοπνεύστων γραφῶν.

The Reed—the Hebrew Kaneh, a reed, whence the word Canon is derived—represents the Canon—or Rule—of Holy Scripture, completed and sealed by Christ. This Reed is said to be like unto a Rod; the Rod of iron frequently mentioned in the Apocalypse. Holy Scripture, though it measures as a Reed, yet is not frail and quivering as a Reed. It is not shaken by the winds of vain doctrine (Matt. xi. 7. Eph. iv. 14). It is not, as some Romish writers have ventured to call it, "a Lesbian rule," or "rule of lead," which may be easily bent and twisted many different ways. The evidence of this may be seen in the sequel of the Editor's Letters on the Church of Rome, Letter iv. p. 75. No, it is a Rod of iron, which cannot be bent or broken, but will break all its foes in pieces, like a potter's vessel. And yet by this Reed Christ is said ποιμαίνειν, to do the work of a Shepherd (Rev. ii. 27; xii. 5), for by the pastoral staff and Reed of His Word, all faithful shepherds under Him, Who is the Good Shepherd (John x. 11. 14), the Chief Shepherd (1 Pet. v. 4), guide the sheep of His pasture, and prove their love to the Shepherd by tending and feeding His Sheep (John xxi. 16).

This Exposition, which recognizes the Holy Scripture here as the Reed like unto a Rod, by which the Church is to be measured by St. John, is authorized by many ancient and modern Interpreters. "In Virgâ rectitudo Scripturæ intelligitur," says Haymo. So Aquinas in Apoc. xxi. "per Arundinem auream intelligitur Sacra Scriptura." So Berengaudus (Rev. ii. 24), "Virga ferrea Evangelium figurat, quo omnis error destructus est," and so Vitringa, Anacrisis, p. 453, "Calamus mensorius, quo dimensio peragenda est, haud dubiè est Verbum Dei, Lex et Testimonium, Lex regni Christi, unicus Canon et norma veri."

This interpretation of this Vision is also happily illustrated by the historical fact, that St. John was the person who was specially appointed by God to complete the Canon of Holy Scripture, and to assure the Church of its integrity and inspiration. His Gospel was the last written of all the Gospels; and his Epistles and Apocalypse were the last written of the other books of the New Testament. See above, Introduction to the Four Gospels, p. xlv, and to St. John's Gospel, pp. 256. 266, and Introductions to St. John's Epistles and to the Apocalypse.

Hence in this Vision of the Apocalypse, the last written of all the Books of Holy Scripture, St. John receives the Reed from Christ, and measures the Church.

Thus we recognize another doctrinal and practical use of this Vision. It assures the Church, that the New Testament, as completed and sealed by St. John, comes from the hand of the Great Angel of the Covenant, Whose countenance is as the Sun, Whose head is arched-over by the Rainbow, the emblem of Mercy and Justice, and Who is clothed in the cloud of heavenly Majesty; Who guided the Ancient Church in the Wilderness by the Pillar of Cloud and Fire, Who treads all Earthly things under His feet, and walks on the Waves, and rides on the Storms of this World; to Whom All Power in Heaven and Earth is given (Matt. xxviii. 18)—Jesus Christ.

This Vision places before the eyes of all, as in a lively picture, the important doctrinal truth, deducible from other parts of Holy Writ, that Holy Scripture is the Rule of Faith; and that whatever lies beyond the lines which Holy Scripture has traced, "is not to be required of any man that it should be believed as an Article of the Faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation" (Art. vi. of the Church of England); and to serve as a warning to those who would add any articles to "the Faith once for all delivered to the Saints" (Jude 3).

It serves as a safeguard against the errors of the Romish Church, which adds the Apocrypha, as of equal value, to the Canonical Books of the Old Testament; and which also places her own Traditions upon a par with the Word of God. The proofs of these statements have been given by the present Editor elsewhere, "Letters on the Church of Rome," Letters iii. iv. and v.

This exposition is further confirmed by what follows concerning the Two Witnesses, vv. 3, 4.

The Court outside the Sanctuary is said to have been given to the Gentiles, and they will tread down the Holy City forty and two months.

3 [c] Καὶ δώσω τοῖς δυσὶ μάρτυσί μου, καὶ προφητεύσουσιν ἡμέρας χιλίας διακοσίας ἑξήκοντα περιβεβλημένοι σάκκους· 4 [d] οὗτοι εἰσιν αἱ δύο ἐλαῖαι καὶ αἱ δύο λυχνίαι αἱ ἐνώπιον τοῦ Κυρίου τῆς γῆς ἑστῶτες.

[c] ch. 20. 4. & 12 6, 14.
[d] Zech. 4. 2, 3, 11, 14.

The word "Gentiles" in the Apocalypse, as above observed, signifies the enemies of Christ; being opposed to Jews, who, in this book, are true believers, faithful Christians (see ii. 9; iii. 9), true Confessors of the faith, those who are "Jews inwardly" (Rom. ii. 29), children of "faithful Abraham," Israelites indeed, in whom there is no guile (John i. 47. Cp. Vitringa, pp. 79. 137. 303. 451. 454).

There is here a reference to our Lord's prophecy concerning the literal Jerusalem. Jerusalem (He said) shall be trodden by the Gentiles (πατουμένη ὑπὸ ἐθνῶν), till the seasons of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled (see on Luke xxi. 24), and doubtless our Lord's prophecy had also a secondary meaning, in reference to the spiritual Jerusalem, the Christian Sion, which is presented to St. John in this Vision (see on Luke xxi. 25).

This Vision therefore represents a corrupt state of Christendom. The outer Court of the Temple is given to the Gentiles, and they will tread the Holy City. Many enemies of God will domineer there. And the line of demarcation between them and the true worshippers, is to be drawn by the measuring Reed, like unto a Rod. The Reed of Holy Scripture measures the Church; and it draws the line between true Israelites, and those who, in the divine Eye, are like "heathen men and publicans" (Matt. xviii. 17). As Bede well says, in commenting on this passage, "They who in name only are joined to the Church, and do not belong to the Altar, and to the Holy of Holies, are cast out by the Gospel-Rule, and are numbered with the Heathen. 'For all the Glory of the King's Daughter is from within'" (Ps. xlv. 14).

The Two Witnesses. The Two Olive Trees; and Two Candlesticks.

3, 4. καὶ δώσω] And I will give to My Two Witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth.

These are the two Olive trees, and the two Candlesticks, or Lamps (see i. 12, 13. 20), standing before the Lord of all the earth.

As to the reading of this passage; in v. 3 A, B have περιβεβλημένους; v. 4, A, B, C have Κυρίου. Elz. has Θεοῦ.

"I will give;" their power is a grant from Me: the streams of Divine Grace shall ever flow into them from the fountain of Divine Wisdom, and will enable them to prophesy or preach. God is the Fountain of the stream, which flows into the Olive Trees, and by them into the Lamps.

What are these Two Witnesses?

By some they have been supposed to be two persons, who would appear and preach for the time here mentioned.

Some of the ancient Fathers were of opinion that Enoch and Elias, or Moses and Elias, or other two persons were intended by them; see for example, Justin Martyr, c. Tryph. c. 49. Tertullian, de Anim. c. 35, and S. Hippolytus, de Christo et Antichristo, pp. 21—23. S. Hilary on Matt. xx., Evangelium Nicodemi, ed. Thilo, pp. 757—765, and the learned Editor's notes on this subject, and the note above on Matt. xvii. 10. Perhaps the requests of the two disciples, St. John and St. James, in Matt. xx. 21, may have been suggested by some such popular belief among the Jews, of the future pre-eminence of two favoured persons in the kingdom of the Messiah.

However true it may be, that this Vision of the Apocalypse may have a partial fulfilment in some pairs of persons combating side by side for the Truth, and specially honoured by Christ, as His Two Witnesses; yet it cannot be imagined, that any of the Saints who have entered into Paradise, and rest from their labours, should be brought back into this world to be treated with cruelty and ignominy upon earth. And the language of the prophecy has a wider and higher range than to any sons of men, as will be seen in considering it as a whole.

It is well said by an ancient Expositor here, Hoc est quod Apostolus dixit (1 Thess. iv. 17), "Rapiemur in nubibus obviam Christo." Ante adventum autem Domini nulli hoc posse contingere scriptum est, "Initium Christus, deinde hi qui sunt Christi, in adventu Ejus" (1 Cor. xv. 23). Unde excluditur omnis suspicio quorundam qui putant hos duos Testes duos viros esse. Aug.?

The Two Witnesses are called the Two Olive Trees, and The Two Candlesticks, or Lamps, standing (ἑστῶτες) before the Lord of all the Earth. On the use of the masculine ἑστῶτες see Winer, § 59, p. 474. It signifies that the Witnesses (μάρτυρες) typified by the emblems are the principal objects which are to be contemplated as standing in the presence of God.

God is represented here as the Lord of the Earth, because the Message to be delivered by His Two Witnesses concerns all the Earth; and because Earthly Powers will despise that Message (see v. 10), and because God will prove His Dominion by punishing those who despise it.

The clue to the interpretation of this Vision also may be derived, in part, from the parallel vision in Zechariah (Zech. iv. 2—14).

There the Prophet is comforted by an assurance, not only that the literal Temple of Jerusalem would be rebuilt by Zerubbabel, although it had many adversaries, but he is cheered with a Vision of the glorious building of that spiritual fabric, the Church of Christ, which was typified by it.

This consolatory assurance is communicated to Zechariah by the Vision of a Golden Candlestick or Lamp (λυχνία), with seven branches; and supplied with oil by Two Olive Trees which are above it (v. 3), one on the right, the other on the left. And he is informed, that this work will be done by the Spirit of God, and not by human power (iv. 6). And in answer to his question addressed to the Angel, "What are the two branches of the Olive trees, which pour the oil out of themselves by the tubes of gold into the Candlestick or Lamp?" the Angel replies, "These are the two anointed ones (literally, sons of oil) standing before the God of all the earth."

The resemblance of this Vision to that of St. John will be obvious by a comparison of the words of Zechariah as they stand in the Septuagint, with those of St. John. Zechariah's words are ἰδοὺ λυχνία χρυσῆ ὅλη—καὶ δύο ἐλαῖαι ἐπάνω αὐτῆς (iv. 2, 3), καὶ εἶπα πρὸς αὐτόν· Τί αἱ δύο ἐλαῖαι αὗται; Τί οἱ δύο κλάδοι τῶν ἐλαιῶν, οἱ ἐν ταῖς χερσὶν τῶν δύο μυξωτήρων τῶν χρυσῶν, τῶν ἐπιχεόντων καὶ ἐπαναγόντων τὰς ἐπαρυστρίδας τὰς χρυσᾶς; Καὶ εἶπε πρός με, Οὗτοι οἱ δύο υἱοὶ τῆς πιότητος παρεστήκασι Κυρίῳ πάσης τῆς γῆς (iv. 11, 12. 14).

The Apocalypse itself teaches, that a seven-branched Candlestick or Lamp is an emblem of a Church (i. 20; cp. ii. 1. 5). Hence S. Irenæus says (v. 20), "The Church preaches the truth; and she is the seven-branched Candlestick (Lucerna) bearing the light of Christ." The Golden seven-branched Candlestick or Lamp represents the Church receiving the oil of the Holy Spirit, and discharging her office of shedding forth divine light.

The Visions in Zechariah and the Apocalypse represent the important doctrinal truth, that the oil is not in the Lamp itself, but is derived from something external to it, and above it; namely, from the two Olive Trees. Zechariah declares that the work of constructing the Candlestick, and of supplying it with oil, is not by human power, but by the Holy Spirit of God (iv. 6), "Not by might nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

Since therefore the oil is not originally in the Lamps, but in the Olive Trees, and since the work is ascribed to the Holy Ghost, therefore the Olive Trees must represent the means by which the Holy Ghost gives oil to the Church, and enables it to enlighten the world with Divine Truth. Those means are the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments.

Accordingly, many ancient Expositors were agreed that the Two Olive Trees represent the Two Testaments, by which the Holy Ghost gives light to the Church, and through the Church illumines the World.

"The Two Witnesses," says Primasius, "represent the Two Testaments preached by the Christian Church to the World: the Church, like a Candlestick, is illumined by the light of the Two Testaments; and the Church may well be represented by Two Lamps, for the Church displays a twofold light, derived from the Two Testaments; and the Church is made up of two societies, Jews and Gentiles, meeting together in Jesus Christ; and there is no contradiction of unity in this number two, any more than there is a contradiction in the preceding Vision of the Seven Golden Candlesticks, which are particular Churches, but taken together, symbolize the one Catholic Church." See above, i. 12. So also Aug.? p. 3310, "Duo Candelabra Ecclesia est; pro Numero Testamentorum dixit duo: ita et ex Septem Candelabris una Ecclesia est. Nam Zacharias (Zech. iv. 2, 3) unum Candelabrum vidit Septiforme, et has duas Olivas, id est, Testamenta, infundere oleum Candelabro, id est, Ecclesiæ." So also Bede and Bp. Andrewes (c. Bellarmin. cap. 11), who concurs in the opinion

5 Καὶ εἴ τις αὐτοὺς θέλει ἀδικῆσαι, πῦρ ἐκπορεύεται ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτῶν, καὶ κατεσθίει τοὺς ἐχθροὺς αὐτῶν· καὶ εἴ τις θέλει αὐτοὺς ἀδικῆσαι, οὕτως δεῖ αὐτὸν ἀποκτανθῆναι. 6 [e] οὗτοι ἔχουσιν τὴν ἐξουσίαν κλεῖσαι τὸν οὐρανὸν, ἵνα

[e] Exod. 7. & 8. & 9. & 10. & 12. 1 Kings 17. 1.

that the Two Witnesses signify the Two Testaments. Similarly Vitringa, Anacr. p. 468, "Oleæ figurant Spiritum Sanctum (ut liquet ex v. 6) dona et gratiam suam communicantem per medium Verbi Dei divisi in Libros Veteris et Novi Testamenti."

In the Vision of Zechariah, the Church is represented by One Candlestick, and in the Apocalypse by Two. Here is circumstantial variety and substantial identity. There is One Church of Christ, because Jews and Gentiles are joined together in Him, and yet in a certain sense there are two Churches, which were typified by the mother and colt in the triumphal entry into Jerusalem (see on Matt. xxi. 5). And by this Apocalyptic Vision of the Two Candlesticks, drinking in oil from the two Olive trees, the Jewish Church, on its side, is reminded that it cannot have light without the New Testament; and the Christian Church is taught, on its side, that it cannot burn brightly without the Old.

Hence, S. Augustine says (Serm. 137, 6, on John x. 1—16), "that in many places of Holy Scripture we find mention of Two Churches, which are in fact one," like "the two walls which meet in the One Corner-Stone, Jesus Christ." See Eph. ii. 20.

This Vision is fraught with instruction.

(1) The Candlesticks receive their light from the Olive Trees. The Church of God must look for light "to the Law and to the Testimony; and, if she speak not according to this Word, it is because there is no light in her." (Isa. viii. 20.) The Scriptures of the Two Testaments are her Olive Trees. For they are λόγια ζῶντα, living oracles (Acts vii. 38); they are planted in the House of the Lord (Ps. lii. 9), ever flourishing with fresh leaves, ever ministering the oil of gladness and food of light. She must be pure and holy, like the Golden Seven-branched Candlestick, set on a firm basis in the presence of God, and she must extend her branches far and wide to diffuse her light and irradiate the world. Like the Golden Candlestick, the Church has no light in herself. She can do nothing without the Olive Trees. If the golden channels which connect her bowls with their branches, are choked, then she will burn dimly; if they are broken, she is eclipsed, and the Tabernacle of the World is dark.

(2) The Two Olive Trees stand side by side, showing that "the Old Testament is not contrary to the New, nor the New to the Old" (Art. vii.). The Law and the Gospel interweave their branches and blend their light together, and the same God is Author of them both.

(3) These two Witnesses stand before the Lord of the Earth. The Church preaching the word of God "is the Pillar and Ground of the Truth" (1 Tim. iii. 15). Christ is ever with her (Matt. xxviii. 20), and He has promised, that the "gates of Hell shall never prevail against her" (Matt. xvi. 18). Being illumined by the light of the Two Testaments, she stands stedfast in obedience to God; and is supplied with an unfailing stream of oil in the Holy Scriptures, which makes her ever to shine in the eye of the world.

(4) Next, we may remark that these Olive Trees and these Candlesticks are only two; that is, God has revealed Himself under the Law and under the Gospel. No other Religion, consigned to written Documents, is from God: no third Witness is to be expected from Him.

(5) Next, we have divine admonition here as to the authentication of Scripture itself. The Two Candlesticks receive oil from the Two Olive Trees. Almighty God employs, and ever has employed, the Candlesticks to diffuse the light from the Olive Trees. Thus He has appointed His Church to receive, guard, interpret, and disseminate Scripture; and whatever has been always so guarded and authenticated by the Church, that we believe and are certain to be Scripture: or, in the language of the Sixth Article of the Church of England, "In the name of the Holy Scripture we do understand those Canonical Books of the Old and New Testament, of whose authority was never any doubt in the Church."

(6) Again, here is a warning against the error of the Church of Rome, which says that she herself is the Church of God, and gives authority to the Bible. See evidence of this in the Editor's Letters on the Church of Rome, Letter iv. of the Sequel, pp. 75. 273. The Candlesticks do not give light to the Olive Trees, but the Olive Trees pour oil into the golden pipes of the Candlestick. The Church does not give authority to the Word; but through the Church the Word illuminates the World.

(7) Here also we see a caution against those who stop the channels of the oil of Holy Scripture from flowing freely into the Church, or adulterate the divine oil with human admixtures; and thus do what in them lies to mar the work of the Spirit, and impair the use of the Candlesticks, by making the wicks fungous, and the light dim, and the air noisome, and the nations blind; and incur the wrath of Him "Who walketh in the midst of the Golden Candlesticks" (i. 13), and tempt Him to remove their own candlestick from its place (ii. 5).

(8) The Two Olive Trees and the Two Candlesticks are called the Two Witnesses, and they are said to prophesy (v. 3), that is, to preach (see 1 Thess. v. 20); and, as we shall see, their actions, and sufferings, and triumphs are compared to those of Moses and Elias (v. 6), and of Christ (vv. 7—13). Christ the Incarnate Word is God's Witness to the World; He is "the true and Faithful Witness" (i. 5; iii. 14). The Word preached is His "Witness to the World." He Himself gives it that title. "This Gospel of the Kingdom must be preached as a witness to all Nations, and then shall the End be" (Matt. xxiv. 14). The Two Olive Trees pouring their oil into the Candlesticks, and the Candlesticks receiving the oil and enlightening the World, are His Two Witnesses; and in the mouth of these "Two Witnesses every word shall be established" (Matt. xviii. 16).

(9) Lastly, this exposition is confirmed and illustrated by its context. The transition was very natural from the Reed like a Rod to the Two Witnesses: for the Word of God, which measures the Faith of the Church, is His Witness to the World. The ignominious treatment which the Word of God would receive, is predicted in the Vision before us, by the mournful garb of the Two Witnesses, who are represented as preaching in sackcloth: and this follows very appropriately after the Vision in the last chapter but one, which represented the Loosing of the Four Angels (ix. 15—19), and its consequences, as already explained, and as will now further appear.

5, 6. καὶ εἴ τις] And if any man willeth to hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man desireth to hurt them, he must in this manner be killed.

These have the authority to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have authority over the waters, to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth, as often as they will, with all plagues.

5. εἴ τις θέλει] if any one willeth. Cp. ii. 21. Philemon 14. In v. 6 A, C have τὴν, which is omitted by Elz.

What has been said above, on the Loosing of the Four Angels, and their punitive power (ix. 15—19), may serve in part as a commentary on these verses.

In the language here used concerning the Two Witnesses, there is a reference to the acts of Elias and Moses.

In the days of Elias, says our Lord, the heaven was shut up three years and six months. Three years and six months are equal to 1260 days, the time specified here. Elijah said to Ahab, There shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word (1 Kings xvii. 1). And St. James says that Elias prayed that it might not rain, and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months (James v. 17). More will be said hereafter on the meaning of this period of time, in the note at the end of this Chapter.

Fire comes out of the mouth of the Two Witnesses to consume their enemies (v. 5).

The enemies of Elijah were consumed by fire, 2 Kings i. 10. Cp. Luke ix. 54. Ecclus. xlviii. 1. The Two Witnesses are caught up into heaven, v. 12; so was Elias, 2 Kings ii. 11.

There is also a reference to the acts of Moses turning the waters of the land of Egypt into blood (Exod. vii. 19), and smiting the land with ten plagues (Exod. ix. 14).

We shall see also in the following verses, that their Acts, Sufferings, and Victory, are compared with those of Christ Himself (vv. 7—12).

At the time of the Transfiguration, Moses was the Representative of the Law; Elias, the Representative of the Prophets: Christ, the Representative of the Gospel (see on Matt. xvii. 23). And the Old Testament was commonly called "Moses and the Prophets" by Christ and by the Jews. See Luke xvi. 29; xxiv. 27. 44.

Very appropriate therefore is this comparison of the acts and sufferings of the Two Testaments, and those of Moses, Elias, and Christ.

The woes here specified fall upon all who despise the Scriptures. If any one despises them, fire cometh out of their Mouth, and consumes their enemies. They can shut heaven, like Elias, and exclude all who reject them. The dews of divine grace are μὴ ὑετὸς βρέχῃ τὰς ἡμέρας αὐτῶν τῆς προφητείας· καὶ ἐξουσίαν ἔχουσιν ἐπὶ τῶν ὑδάτων στρέφειν αὐτὰ εἰς αἷμα, καὶ πατάξαι τὴν γῆν ὁσάκις ἐὰν θελήσωσι ἐν πάσῃ πληγῇ.

withheld from all who scorn them. The heavens are brass and the earth is iron to their foes. The Waters of salvation become blood to revilers or scoffers of Scripture. To them the Blessing is a Bane; the Scripture a Scourge; Preaching a Plague; the Word a Woe.

7—10. καὶ ὅταν τελέσωσι] And when they shall have finished their witness, the Beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, or abyss, shall make war against them, and will overcome them, and kill them; and their dead body (will lie) in the broadway of the Great City, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also their Lord was crucified. And some of the peoples and tribes and tongues and nations see their dead body three days and an half, and do not suffer their dead bodies to be put in a monument.

And they that dwell upon the earth rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two Prophets tormented them that dwell on the earth.

And in that hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand: and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.*

14.] The second Woe is past.

Some various readings are to be first noted here.

In v. 7, after θηρίον A adds τὸ τέταρτον (the fourth), connecting this prophecy with that of Daniel, ch. vii.

In v. 8 A, B, C have πτῶμα, dead body, in the singular number. And so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch. A remarkable reading, and doubtless the correct one; showing that the Two Witnesses have two bodies (v. 9), and yet one body; they are two and yet one: the Old and New Testaments are two, and make one Book, the only Written Word of the One True God; "Omnis Scriptura Sancta unus liber appellatur," S. Jerome, in Esa. xxx. Elz. has πτώματα here.

8—12. ὅπου καὶ ὁ Κύριος αὐτῶν] where also their Lord was crucified. So A, B, C, and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch. Elz. has ὁ Κ. ἡμῶν.

The true reading brings out the similarity between the sufferings of Christ, the Incarnate Word, and those of the Two Witnesses, which are His Written Word.

9. βλέπουσιν] they behold. So A, B, C in the present tense; and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch. Elz. has the future here, and ἀφήσουσι; but A, C have ἀφιοῦσι, and so Lach., Tisch. As to the form of the verb see Mark i. 34; xi. 16. The present tense is the prophetic present, and is more expressive, as bringing before the eyes a thing still future, and vividly displaying it as present. Cp. Matt. xxiv. 40. John xvi. 15. Heb. i. 11. See Winer, § 40, p. 238.

— μνῆμα] monument, tomb. So B, in the singular number, and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch. Elz. has μνήματα, in the plural.

B, C have χαίρουσιν in the present tense; and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch. There is a lacuna in A.

A, C have εὐφραίνονται also in the present tense, and so Lach., Tisch.

In v. 12, B and many Cursive MSS. and Versions have ἤκουσα, I heard; and so Tisch.

And when they shall have finished their testimony, or work of witnessing to the world, the Beast that ariseth up out of the bottomless pit will make war against them, and will kill them.

Here is a reference to the History of Christ, "the True and Faithful Witness," which we see in this Vision will be reproduced, as it were, in the History of His Holy Word; and in the treatment it will receive.

When the Lord of the Two Witnesses had finished His testimony—which lasted, as is most probable, three years and a half (see on John v. 1), or 1260 days, the term here assigned, as by analogy, to His Witnesses (v. 3)—when He had finished His testimony after that period of time, He was delivered up by the Chief Priests of Jerusalem and crucified, and they and the world rejoiced over Him (John xvi. 20), as if He had been destroyed; as earthly men are here described as exulting over the death of the Witnesses; but in a little while (John xvi. 16. 20, 21) He arose from the dead, and there was a great earthquake, and the keepers of the sepulchre did shake for fear, and became as dead men (Matt. xxviii. 2—4), and He ascended on a cloud into heaven (Acts i. 9).

In order to remind the reader of this analogy between the Two Witnesses and Christ, it is said that the Witnesses ascend on the cloud (τῇ νεφέλῃ), that is, the cloud of Christ's Glory. (Cp. i. 7; x. 1; xiv. 14. 16).

The war against the Witnesses, and their death, is here ascribed to "the Beast that ascendeth from the abyss." This Beast has not yet been described. This peculiar use of the article (as already observed) may be called prophetic; it indicates that the object is already visible to the eye of the writer, who is illumined by the Holy Spirit. It may also be designed here to remind the reader that the Beast here mentioned had been already described by another writer of Holy Scripture, the Prophet Daniel (ch. vii. 19), and thus St. John knits on his own prophecy to that of Daniel. Compare the words here used with those of Daniel, vii. 21, ἐποίει πόλεμον μετὰ τῶν ἁγίων καὶ ἴσχυσε πρὸς αὐτούς. St. John also thus connects his own language here with the fuller description which he will give hereafter of this Power. See xiii. 7; xvii. 18, where the Beast is said as here to ascend out of the abyss. He thus brings the past and future into one view. On this prophetic use of the article, see above, in iv. 4; "the Four-and-Twenty Elders" (x. 3), "the seven Thunders" (xi. 8), "the great city," to be described afterwards (xiii. 14), "the two wings of the great Eagle," intimating that the mind of the inspired Writer had a full view of the idea, though not familiar to the reader. So xix. 20, "the lake of fire," to be described afterward in xx. 10. 14, 15; xxi. 8.

Their dead body (it is added) lieth in the broadway (πλατεῖα) of the Great City. "The great City:" here is another anticipation: this name designates the City which is to be described fully hereafter. The words, "the Great City," occur nine times in the Apocalypse (xi. 8; xiv. 8; xvi. 19; xvii. 18; xviii. 10. 16. 18. 21). In xxi. 10, the reading of Elz. has been corrected by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch.

In all these passages the same City is designated by them; namely, the spiritual Babylon; "Babylon the Great," as it is always called, never "Babylon" simply; see xvi. 19; xvii. 5; xviii. 2. 10. An Angel of God has explained what City is meant by the words "the Great City;" see below, xvii. 18.

What this Great City is, will be considered more fully hereafter, when it is described. See below, preliminary Note on chap. xvii.

The dead body of the Two Witnesses is here said to lie in the broadway of the Great City, which spiritually (i. e. mystically, or symbolically) is called Sodom and Egypt, where also their Lord was crucified.

We are not here (says Hengstenberg, p. 529) to think of the literal Jerusalem; but Jerusalem here denotes the Church degenerate through the ascendancy of the worldly spirit, and filled with offences; as, on the other hand, the new Jerusalem denotes the Church purified. The term spiritually is to be also annexed to the expression, "where their Lord was crucified." Outwardly, the Lord was crucified in the literal Jerusalem; but spiritually He is crucified in the degenerate Church. This interpretation had been already authorized by the early Expositors. "The Great City is here that which is called Babylon, where their Lord was crucified in His members in the world" (Haymo). And Christians who revolt from Christ are said by the Apostle to crucify Christ afresh. Heb. vi. 6.

A corrupt Church identifies itself with the literal Jerusalem, whose Priests and Rulers rejected and crucified Christ, just as the Priests and Rulers even of our Lord's age, are said by Him to identify themselves with their forefathers of by-gone generations, by imitating their acts. He says to the Scribes and Pharisees of His own age that "the blood of all the righteous would come on them, from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias, whom ye slew." See on Matt. xxiii. 35.

"The Great City," or mystical Babylon, is here compared to the degenerate Jerusalem which crucified Christ.

Jerusalem was the Church of God; and the reference to Jerusalem here shows that St. John is not speaking of the World which knows not God, but he is speaking of a corrupt Church, which has fallen away from Him.

This corrupt Church is also called Sodom for its immorality (Gen. xiii. 13. Deut. xxxii. 32), as Jerusalem herself is by the Prophets (Isa. i. 10. Cp. iii. 9. Jer. xxiii. 14. Ezek. xvi. 46. 48, 49. 55); and she is called Egypt also for her idolatry (see Ezek. xxiii. 3 8. 19. 27).

9.] They (of the Great City) do not suffer their bodies (the bodies of the Two Witnesses) to be put into a monument.

"The dead bodies of Thy servants" (says the Psalmist. Cp. Ps. lxxix. 2, 3) "have they given to be meat to the fowls of the air, and the flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the earth—and there was no man to bury them." The word here used for grave is not τάφος, but μνῆμα, monument, in the singular.

It may be designed to signify that not only would the people of the mystical Babylon treat the Two Witnesses with contempt and destroy them, but would not allow any record of them to be made; and would, as far as possible, obliterate all traces of them.

It has been well observed on the word μνῆμα here, that this act of the enemies of the Witnesses is done, "ne eorum memoria habeatur, quia monumenta sunt ad memoriam" (Aquinas); and Haymo here expounds μνῆμα by "monumentum, quod moneat."

Something of the spirit described in this Vision is seen in those of the Church of Rome, who, on the plea of obscurity in Holy Scripture, withhold it from the people, and so virtually kill it; and when they have done so, will not allow it to be committed to those enduring monuments of literature, such as editions, and vernacular translations; by which its words may be engraven on the memory of man, "in perpetuam rei memoriam."

The complete accomplishment of this part of the prophecy seems to be reserved to the last days of the World. For it is said, "when they shall have finished their Witness" (v. 7), which will not be till the eve of the end; and this prophecy is immediately succeeded by the Third Woe, or Last Trumpet, the Trumpet which will call all men to Judgment (vv. 15. 18).

13.] The Great Earthquake here described seems to connect the time of this the Sixth Trumpet with that of the Sixth Seal. See above, vi. 12—17. The plagues here described, says Aug. (?) are those which will afflict mankind for their contempt of the Two Witnesses, that is, the Two Testaments of God. And so Bede.

— ὀνόματα ἀνθρώπων] names of men: persons known and distinguished, whose names were often in people's mouths. Cp. iii. 4.

— χιλιάδες ἑπτά] seven thousand: a complete overthrow; see note at the end of this Chapter.

— ἔδωκαν δόξαν] they gave glory to the God of heaven, who thus proved His supremacy over the powers of earth (see v. 10, and cp. v. 20), a prophecy of the results to be anticipated from God's Judgments on "the Great City" mentioned, v. 18.

The Seventh, or Last Trumpet, The Third Woe, The Last Judgment.

15. καὶ ὁ ἕβδομος ἄγγελος ἐσάλπισε] And the seventh Angel sounded: and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever.

16.] And the four-and-twenty elders, which sit before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God,

17.] saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and didst show thyself King to be.

18.] And the nations were wroth, and thy wrath is come, and the season of the Dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give their reward unto thy servants the Prophets, and to the Saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth.

In v. 15 A, B, C have ἐγένετο ἡ βασιλεία, the kingdom of this world became; βασιλεία in the singular number, and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch. Elz. has the plural. The true reading brings out in clearer contrast the kingdom of the World, as opposed to the kingdom of Christ; and its entire subjection to it. On the eternity of the kingdom of Christ, according to the Article in the Creed, Whose Kingdom shall have no end, see above, on 1 Cor. xv. 25.

In v. 17 Elz. has καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος after ἦν, but this is not sanctioned by the best MSS., and is rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., and Tisch.

17. καὶ ἐβασίλευσας] and didst reign: that is, didst assert Thy royal power, and show thyself King. Cp. Deut. xxxii. 20. 35. 41; and below, xix. 6. The aorist is from the LXX Version of Ps xcviii. 1, ὁ Κύριος ἐβασίλευσεν (יְהוָה מָלָךְ, malak), ὀργιζέσθωσαν λαοί. Observe the paronomasia in ὠργίσθησαν and ὀργή.

be judged. A mark of time, connecting this portion of the prophecy with the fuller description of the Last Judgment in xx. 11, 12.

19. καὶ ἠνοίγη] And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the Ark of his covenant; and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.

The Heavenly Holy of Holies is opened, and the inner shrine is revealed, in which is the Ark of the Covenant; the Throne of God "Who sitteth between the Cherubim:" Lightnings are seen, and Thunders are heard; there is a great Earthquake; the Day of Grace is past, the season of Judgment has begun.

In this mention of the Ark of the Covenant and its concomitant Judgment, there seems to be a reference to that event in the History of the Ancient People of God, which presents itself at the beginning of the Vision of the Trumpets, namely, the Entrance into Canaan, the type of Heaven, and the Victory of Joshua, the type of Jesus, and the destruction of Jericho, the type of the City of this World (see above, on viii. 2—6). That Victory was achieved on the seventh day, when the seven Priests, who had compassed the City six times on each of the six preceding days, were compassing the City for the seventh time on the seventh day, and blew the seven trumpets of rams' horns, and the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord followed them; and the People shouted, and the walls fell down flat, and the people entered the City (Josh. vi. 4—16).

Here, at the sounding of the Seventh Trumpet, which has brought us to the end of all earthly things, St. John pauses, as he had done at the end of the seventh seal; and, after his manner, reverts to the first age of the Gospel, and will now begin to prophesy again.

He has now traced, as we have seen, the prophetic history of Holy Scripture. He has revealed the fact, that many bearing the Christian name, would not be thankful for that gift of God; that Scripture would be treated with contumely, in the same manner as its Divine Lord, by a corrupt and degenerate Church. Thus he warns the faithful Christian not to be dismayed or staggered by this strange spectacle, when it is displayed.

He is now about to return to the first age of Christianity, as has been rightly observed by the Ancient Expositors, in order to deliver a parallel prophecy concerning the divinely-appointed Guardian, Witness, and Interpreter of Holy Scripture; the Christian Church. He will now reveal what she herself must expect from the same quarter, namely, from a corrupt Church.

The connexion of Scripture with the Church had been displayed in the Vision of the Olive Trees, and the Candlesticks; and thus a preparation was made for this transition from the prophetical History of Scripture, to the prophetical History of the Church, in relation to a particular form of spiritual defection.

The parallel between the fortunes of Scripture and the Church is also marked by a chronological characteristic. The Two Witnesses prophesy, or preach, in sackcloth, one thousand two hundred and sixty days (xi. 3). Similarly the Woman,—that is, the Church,—to be described in the following Vision, is in the wilderness for one thousand two hundred and sixty days (xii. 6).

Here we are led to an interesting and important Question, viz. On the meaning of the Numbers in the Apocalypse.

(1) We may begin with the number Seven, which meets us at the opening of the Apocalypse.

The clue to its meaning seems to be presented by the Scriptural History of the Creation, "In six days the Lord made Heaven and Earth, and on the seventh Day He rested" (Exod. xxxi. 17. Cp. Gen. ii. 2). And this rest of God was a type of that Eternal Rest (σαββατισμὸς) which "remaineth to the People of God" (Heb. iv. 9).

The Seventh Day in the History of the Creation differs from all the other six Days. They all have an Evening. "The Evening and Morning were the First Day." And so it is said of each of the other five days. But the Seventh Day has no Evening. It is a type of that Rest which has no end.

Enoch, the seventh from Adam, did not die, but was translated (see Jude 14. Heb. xi. 5). He was like a personified Sabbath. He was a type of the faithful who walk with God, and do not see death, and rest in Christ (Matt. xvi. 28. John viii. 51; Rev. xiv. 13).

Thus in the beginning of Holy Scripture we see the number Seven consecrated as a symbol of rest after work done in a preceding series of Six.

We see the same symbol in the entrance to Canaan, the type of Heaven, promised to the true Israelites.

Six times Seven Stations brought the People through the wilderness to the promised land. (See Numb. xxxiii. 1—50; and S. Jerome de xlii. Mansionibus in eremo.)

For Six successive days the Great City Jericho was encompassed, and on the Seventh it fell, and the people entered in with a shout of victory. (See above, on viii. 2—6.)

In the Second or new Creation we see a similar principle. In the Genealogy, with which St. Matthew's Gospel begins, there are Six Sevens, which bring us from Abraham to Christ; in whom all the faithful have Rest. (See on Matt. i. 17.)

In St. Luke's Genealogy (iii. 23—38), Ten times Seven Generations bring us from Christ through Adam to God. (See on Matt. xviii. 22.)

Thus then we see that the sacred purpose of the number seven is to signify rest after toil. This is its use in the Apocalypse.

The Seven Seals exhibit the sufferings of the Church in her pilgrimage through the world, and lead her to her eternal Rest. (Rev. vi. 1; viii. 1.)

The Seven Trumpets proclaim all God's judgments on her enemies and the enemies of Christ, till the end, when the Kingdom of this World becomes "the Kingdom of the Lord and of His Christ." (Rev. viii. 2; xi. 15. 17, 18.)

The Seven Vials pour out all God's wrath on a particular form of wickedness which rebels against Him (xv. 7; xvi. 17).

Other Septenary combinations there are, all expressive of completion; all terminating after a successive series in some great consummation, just as the Hexäemeron of Creation ended in the Sabbath of God.

(2) The number four seems to have the same relation to space, that the number seven has to time; it signifies completeness, universality. It rests on a natural basis, that is, on the idea of space considered in reference to the four cardinal points.

Thus, in the ancient Scriptures, we find the expression "the four winds of heaven" as significant of all space (Dan. viii. 8. 22. Zech. ii. 6); and this expression is adopted by our Lord Himself in the Gospel. (Matt. xxiv. 31. Mark xiii. 27.)

In the Apocalypse, the number four appears often in this sense. Thus, just before the final consummation we see four Angels standing on the four corners of the Earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth (vii. 1. Cp. xx. 8). And this consideration may serve to explain such phrases as the following, "the blood from the winepress flowed to four times four hundred furlongs" (xiv. 20), that is, was extended far and wide.

(3) The Number Twelve (4 × 3) bears a similar relation to mankind, that seven has to time, and four has to space; and this reference is one which belongs to mankind considered in union with God. See above, on Matt. x. 2.

In the old dispensation, we see this number Twelve in the Twelve Sons of Israel, the Fathers of the Twelve Tribes of the People of God. In the Gospel it reappears in the Twelve Apostles, the Patriarchs of the Spiritual Israel. See above, on Matt. x. 2. "These Twelve are the labourers who were to be sent by Christ, and who were to baptize the Four quarters of the World into the Faith of the Three Persons of the Godhead." Aug. (in Ps. lix. Cp. Matt. xxviii. 19.)

Accordingly, in the Apocalypse we see that the whole body of the Saints of God, the true Israelites who are admitted as citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, are represented as consisting of Twelve Thousand out of each of the Twelve Tribes of the children of Israel (vii. 4—9).

It would, however, be a great error to imagine that the Elect of God are limited to this number. Indeed, the Apocalypse itself forbids us to do so; it declares them to be innumerable. The number twelve times twelve thousand is not to be taken literally. It does not express a quantity, but a quality. It teaches us the important truth, that this great, this innumerable company of true Israelites, are united in one Faith, that is, the Faith taught by the Twelve Apostles of Christ. See above, on vii. 4—9.

The same truth is taught in the Vision of the faithful Church, who is represented as a Woman having on her head a crown of Twelve Stars; that is, as crowned with the Diadem of Apostolic Doctrine and Discipline (xii. 1). And it appears in the structure of the heavenly Jerusalem, or Church glorified, which is described as having "Twelve foundations, and in them names of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb" (xxi. 14).

XII. [1] Καὶ σημεῖον μέγα ὤφθη ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ· γυνὴ περιβεβλημένη τὸν ἥλιον, καὶ ἡ σελήνη ὑποκάτω τῶν ποδῶν αὐτῆς, καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς αὐτῆς

Thus this number Twelve in the Apocalypse conveys with it in a significant manner the doctrinal and practical truth, that it is necessary to avoid the error of those, on the one side, who would have only one Universal Bishop; and of those, on the other, who despise all Apostolic discipline; and that it is requisite to hold fast that faith and regimen, and that form of sound words and virtuous practice which was delivered by the Twelve Apostles to the world, in order that all men might thereby come to the rest and glory of the heavenly Jerusalem.

Thus much may be said concerning what may be called perfect numbers, in the Apocalypse.

(4) We may now turn to others of a different import.

The number six—not attaining to the perfection of Seven, the sacred number of rest, seems to represent a crisis of suffering, or a falling short of the Truth.

On the sixth day of Passion Week, Christ was crucified. And throughout the Apocalypse the sixth period, in the groups of seven, is the time of severest trial. It is, as it were, the Eve of the End; the "Day of Preparation" before the Sabbath, to the Good; the hour of Repentance before condemnation, to the Evil.

Thus the Sixth Seal represents the time of severest suffering to the Church (vi. 12). The Sixth Trumpet displays a prelude of the last Judgment to the wicked (ix. 14—21). The Sixth Vial is the signal for the battle of the great Day of God (xvi. 12), and the precursor of the final voice "It is done" (xvi. 17).

The symbolical meaning of the number six, as expressive of falling short of the rest that remaineth to the people of God (Heb. iv. 9, which, as we have seen, is expressed in the number next after it, namely, Seven, is exhibited in a remarkable way in the number of the Beast, opposed to the Lamb; namely, in the number six repeated thrice, 666 (Rev. xiii. 18), which shows a triple declension (viz. in units, tens, and hundreds) from sabbatical rest and holiness, represented by the number Seven.

(5) To indicate an imperfect term of duration in which evil is inflicted or endured, we find the following numbers, which exhibit some remarkable parallelisms, in the Apocalypse.

> The Holy City is given to the Gentiles to be trodden down during forty-two months (xi. 2).
> It is given to the Beast to exercise his power forty-two Months (xiii. 5).

Here is one parallelism of oppression; now follows another, of suffering:

> The Two Witnesses (representing the Two Testaments or Word of God) preach in sackcloth 1260 Days (xi. 3).
> The Woman (or faithful Church of God) is in the Wilderness 1260 Days (xii. 14).
> She is also said to be in the wilderness a time, times, and half a time, i. e. 3½ years (xii. 6).

All these several numbers represent the same duration of time, differently expressed.

The forty-two months = 42×30 = 1260 days = 3½ years.

The 1260 days = 42 months = 3½ years.

Three and a half is seven years broken in two.

Forty-two is Seven multiplied by six, the number of imperfection.

These numbers have an historical basis in the actions and sufferings of the Ancient Church of the literal Israel, and of the Great Head of the Church, Jesus Christ Himself.

The number forty-two connects the History of the Christian Church with that of the Israelitish Church in the Wilderness. Its stations are enumerated in the Book of Numbers, and they are forty-two. (Numb. xxxiii. 1—50.) "And all these things," says St. Paul, "happened to them as types of us." (1 Cor. x. 6—11.) The forty-two mansions of the Israelitish Church are analogous to the forty-two months of the Christian Church. They foreshadow her history in her pilgrimage through the Wilderness of this World to the promised Land of Heaven.

This number 42 months, or 1260 days, equals three years and a half.

This term of three years and a half appears under that name as a type of suffering and persecution in Holy Writ. The famine in the days of Elias, when the Church of God was persecuted by Ahab and Jezebel, lasted for three years and a half. (Luke iv. 25.)

The time in which the ancient Church underwent persecution under Antiochus Epiphanes, was three years and a half. Josephus, B. J. v. 9. Prideaux, Connexion, on A.D. 168, pt. ii. book iii.

The earthly Ministry of the Great Head of the Church, during which He endured rebuke and contradiction from the corrupt and degenerate Teachers of His own People, lasted, it is probable, for three years and a half. See above on John v. 1; cp. Lowth on Dan. xii. 7. It is well said by Dr. Lightfoot (Harmony of the New Test., note on this chapter), that the forty-two months, 1260 days or 3½ years, are symbolical of times of trouble. He observes that the Jews have learned to make the same construction of it: and this also, that comfort might stand up against misery, was the time of our Saviour's Ministry. Christ preached three and a half years in trouble. (Cp. also Lightfoot on Matt. iii. 16.) So the Two Witnesses in the Apocalypse preach in sackcloth. He having finished His ministry was slain; so they. He revived and ascended; so they likewise. Their case is paralleled with Christ's, their Master's. See also Lightfoot's Chorographical Inquiry, chap. vi. sect. iv. "The waste of sacred things by Antiochus lasting for three years and a half, the Jews retained that very number as famous, inasmuch that they often make use of it when they would express any thing very sad and afflictive. . . And perhaps it had been much for the reputation of the Commentators upon the Book of Revelation, if they had looked upon that number and the forty and two months, and the thousand two hundred and sixty days as spoken allusively, and not applied it to any precise or determinate time." See also his Serm. on Dan. xii. 12, p. 1250; and cp. Vitringa, pp. 449. 463.

What then, in fine, are the uses of these numbers in the Apocalypse?

They do not indeed enable us to do what our Blessed Lord Himself has told us is not in our power. "It is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father has put in His own power." (Acts i. 7.) They are not designed to gratify the cravings of a vain curiosity. They do not enable us to foresee and foretell the future. They do not qualify us to construct a prophetical Ephemeris or Apocalyptic almanack.

But they have more important uses than these.

They have, as we have seen, a doctrinal and moral import. They teach us the necessity of unity and constancy in the one true faith, and of communion and fellowship in the discipline and regimen of the Apostolic Church of Christ.

They also serve to connect and rivet certain prophecies together. The mention of the forty-two months, during which the Holy City is trodden down by the Gentiles (xi. 2), shows that the period in which this will be done is contemporaneous with the dominion of that power which is called the power of the Beast, and exercises its sway for a period described by the same chronological symbol of forty-two months (xiii. 5). So the mention of the 1260 Days, in which the Witnesses are said to preach in sackcloth, connects their sufferings with those of the Church in the Wilderness, Who is said to be there for a like period of 1260 Days, and it shows that the Word of God and the Church of God will be fellow-sufferers at the same time. They show that the sufferings of Scripture will coincide with those of the Church.

Besides, they have an analogical value. The Church, which is said to be in the wilderness 1260 days, is also said to be there for three years and a half. They remind the faithful Church that she is to look for trials—trials such as were endured by the ancient Church of Israel in her forty-two sojournings in the Wilderness;—trials such as were endured by Elias under Ahab, by the Maccabees under Antiochus, and by Christ from His own People. They encourage us with the joyful assurance, that if we are true to God, and maintain his cause with zeal, courage, and charity, then, though we suffer, we shall conquer also, as Elias did, as the Maccabees did, and as Christ did; that our sufferings will soon be over; that they will appear like a few days; then even for us there will be a Chariot of fire; and a heavenly Feast of Dedication; and a Cloud of heavenly glory; and a glorious Ascension into heaven, and an eternity of joy.

CH. XII.] Prophetic View of the History of the CHURCH; relatively to ROME:

St. John now reascends to the first age of Christianity, as he had done after the opening of the SEVENTH SEAL (see above, viii. 1); and, as the ancient Expositors have observed, he now proceeds to reveal the future History of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH; not in her universality, but in her relation to a particular power, which will now be more fully described—the Power of ROME.

The WOMAN clothed with the SUN, and crowned with TWELVE Stars, represents the faithful Church.

1—6. καὶ σημεῖον] And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a Woman clothed with the Sun, and the Moon under στέφανος ἀστέρων δώδεκα· [2] καὶ ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχουσα κράζει ὠδίνουσα καὶ βασανιζομένη τεκεῖν.

her feet, and upon her head a crown of Twelve Stars. And being with child she crieth, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered.

And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great dragon, red as fire (πυρρὸς), having Seven Heads and Ten Horns, and upon his Heads seven Diadems. And his tail draweth the third part of the Stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: and the Dragon standeth before the Woman who was ready to be delivered, in order that he may devour her child as soon as it was born. And she brought forth a Son, a Male Child, who is to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her Child was caught up unto God, and to His throne.

And the Woman fled into the Wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

As to the reading of this passage. In v. 5, Elz. has ἄῤῥενα; but A, C have ἄρσεν, which can hardly have been introduced by the copyists; and so Lachmann and Tisch. The sense is, she brought forth a son, a male; τέκνον, child, being understood; there is an emphasis on the masculine dignity and vigour of the son, who is thus more distinctly marked. Compare Mal. i. 14, where ἄρσεν is thus put absolutely, a male, and the use of the word ἄρσεν by the LXX in Job iii. 3, and Isa. lxvi. 7, ἔτεκεν ἄρσεν, said of the Church as here.

Especially compare Exod. ii. 2, ἐν γαστρὶ ἔλαβεν, καὶ ἔτεκεν ἄρσεν, said of Moses, who, in his deliverance, and in his actions, in smiting the kingdom of Egypt with his rod, was a type of the Male Child of the Church, represented in this Vision as delivered from the Serpent, who was symbolized by Pharaoh the Egyptian King, in his persecutions of the ancient People of God.

The Woman in this Vision is the Christian Church. She appeared in heaven, for her origin is from above; hers is the kingdom of heaven. She is clothed with the Sun, for Christ is the Sun of Righteousness (Mal. iv. 2), and is compared in the Apocalypse to the Sun (i. 13—16; x. 1), and He is her Light; and they "who are baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. iii. 27.) She is clothed with Christ; as God is said to deck Himself with light as with a garment (Ps. civ. 2). She has the Moon under her feet, because she will survive the changes of this world. As S. Hippolytus says, de Christo, § 60, p. 31, ed. Lagarde, "By this Woman, St. John most clearly designates the Church, clothed with the Everlasting Word, Who is more bright than the Sun;" and as Primasius expresses it, "The Church being clothed with Christ, treads upon the mutabilities of the World." Cp. Bede, A Lapide, Vitringa, Herder, and others.

She has on her head a Crown of Victory (στέφανος). This Crown is of Twelve Stars.

Twelve is the Apostolic number (see note at end of ch. xi.), and Stars are emblems of Christian Teachers (i. 20). Her Crown signifies, that the Victories of the Church are achieved by the Apostolic Doctrine and Discipline, which is planted as a Crown upon her head, by Christ her King. "The Crown of Twelve Stars," says S. Hippolytus (l. c. p. 32), "indicates the Twelve Apostles." "It is an emblem of the Apostles, who, by the light of the glorious Gospel, put to flight the darkness of Error, and by whose agency Christ, the Head of the Church, vanquished the World." Haymo. And so Aquinas, who refers to 2 Cor. ii. 14, and so Bede, A Lapide, Vitringa, and others.

The Woman cries, travailing in childbirth, and pained to be delivered. On the infinitive after βασανιζομένη, cp. Winer, § 44, p. 287. In this world, the Church, like Eve, brings forth children in sorrow. (Gen. iii. 16.) "Be in pain," says the Prophet Micah, "and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail." (Micah iv. 10; cp. Isa. lxvi. 8—10.)

v. 3. And there appeared another great wonder in heaven, and behold, a great dragon red (as fire).

This other wonder is also said to appear in heaven, because the Power here represented assails the Church,—the Kingdom of heaven.

The Dragon is "the Old Serpent," who is called in this book the Dragon, see vv. 9. 15, 16, where the names Satan, Devil, Dragon, and Serpent, are interchanged.

He had been already described as a Dragon in Ps. xci. 13, and Isa. xxvii. 1. And by this name, the Power of Egypt, as the Enemy of God and of His ancient Church, is described in the Prophets, see Isa. li. 9. Ezek. xxix. 3.

The Christian Church, in this Vision of the Apocalypse, as in very many others of this Book, is regarded as having been prefigured by the ancient Church of God in Egypt, and in the Exodus, and in the Wilderness.

The Dragon is red as fire (πυρρὸς), that is, he is here displayed as persecuting the Woman. See above, vi. 4, where Satan goes forth on the horse red as fire, to wage war against the primitive Church.

The Dragon is also described here as having Seven Heads and Ten Horns, and upon his Heads Seven Diadems. Diadems are symbols of Royalty. Horns are emblems of Power. (Luke i. 69.) The number Seven represents completeness (see note at the end of chap. xi.). And combined with the number Ten, Ten horns, it connects this manifestation of the Dragon with the display of his power, as wielded by the Fourth Great Monarchy, that of Rome. See below, xiii. 1, and xvii. 3. 7. At the time here represented, the Kingdoms of the Roman World were under the Dragon's control. Our Lord Himself called him in that age the Prince of this World (John xii. 31), and St. Paul called him "the god of this world" (2 Cor. iv. 4. Cp. Eph. ii. 2; vi. 12. Col. ii. 15).

The Diadems here are Seven, and they are upon the seven Heads (ἐπὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς), and in this respect they differ from those of the Beast in xiii. 1, where they are ten, and ἐπὶ τῶν κεράτων, on the ten Horns.

The difference of the case after ἐπὶ in these two passages is to be noticed. With the accusative, the sense is, that the Diadems were upon the Heads; and the idea there is, one of firm collocation and settled subsistence upon the Heads. With the genitive, the idea expressed by it is that the Horns were surmounted by diadems. Cp. Winer, pp. 334. 362, and below, xiii. 1, where is an example of ἐπὶ with both cases.

The Dragon, Satan, has Seven Diadems, emblems of royalty. They are not on his horns, but upon his seven heads, which are more closely united to the body than horns are; and thus he is represented as exercising his dominion in one corporate Empire.

The Beast has not his diadems on his seven heads, but on ten horns, which have more the character of a separate existence, and also of a more precarious stability; indeed, his horns are said to give their power to him (xvii. 13). He rises from the seven heads (see xvii. 10), and exercises his power mediately by the horns, and not in the same corporate unity as the Dragon does.

In v. 4 the Dragon is said to draw with his tail a third part (i. e. a large part, see above, viii. 7—12) of the Stars of heaven.

The Dragon himself was once a bright Star in heaven. He was Lucifer, son of the Morning (Isa. xiv. 12). He had many bright Stars associated with him in a heavenly constellation. His fall was theirs.

The fall of the Angelic Star led to the fall of the Angelic Constellation. The Dragon's Tail drew down in its train many bright Luminaries, who kept not their first estate, in the firmament of heaven. (Jude 6.)

The circumstance, that, in the ancient Uranography, one of the Constellations was designated Δράκων, Draco, may perhaps be not irrelevant here.

This act of drawing down Stars from heaven, is expressed in the present tense, and by the verb σύρω, which sometimes signifies violent, and sometimes gentler, attraction, as in a σύρμα, syrma, a long trailing robe. See Acts viii. 3. John xxi. 8. Isa. iii. 15, where it is said of a robe; and Micah vii. 17, where it is applied to a serpent. The word σύρω, in the present tense, well describes the work which the Apostate Serpent is always doing in the Church; where he endeavours to draw down Teachers from their place in the Church, whether by force or flattery. Compare the words in Dan. viii. 10, where the Little Horn is said to cast down some of the stars of heaven, and trample them under his feet. As Augustine says (Epist. 119), and Haymo here, "The stars are falling from heaven, whensoever men, who seemed to shine by God's grace in the Church, yield to temptation, and fall away."

In v. 4, the Dragon stands before the Woman, and is ready to devour her child as soon as she is delivered.

His design is like those of his personal Representatives and royal Instruments, Pharaoh in Egypt and Herod in Jewry; the εἰς τὴν γῆν· καὶ ὁ δράκων ἕστηκεν ἐνώπιον τῆς γυναικὸς τῆς μελλούσης τεκεῖν, ἵνα ὅταν τέκῃ τὸ τέκνον αὐτῆς καταφάγῃ.

a Ps. 2. 9. ch. 2. 27. & 19. 15.

former against the male children of Israel, who were to be cast into the river Nile (Exod. i. 22. Acts vii. 19), the other seeking to destroy the Man Child, Christ Jesus (Matt. ii. 13).

The Woman brings forth a son—a male, (see note above on the reading here in v. 5,) who is to tend (as a Shepherd) all the Nations with a rod of iron; and her Child is caught up to God and to His throne.

At first sight these words appear applicable only to CHRIST.

But, what is true primarily of Christ is, by virtue of His Incarnation, and mystical union with all true members of His body, and by reason of the working of His grace, transferred to them. Hence St. Paul says, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again, until Christ be formed in you" (Gal. iv. 19). So, in a figurative sense, the Church is in labour with children, till Christ be formed in them. They are sons of God by adoption and grace (John i. 13. 1 John iii. 1), by reason of Christ's Incarnation, and their baptismal Incorporation in Him, Who is "Emmanuel, God with us," "God manifested in our flesh" (Matt. i. 23. 1 Tim. iii. 16. Gal. iii. 26. Rom. viii. 15. 17). Therefore David had said, "Behold ye the Philistines also, and they of Tyre, with the Morians, lo! there was He born, and of Sion it shall be reported, that He was born in her" (Ps. lxxxvii. 4, 5). Christ, Our King and Priest, "has made us Kings and Priests to God." By His ascension into heaven, we are even made "to sit together with Him in heavenly places" (Eph. i. 20; ii. 6), and our "Citizenship is in heaven" (Phil. iii. 20).

And though it is primarily true of Christ that He tends the nations with a rod of iron (Ps. ii. 9), yet He Himself has said, "He that overcometh and keepeth my words unto the end, to him will I give authority over the Nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron, as potters' vessels are broken in pieces" (Rev. ii. 26, 27).

Thus Christ Himself has interpreted the present Vision. And to cite one of many ancient Interpreters here, S. Hippolytus says (l. c. p. 32), "The Church in this world never ceases to bring forth the Word, who is persecuted by the world; she is ever bringing forth the male child, the mature Christ, the Son of God, God and Man, by preaching Him to all Nations." And as S. Gregory says, in reference to our Lord's saying in Matt. xii. 48, where see the note, "Christ is born in our hearts by the Preaching of His Word."

The Rod of iron is Christ's Word, the Holy Scripture (see ii. 27; xii. 5), and by it the male children, the masculine spirits of Christ's Church, are endued with power from Him to rule the Nations, and overcome the World. With it they shiver into atoms the potter's vessels—that is, the earthly, brittle theories, of corrupt Religion and carnal Philosophy; and, having performed their mission on earth like Elijah, like him they are caught up to heaven. They are exalted in a glorious apotheosis. "To him that overcometh," saith Christ, in the Apocalypse, "will I grant to sit with Me in My Throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with My Father in His Throne" (iii. 21).

In v. 6, The Woman flees to the Wilderness, where she has her place prepared by God that they may nourish her 1260 days.

On the structure ὅπου ἐκεῖ cp. v. 14, and above, iii. 8; vii. 2.

Pharaoh, King of Egypt, who persecuted the Ancient Church of God, is, as we have seen, called a Dragon in the prophetic language of Scripture (see on v. 3).

The Ancient Church fled into the Wilderness of Arabia, under the guidance of Moses, who was the typical representative of the male child of the Church (see Exod. ii. 2, in LXX, and above, on v. 5), and who was marvellously saved from the royal Dragon of Egypt, and smote the land and people of Egypt with plagues by his rod (see Exod. iv. 17).

In like manner the Christian Church is here represented as flying into the Wilderness after the birth of her male child, who was to rule the Nations with a rod of iron.

The Church is here represented as nourished in the Wilderness, in the place prepared for her by God for 1260 days, or Forty-two Months; as the ancient Church, which was with Moses in the wilderness (see note above, on Acts vii. 38), was nourished with manna (Exod. xvi. 15. 35. Ps. lxxviii. 24, 25. Neh. ix. 15. John vi. 49. 1 Cor. x. 3), in her Forty-two Stations in the Wilderness.

This period of time, Forty-two Months, corresponds in duration with the period, in which the Two Witnesses are said to prophesy or preach in sackcloth in the prophetical Vision in xi. 3, and with the sway of the Little Horn in Daniel vii. 25. See below, v. 14.

The duration of the Earthly Ministry of Christ Himself was probably a time, times, and half a time, i. e. 3½ years, or 42 months. See above, on John v. 1.

The pilgrimage of "the Church, which is His Spouse and Body" (see Eph. v. 23—29. Col. i. 18. 24), is represented as corresponding in duration to that Ministry; and this analogical synchronism declares the sympathy which subsists between Him and her. Hence Bede here says that this period of 1260 days designates the sojourn of Christ's Church, because Christ, whose Body the Church is, preached for that period of time upon earth.

For a further explanation of the meaning of these periods of time, see above, note at end of Eleventh Chapter, "On the NUMBERS in the Apocalypse."

It has been asserted by some Romish Theologians, that the Woman in this Vision represents the Blessed Virgin Mary. But the Exposition now given is that which is dictated by the language of the Text, and was received by the early Interpreters of this Book.

In addition to those Interpreters already cited, we may refer to Methodius (Bishop of Patara, and Martyr, in the third century), who says (in Catenâ, p. 352), "The Woman is the Church: for the things here spoken are not consistent with the circumstances of the generation of Christ, Who was already born before the epoch of this Vision. The Church is clothed with the Sun of Righteousness, and she has a crown of twelve Stars, namely, the Apostles of Christ. Therefore we must understand that the Woman here is the Church, and not the Blessed Virgin; for the Mystery of the Incarnation had been accomplished long before." [The edition of the Catena (1840) has γάλα here; read πάλαι.] "The Church" (he continues), "which is the New Jerusalem, is in travail, as St. Paul says, and groans in labour with the redeemed, until Christ be formed in them (Gal. iv. 19), and she fears the Dragon, until she escapes his snares, and brings forth Christ in every man, that is, Christ spiritually formed in every man. He is both our Head and Body; He Who died for us speaks in us, and has made us to be His members." S. Augustine (in Ps. 142) says, "The Woman is clothed with the Sun, the Sun of Righteousness; He Who is her male child, builds up Sion, and is also born in Sion. She, the City of God, is protected by the Light of Him. Who, as to the flesh, is born in her; and she has the Moon under her feet, because she overcomes the mortality of the waxing and waning flesh," and ad Catechum. (vol. vi. p. 65), "The Church in every age is bringing forth members of Christ."

This Exposition is also expressed by Primasius, who says, "Caput Ecclesiæ Christus in singulis membris dicitur nasci.—Omnes enim qui in Christo Jesu baptizati estis Christum induistis (Gal. iii. 27), Et raptus est filius ad Deum et ad thronum Ejus: licèt in capite Christo præcesserit, congruit tamen et Corpori Ejus. Hinc illæ voces Apostoli, Qui nos resuscitavit et considere fecit in cœlestibus (Eph. ii. 6), et conversatio nostra in cœlis est" (Phil. iii. 20). And Bede says, "Semper Ecclesia, Dracone licèt adversante, Christum parit; masculum autem dicit, victorem Diaboli qui fœminam (Evam) vicerat . . . . Ecclesia quotidie gignit ecclesiam, mundum in Christo vincentem." See also Aug.? "Ecclesia semper generat Dei membra—masculum autem dicit victorem adversus Diabolum;" and Haymo, ad loc. "Membra Christi quotidie parit sancta Ecclesia. Rectè autem sancti sub nomine masculorum comprehenduntur, quia fortiter contra adversa istius sæculi pugnant, sicut fecerunt sancti Apostoli et Martyres. De omnibus electis potest intelligi, qui in Suo Capite acceperunt potestatem ut regant gentes virgâ ferreâ, et confringendi eas tanquam vas figuli."

This true Exposition is happily embodied in the Collect for Christmas Day, and in Bp. Taylor's Prayer (Life of Christ, i. p. 28), "Grant, O God, that I may entertain the Holy Jesus, conceive Him in my soul, nourish Him with the expresses of most holy and innocent affections, and bring Him forth, and publish Him in a life of piety and obedience, that He may dwell in me for ever."

7—9. καὶ ἐγένετο πόλεμος] and there arose war in heaven: Michael and his angels go forth to fight with the Dragon: and the Dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great Dragon was cast out, that old Serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, who deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

In v. 7 Elz. has ἐπολέμησαν and κατὰ, but the reading in the Text (τοῦ πολεμῆσαι) is authorized by the best MSS., and is received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch. On the use of the article with the Infinitive, where a design is implied, see above, Luke ii. 27. Acts vii. 19. Cp. Zech. iii. 1, LXX. and Winer, § 44, p. 293. The present construction seems to be without an exact parallel in the New Testament (see Winer, and Lücke, and Düsterdieck here), inasmuch as no verb, expressing a design, precedes the infinitive; we may however suppose such a verb; and an ellipse of this kind need not excite surprise in the Apocalypse.

Observe, St. John now reverts to an earlier period, in order to recite the antecedent history of the Dragon, and to explain the circumstances under which he was led on to persecute the Woman; and he traces that history till he is brought down, in v. 14, to the same point as in v. 6, namely, to the escape of the Woman in the Wilderness.

It is necessary to attend carefully to this process of recapitulation, which is so frequent in the Apocalypse (see above, Introduction, p. 147, and xii. 1, and below, xx. 1). "It is a common thing in the Apocalypse" (says Bossuet in ch. vii.) "to exhibit events in general outline, and to unfold them afterwards in more minute detail." This is what is done now. Satan is displayed as he was before his fall from heaven.

On one side is MICHAEL, the Archangel, and his Angels, on the other Satan and his Angels. MICHAEL, whose name, מִיכָאֵל, signifies, Who is like unto God? (contrast the words, xiii. 4, τίς ὅμοιος τῷ θηρίῳ; and see note above, Jude 9.) stands up for the children of God's people (Dan. xii. 1. Cp. Dan. x. 12, 13. 20, 21), against the Adversary, who deceives the world. Some Expositors have supposed that Michael here is a name for Christ Himself; but the other opinion expressed above has been rightly maintained by Bengel, Ewald, De Wette, Hofmann, Ebrard, and others. See Düsterdieck, p. 400.

v. 8. "Their place was not found any more in heaven." Compare Jude 6.

v. 9. "He that deceiveth the whole world." The deceits by which Satan cheated the World in Oracles, Sorcery, Soothsaying, Magic, and other frauds, are here specially noticed. These were put to flight by the power of Christ and of the Holy Ghost, in the Preaching of the Gospel by the Apostles and others in the first ages of Christianity.

Our Lord Himself, speaking of the consequence of the preaching of the Seventy Disciples, reveals the spiritual struggle and the Victory, "I was beholding Satan, as lightning fall from heaven" (Luke x. 17, 18. Cp. John xii. 31; xvi. 11). See the note above, on Acts xvi. 16, where is a remarkable specimen of that mysterious conflict, and of the victory achieved by the Apostle St. Paul over the Python or Serpent, who deceived the world.

The Revelations of the ministry of the Holy Angels, assisting the faithful in combating the Evil Angels warring against them, may instruct the Christian student, in reading Church History, and cheer the Christian soldier, in the conflicts of life.

The young man's eye was opened at Dothan; and "he saw chariots of fire and horses of fire around Elisha" (2 Kings vi. 17). "The Angels of the Lord encamp about those who fear Him" (Ps. xxxiv. 7), and the Angels are sent "to minister to them that are heirs of salvation" (Heb i. 14). The agency of Angels is often presented to the view by the Holy Spirit in the Acts of the Apostles (see notes on Acts xii. 15, 21, 22). The presence of Angels in Christian Assemblies and in the holy worship of the Church, is made the groundwork of practical admonition by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xi. 10.

10. καὶ ἤκουσα φωνὴν] and I heard a loud voice in heaven, saying, Now is come the salvation, and the strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of His Christ, for the Accuser of our brethren was cast down, who accuseth them before our God day and night, and they overcame him by the Blood of the Lamb, and by the Word of their testimony, and they loved not their lives unto death. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that tabernacle in them. Woe to the earth and the sea! for the Devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short season. Observe the articles here, "The Salvation," &c. the promised and long-expected Salvation has now at length arrived.

Satan is the Accuser (κατήγορος, A has κατήγωρ) of the Saints, as he was of Job (Job i. 9; ii. 4, 5, and see Bp. Andrewes, v. p. 482). He is the διάβολος, or Calumniator, opposed to Christ our παράκλητος, Advocate and Intercessor.

Satan is also the Accuser of the Brethren, and he accused them before God, that is, in the face of God, and in spite and defiance of Him (see the words concerning Nimrod, Gen. x. 9), when he prompted those lying calumnies, with which the early Christians were traduced by the Heathen votaries and vassals of the Dragon, who vilified the brethren, as guilty of nefarious crimes, and as the authors of all the miseries which befell the Roman Empire. See Minucius Felix, c. 9. Athenag. Apol. c. 4. Tertullian, Apol. c. 8. 14. 40, and S. Augustine, Prolog. De Civ. Dei, and Dean Stanhope on the Epistles, iv. p. 474, and above, note, ii. 10.

The primitive age of Roman Persecution and Christian Martyrdom is presented to the view in this Vision (v. 11), and it displays the Triumphs achieved by those who were cleansed and saved by the blood of the Lamb, and shed their blood for Him.

Those soldiers of Christ overcame Satan by the Blood of the Lamb; because Christ by His Blood had paid the price of their ransom from Satan's power; and they overcame him by the "Sword of the Spirit," which is the Word of God (Eph. vi. 17), as Christ did at the Temptation (see on Matt. iv. 4).

On this use of διὰ, as the cause and instrument by which a thing is done (v. 11), see iv. 11, and Winer, § 49, p. 356, and above, on Rom. viii. 11, and below, xiii. 14.

They loved not their lives unto death. That is, they persevered unto death in hating their life (ψυχὴν) for Christ's sake, and thus by death they gained eternal life (ζωὴν). See above, on viii. 9, and cp. ii. 10.

They who tabernacle in the heavens behold their struggle, and sing songs of praise for their Victory.

The Angels are said here to tabernacle (σκηνοῦν) in the heavens. Here is an allusion to the earthly history of the Church. The Church of Israel sojourned in Tabernacles in the Wilderness, and God dwelt among them in a Tabernacle, the figure of heavenly things (Heb. viii. 5). The great Hebrew Feast of Tabernacles was commemorative of the blessings vouchsafed by God's presence to His Church in the Wilderness, and was prophetic of the blessings to be derived from the Incarnation of the Son of God, and to be consummated hereafter in Heaven. In process of time the Son of God Himself came from Heaven, and tabernacled in us (John i. 14). He now dwells with the Angels, and He will dwell for ever with His Saints, as in a Tabernacle, in the Church glorified (see above, vii. 15; xxi. 3). And they who now in this earthly pilgrimage, make a right use of the blessings vouchsafed in Christ's Incarnation will be partakers for ever of the glories of that heavenly Tabernacle.

The season of liberty and warfare which the Devil now has, is short, compared with that of his future detention in everlasting chains of penal fire; see below, xx. 10, and note above on Matt. viii. 29, "Art Thou come to torment us before the season?"

13, 14. καὶ ὅτε εἶδεν ὁ δράκων] and when the Dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the Woman which brought forth the male child. And to the Woman were given the two Wings of the great Eagle, that she may fly into the Wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the Serpent.

St. John recurs to what he had been describing before in vv. 4—6, the wrath of the Dragon against the progeny of the Church.

He represents the Dragon as persecuting the Church in his fury, because his frauds have been exposed and put to flight by the preaching of the Gospel. The Devil tempted Eve, the First Woman, the spouse of the First Adam, the "Mother of all Living" (Gen. iii. 20), the type of the Church. He now tempts the Church (see above, on 2 Cor. xi. 3). And she is carried by the two Wings of the Great Eagle into the Wilderness, where she is nourished for a time, times, and half a time, that is, three prophetic years and a half.

St. John is here brought again to the same point as in v. 6, the escape of the Woman into the Wilderness.

She is carried there on "the Two Wings of the Great Eagle."

Observe the definite articles here, "the Two Wings of the Great Eagle."

Who is this Eagle, and what are His Two Wings?

The Ancient Church, escaping from Pharaoh and from Egypt, is described by God, in Holy Scripture, as borne by Him on Eagles' wings (Exod. xix. 4. Cp. Deut. xxxii. 11).

The Eagle is the King of Birds. Christ, Our King, Who is compared to the Lion, the King of Beasts (v. 5), is also likened to the Eagle, the King of Birds. And the Eagle is the Serpent's foe, as naturalists observe. "Between the Eagle and the Dragon there is a constant enmity; the Eagle seeking to kill the Dragon, and the Dragon breaking the Eagle's eggs; and when he hears the noise of the Eagle's wings in the air, he speeds to his den and hides himself." Cp. Horat. 4 Od. iv. 1:

> "Qualem ministrum fulminis Alitem (the Eagle),
> Cui rex Deorum regnum in aves vagas
> Permisit——
> Nunc in reluctantes Dracones
> Egit amor dapis atque pugnæ."

And Plin. H. N. v. 4, "Acrior est (Aquilæ) cum dracone pugna, et multò magis anceps." On the Macedonian coins of Amyntas, Father of Philip, there was a figure of an Eagle seizing a Dragon. See Wetstein, p. 798.

Our Divine Eagle, Jesus Christ, wages war with the spiritual Dragon.

The Eagle, also, bears its offspring on its wings (Deut. xxxii. 11), and casts off the feathers of old age, and renews its youth (Ps. ciii. 5).

So, our Divine Eagle, Jesus Christ, cast off the plumage of the grave, and soared in His glorious Ascension above the Clouds, and He carries His children with Him to His throne in Heaven, and is the Protector and Saviour of His Church (see above, on iv. 7; vii. 15), and they, like young eagles, flock together to Him. See note above, on Matt. xxiv. 28. Luke xvii. 36.

The Two Wings of the Great Eagle are the "Wings of Christ." "Christ" (says S. Hippolytus, l. c. p. 32) "stretched out his arms like Wings on the Cross, and called all to shelter beneath Him, as a Hen gathereth her chickens under her wings" (Matt. xxiii. 37); and as God by the prophet says, "to you who fear My Name, the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in His Wings" (Mal. iv. 2).

These Two Wings are emblems of the Two Testaments. The Two Testaments are the Wings of Christ, the Incarnate Word. The Church flies on their pinions in her Missionary course through the Wilderness of this World. She is borne on the Wings of the Holy Scripture into all the world. As Primasius says here, "The Church uses the Two Testaments as her wings," and Aug.? says, "The two Wings of the Great Eagle are the Two Testaments." "Their sound is gone out into all lands" (Ps. xix. 4). The flutterings of those Divine Wings, the flappings of those heavenly pinions, are heard every where, and they waft the Church into all lands. Christ rides on them as on the chariot of the Winged Cherubim, the "quadriga Domini." See above, on iv. 6.

The truth embodied in this symbol has received a beautiful practical illustration from the usage of Christians, in placing the Two Testaments upon the Two Wings of an Eagle in Churches, and reading the Lessons of Holy Scripture therefrom.

In v. 14 it is said that the Church is to be nourished for a time, times, and half a time, from the face of the Serpent.

This prophetic period is the same as that which is assigned by Daniel to the sway of the Little Horn, who rises from among the ten horns, or Kings, of the fourth or Roman Empire (Dan. vii. 2—27).

The word καιρὸς signifies one year, and καιροὶ signifies two years. Cp. Winer, § 27, p. 160. There is no dual in the N. T.

This note of time serves thus to connect this Apocalyptic prophecy with that of Daniel, and it also connects them both with the time of the preaching of the Two Witnesses in sackcloth, and with the pilgrimage of the Woman, or Christian Church, in the wilderness (see above, on v. 6, and on chap. xi. at the end).

15. καὶ ἔβαλεν] and the Serpent cast out of his mouth water as a river after the Woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the river. And the Earth helped the Woman, and the Earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the river which the Dragon cast out of his mouth.

The Dragon, enraged by the exposure of his deceits, by which he had deluded the world, and finding that the Christian Church had not been destroyed by Persecution, but rather had grown under it (see above, on the Third Seal, vi. 5), as the Ancient Church, when persecuted by Pharaoh, the instrument of the old Dragon, had increased in Egypt (cp. Exod. i. 2. 7. 20. Ps. cv. 24), now resorts to another artifice.

He casts out of his mouth water as a river to overwhelm her with a Flood.

Waters are Apocalyptic emblems of Multitudes (see xvii. 15); and a Torrent, flowing with violence, and sweeping over the land, is an emblem of a hostile army, rushing onward with an impetuous invasion; and is so applied in Holy Scripture. See Isa. viii. 8; xvii. 12; lix. 19. Jer. xlvi. 7; xlvii. 2.

This Flood poured forth by the Dragon, after the time of the primitive Persecutions of the Church, seems to represent the Deluge of barbarous Nations, streaming down from the North on Europe and Africa, and disturbing the peace of Christendom, and reducing lands and cities to desolation, and threatening to drown the Church.

Such were the inroads of the Goths and Huns, especially the Vandals in the fifth century. See above, on viii. 8.

But by God's mercy these floods were swallowed up by the earth. These barbarians subsided in the countries which they had invaded, and were converted to Christianity. See Bp. Wilson's note here, and Dean Jackson, quoted above, p. 198, and Archdn. Harrison on the Prophecies, p. 341, and the following statements by a recent Historian of the Church: "At first, the Heathens of Rome and Italy imputed their own calamities to the Christians, and when the West of Europe had been inundated by the barbarous hordes, they affirmed that these disasters were sent by the gods (see Aug. C. D. v. 21), and they predicted a speedy downfall of Christianity. But they were silenced, when even the German conquerors became converts to Christianity." "The amalgamation of the German conquerors with the older inhabitants of the land, and the development of the new European nations, were universally effected by similarity of faith." Gieseler, Church History, § 79, and § 123.

Thus the Earth helped the Woman. This Prophecy also received a fulfilment in the Christianization of the earthly power of Rome, which had been arrayed by the Dragon against the Woman. The first Christian Emperor Constantine, in one of his letters to Eusebius, refers to this prophecy, and says that the Dragon had been cast out by God's Providence and his own ministry (Euseb. de Vit. Const. ii. 46); and he placed in front of his palace a picture representing the Cross over his own head, and the Dragon beneath him cast into the abyss; for, adds Eusebius (ibid. iii. 3), "the oracles of God in the books of the Prophets described the Enemy as a Dragon and a Serpent."

17. καὶ ὠργίσθη] And the Dragon was wroth with the Woman, and went away to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and hold fast the testimony of Jesus Christ.

The Dragon went away to make war with the remnant of her seed.

That new form of warfare is now to be displayed in the next Chapter, in the Vision of the Two Beasts.

These words supply important chronological data, as showing that the two Beasts, now to be described, represent a power subsequent in its appearance to that of the Persecutions in the earlier ages of the Church, and posterior also to the pouring forth of the Flood in the preceding verses, v. 15.

The words ἐχόντων τὴν μαρτυρίαν signify more than having the witness; they mean, holding it fast. Cp. vi. 9; xix. 10. 1 John v. 10.

There is a remarkable parallel between the working of the Evil One here and in the Seals, vi. 3—8. There Satan first appeared on the horse of fire, πυρρὸς (v. 4), that is, of Persecution. So here he is first displayed as πυρρὸς, red like fire. There, having failed of his efforts in that respect, he resorted to another device, and mounted the black horse (v. 5), and next the pale horse; and then we heard a mention of the Beasts (see above on vi. 8). And in like manner we are now brought to the Beasts in the Vision next ensuing (xiii. 1—18), in which they will be described with greater fulness and clearness.

18. καὶ ἐστάθην] And I stood, I was placed, upon the sand of the sea. A, C have ἐστάθη, and so Vulg., Syr., Æthiopic, and Armenian Versions. But B has ἐστάθην, and so the majority of MSS., and Griesbach, Matth., Tischendorf, Ewald, De Wette.

In v. 12, there was a prophetic denunciation of Woe to the Earth and to the Sea; and now we are about to see two Beasts arising, one from the Sea (xiii. 1), and the other from the Earth (xiii. 11).

This station on the Sand, and the Vision of the Beast, rising from the Sea, the element of commotion, are contrasted with the Vision of the Lamb standing on the Mount Sion with His faithful servants, xiv. 1—5.

Ch. XIII. 1—10. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw a Beast rising up out of the sea, having ten horns and seven heads, and on his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads names of blasphemy.

And the Beast [wild Beast] which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet as of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the Dragon gave him his power, and his throne, and great authority.

And I saw one of his heads as having been slain to death; and the wound of his death was healed; and all the Earth wondered after the Beast.

And they paid worship to the Dragon who gave the authority unto the Beast: and they paid worship to the Beast, saying, Who is like unto the Beast? and who is able to make war with him?

And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to act forty and two months.

And he opened his mouth in blasphemy towards God, to blaspheme His name, and His Tabernacle, and them that tabernacle in heaven.

And it was given unto him to make war with the Saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. And all that dwell upon the earth will worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb that hath been slain from the foundation of the world.

He that hath an ear, let him hear. He that gathereth a captivity goeth into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints.

The word θηρίον is here rendered Beast; and no other English word can be adopted for it. But the English word Beast, derived from Bestia, does not exactly represent the original. The Latin equivalent to θηρίον is not bestia, but fera (whence ferox. fierce, ferocious), which is derived from φήρ, the Æolic form of θήρ, θηρίον, and signifies a savage, predatory animal.

It has been imagined by some modern Interpreters, dwelling on the signification of the word Beast, and its derivatives in other languages, that the primary idea presented here in the Apocalypse by the word θηρίον, is one of revolting bestiality.

But this view is inconsistent with the use of the word θηρίον in Holy Scripture, and in the best Authors. The word θηρίον, used by the Septuagint and Theodotion, in the Visions of Daniel (iv. 9. 11, and passim; and vii. 3. 5—7, and passim), which are introductory to those of the Apocalypse, represents the Hebrew and Chaldee חַיָּה, חֵיוָה, חֵיוָא, the fundamental idea of which is animal life. And the Syriac Version renders the word θηρίον in the Apocalypse, by "animal of teeth," showing that the idea of wild ferocity was uppermost in the Translator's mind.

The Leopard and the Lion, which contribute their features to constitute this Apocalyptic θηρίον (see v. 2), are not hideous and loathsome, but noble and beautiful in appearance.

The wild Beasts which were kept by the Romans for Gladiatorial shows, and to which the Christian Martyrs were exposed, were usually called θηρία, and they were commonly Lions.

There is a contrast in the Apocalypse between the θηρία or Beasts on the one side, and the Ἀρνίον or Lamb on the other; between the lawlessness, pride, and ferocity of the one, compared with the innocence, meekness, and gentleness of the other.

The Horns of the Beast are mentioned in this Vision before the Heads, because when the Beast was arising from the Sea, the Horns would first appear.

In a subsequent Vision, when the Beast has arisen, and has advanced to a later stage of its history, the Seven Heads are mentioned before the Ten Horns. See xvii. 3. 7.

The Diadems are not on the Heads of the Beasts, as was the case with those of the Dragon, in xii. 3; but they are on the Horns. This is important to be observed. The Beast does not exercise his dominion with the same direct agency and corporate unity as the Dragon did; but he exercises it mediately, by other Potentates, which did not exist in St. John's age; see xvii. 12, and on xii. 3.

The Beast is seen rising from the Sea, that is, from a confused and tumultuous element. See above, vii. 1, 2, and viii. 8 The Power of the Beast is thus represented as due to a confused and restless condition of civil affairs, and as emerging therefrom.

By the mention of the sea here, the reader's attention is also called to the Vision of Daniel, who sees four Beasts (θηρία) arising from the Sea. (Dan. vii. 3.)

Those Four Beasts represented the Four great successive Empires of the world. I. Assyrian, II. Medo-Persian, III. Macedonian or Greek, IV. Roman.

This is the uniform exposition of the best Interpreters, dating almost from St. John's age. See S. Irenæus, v. 26. S. Hippolytus, de Antichristo, c. 49. Tertullian, de Resur. Carnis; and S. Cyril, Catech. xv. S. Jerome on Dan. vii., and Epist. ad Algas. Qu. 2; and Theodoret, ad Dan. vii.; and cp. Winer, R. W. B. ii. p. 611, art. "Thiere."

The language of St. John here is very similar to that of Daniel there—as represented in the Greek Versions of the LXX and Theodotion; and it is evident, from a comparison of the two prophecies, that this Vision of St. John is designed to be a sequel of that of Daniel. Compare the words of the Text here with θαλάσσης θηρίον ἀναβαῖνον, ἔχον κέρατα δέκα καὶ κεφαλὰς ἑπτὰ, καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν κεράτων αὐτοῦ δέκα διαδήματα, καὶ ἐπὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς αὐτοῦ ὀνόματα βλασφημίας.

b ch. 12. 9. 2 [b] Καὶ τὸ θηρίον ὃ εἶδον ἦν ὅμοιον παρδάλει, καὶ οἱ πόδες αὐτοῦ ὡς ἄρκου, καὶ τὸ στόμα αὐτοῦ ὡς στόμα λέοντος· καὶ ἔδωκεν αὐτῷ ὁ δράκων τὴν δύναμιν αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὸν θρόνον αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐξουσίαν μεγάλην.

those of Daniel,—τέσσαρα θηρία μεγάλα ἀνέβαινον ἐκ τῆς θαλάσσης· τὸ πρῶτον ὡσεὶ λέαινα, καὶ θηρίον δεύτερον ὅμοιον ἄρκῳ (the form of this word ἄρκῳ, not ἄρκτῳ, in the Greek Versions of Daniel, and in the Apocalypse here, in the best MSS., affords a noticeable coincidence) καὶ θηρίον ἄλλο ὡσεὶ πάρδαλιν.

In this Vision of Daniel—who looks forward from the Assyrian Dynasty, under which he was living, to the three succeeding ones, the Medo-Persian, Greek, and Roman—we see first the Assyrian Lion, next the Medo-Persian Bear, and then the Greek Leopard. In this Vision of the Apocalypse of St. John—who looks backward from the Roman Dynasty, under which he was living, to the three preceding dynasties—we see the three Animals of Daniel, mentioned in an inverted order, and combined in the first Beast, here displayed. Hence it is evident that this Apocalyptic Beast comes next after the Greek Leopard, and that he has absorbed, as it were, the dominion of the three preceding Beasts into himself.

The Fourth, or Roman Beast of Daniel, is also described as having Ten Horns (δέκα κέρατα, Dan. vii. 7), which are declared to be the Ten Kings which would rise up from out of the Fourth Empire, i. e. the Roman. See Dan. vii. 23, 24. Cp. Iren. v. 25, 26. 30; and Theodoret in Dan. vii. vol. ii. pp. 1195, 1196, who says, "the Fourth Beast is the Roman Empire; and the Ten Horns indicate, that, at about the time of the end of that Empire, Ten Kings will arise from it." And so S. Jerome in Dan. vii., who says, "the fourth Empire, which now exists, is that of Rome."

The Apocalyptic Beast has likewise ten Horns (δέκα κέρατα), and his identity with the fourth Beast of Daniel is thus marked.

It is observable also, that Daniel has not likened the fourth Empire, or Roman, to any particular animal, although he had compared the first three Empires of the world to three several animals, viz. Lion, Bear, and Leopard.

The Holy Spirit who inspired Daniel seems thus to have intentionally left room, and to have prepared the way, for marking the identity of the Apocalyptic Beast with the Fourth Beast of Daniel. He now represents the Apocalyptic Beast as succeeding the Leopard, as the Leopard had succeeded the Bear, and as the Bear had succeeded the Lion; and he represents the Apocalyptic Beast as composed of the three,—the Leopard, the Bear, and the Lion.

St. John takes up and continues the prophecy of Daniel, and he also adds to it. He represents the fourth Beast at a later stage of its history.

He represents it not only as having Ten Horns, but also as having Seven Heads; and he describes one of these seven heads as having been slain unto death (v. 3), and he adds that the wound of the Beast's death (ἡ πληγὴ τοῦ θανάτου αὐτοῦ) had been healed.

What do these seven Heads represent?

They do not represent the kingdoms which were to arise out of the Fourth, or Roman, Empire; that feature is represented by the Ten Horns, bearing Crowns (διαδήματα, emblems of royalty). See below, xvii. 12, 13. 16, 17.

The meaning of the Heads is afterwards declared by an Angel to St. John, when he sees the same Beast, in a yet more advanced stage of its history. I saw, he says, a Beast "full of the names of blasphemy" (xvii. 3); thus he identifies that Beast with what he now sees, which is described as having on his heads "names of blasphemy," v. 1; and that identity is also declared by the characteristic of "the Seven Heads and Ten Horns" (xvii. 3). And the Angel says, "I will tell thee the Mystery of the Beast that hath the seven heads and the ten horns. The seven Heads are (i. e. they represent) seven Mountains on which the Woman sitteth. And they are (i. e. they also represent) seven Kings; the five fell, the one exists, the other came not yet; and the Beast that was, and is not, he is the eighth [king], and is also from the seven [heads], and he is going to perdition" (xvii. 7. 9, 10).

Therefore the Heads have a double signification; they declare the local position of the seat of the Beast; they show that his residence is in the City of the Seven Hills—Rome. See below preliminary note to chap. xvii., and on xvii. 7—10.

His residence, at that later stage of his history, is still the same as when he is first displayed in this chapter, where he appears in his imperial heathen form, as the fourth great Monarchy of the world—the Monarchy of Rome.

The Heads also describe successive Powers, ending in the Beast. See xvii. 7—10.

The Ten Horns mean Ten Kings (xvii. 12), that is, ten kingdoms, as the parallel vision of Daniel explains the word. And here the Seven Heads are also said to mean Seven Kings (xvii. 10), that is, they signify seven successive Powers, of which five were past when St. John saw the vision (xvii. 10), and one was existing, and the seventh was to exist for a short time only; then the Beast would assume his final development, in which he would go "unto perdition" (xvii. 11).

What these successive seven Powers are, will be considered hereafter, on xvii. 9—11.

In the mean time, it is requisite to bear in mind, that the character of the Beast varies greatly from time to time in the successive periods of his history, as displayed in the Apocalypse. This will be evident from a consideration of the parts of this prophecy contained in chap. xiii. to chap. xx. inclusive. The neglect of this observation has produced confusion in the interpretation of this portion of the Apocalypse.

The first stage of the Beast's existence is described in v. 2 of the present chapter. There the Dragon, or Devil, gives him his power, and his throne, and great authority. Observe the word ἐξουσία, authority, something more than power, δύναμις. See on Rom. xiii. 1.

This first state of the Beast, as here represented, is that of the Roman Empire while Heathen.

This Interpretation is adopted by almost all Expositors, ancient and modern. See the commentaries of Victorinus, Bede, Alcasar, A Lapide, Hammond, Bossuet, Wetstein, Grotius, Eichhorn, Herder, Ewald, De Wette, Lücke, Bleek. That power rose out of discordant tumults and revolutionary elements, which might well be likened to a sea (v. 1).

In v. 3 one of the heads of the Beast is seen as having been slain to death; and the wound of his death was healed.

The head that was first wounded after the age of St. John was the Imperial head of Rome.

It was wounded in A.D. 476, when Romulus Augustulus, the last Roman Emperor, abdicated the imperial dignity, and the Roman Empire ceased to be.

It is not said in this prophecy that the Head was restored, but that the wound of the death of the Beast was healed, and he lived (vv. 12. 15).

It is added (v. 3), that all the Earth (i. e. the earthly-minded, see v. 8, and above on i. 7; iii. 10) wondered, gazed with admiration after the Beast; i. e. they followed in his train. See this use of ὀπίσω, John xii. 19.

The Beast now appears in another stage of his history, but he keeps his name; he is still a θηρίον; he has a wild and ferocious nature; and it is in this character that the Vision deals with him.

This is necessary to be observed.

The Imperial power of Rome was succeeded by the Papal, and the Papal Power exercised as wide a sway, and a far more powerful one, than ever the Imperial had done.

In the words of an Historian of the Middle Ages, "The noonday of Papal Dominion extends from the Pontificate of Innocent III., inclusively, to that of Boniface VIII.; or, in other words, through the thirteenth century. Rome inspired during this age all the terror of her ancient name. She was once more mistress of the world: and Kings were her vassals." (Hallam, Middle Ages, ii. p. 284.) Thus "the deadly wound was healed."

In the words of Bp. Andrewes (c. Bellarmine, p. 296), "The seven-headed Beast is the Roman power in its different successive forms, first as it was under the Pagans, and next as it is under the Popes. That power received a deadly wound in the Empire, and revived under the Papacy" (p. 289). See further below on chap. xvii. 8.

Doubtless the Papal Power has, and ever has had, some other elements in it besides those of a Wild Beast; but it is in its character as a Wild Beast that it is here contemplated by St. John.

The Papal Power, as far as it is Christian, and teaches Christian Truths, is not the object of the Apocalyptic prophecy. But the Prophecy deals with the Papal Power, as far as it is a lawless, fierce, and persecuting Power; in a word, as far as it is a θηρίον, a Beast, and is opposed to the Ἀρνίον, or Lamb, which is Christ.

It cannot be said with some modern interpreters, that, inasmuch as the Papal Power had, and still has, much that is Christian in it, it could not be represented by a Beast (θηρίον).

It is confessed by all Expositors, that the old Heathen Empires are called Beasts by Daniel (vii. 3. 5–7). But they had many good features in them. The heathen Empire of Rome is called a Beast in the Old and New Testaments; and yet, inasmuch as it had authority from God, and ministered justice in its Tribunals, it is also described in Scripture as a "minister of God to man for good," and was to be revered as such. (Rom. xiii. 1–4. 1 Pet. ii. 13.)

So the old Babylonish Empire is called a Beast in Holy Scripture (Dan. vii. 4), because it was guilty of cruelty; and yet its King, Nebuchadnezzar, is called "God's servant," and the Jews are commanded to obey him (Jer. xxvii. 8; xxxix. 18); and holy men, such as Daniel, who calls it a Beast, and Shadrach, Meshech, and Abednego, who knew that it was revealed in that character, were Ministers of the Empire of Babylon.

The Persian Empire is also called a Beast in Holy Scripture (Dan. vii. 5), and yet Cyrus its king is called "God's Shepherd," and "God's Anointed" (Isa. xliv. 28; xlv. 1), and Daniel, who calls it a Beast, served under the Princes of that Dynasty.

These considerations afford a reply to the allegations of some recent writers, who say, that the Papal Power could not be the object of this prophecy, inasmuch as it had good and holy men subservient to it, and inasmuch as the Word of God was preserved under its sway, by faithful Pastors, and the Baptism of Christ was administered, and Bishops and Pastors of Christian Churches have received their Holy Orders, transmitted from Christ through the intermediate agency of the Roman Church.

Such allegations as these are irrelevant and illogical. They proceed from an exclusive school of Theology, which does not rightly distinguish between personal acts, and official qualifications: and which interprets words and sentences, which are spoken with special application, as if they were general and universal. The vicious character of such reasoning has been exposed by S. Augustine, in his controversy with the Donatists of older times, and by Richard Hooker, in later days, especially in the Third Book of his Ecclesiastical Polity (see iii. 1. 8–14).

Let such persons be requested to consider that Christ characterized Judas as "the son of perdition" (John xvii. 12), and that He said to St. Peter, when he would dissuade Him from suffering, "Get thee behind me, Satan" (Matt. xvi. 23. Mark viii. 33). These titles, given by Christ, were doubtless deserved by those to whom they were given, in respect of the particular acts which elicited those names. But the Baptism of Christ, which was administered by the Apostles, Judas and Peter, was not therefore invalid.

When Judas betrayed Christ for money, he was the son of perdition, but when he administered the Baptism of Christ he was an instrument of salvation; when Peter dissuaded Christ from suffering on the Cross, he was like Satan, but when he preached Christ and suffered on the cross for Christ, he was like an angel of God.

These principles ought to be applied to the question before us. Dean Jackson, on the Creed, book xii. ch. xviii., says, "Now, though the Bishop of Rome be more than a heretic, even the Man of Sin, nevertheless, seeing he sitteth in the Temple of God (2 Thess. ii. 4), even the acts of his Ministration or Priesthood are good; nor are the Bishops consecrated by him so polluted by Communion with him in their consecration, but that their Episcopal acts be lawful and good, so long as they observe the form of Ordination or Administration of Sacraments prescribed by Christ and His Apostles. The Word preached by them likewise hath the force and efficacy of begetting faith in their hearers' hearts." And he compares their case to that of the Scribes and Pharisees in Matt. xxiii. 3, and of Caiaphas in John xi. 50. Cp. Hooker, V. lxiii. 2. Serm. ii. § 27. Bp. Sanderson, Preface to his Sermons, vol. ii. pp. xxxvi—xliii, and vol. v. p. 246. Abp. Bramhall, i. p. 119; ii. p. 38. Bp. Bull, ii. p. 203, or the notes above, on Matt. xiii. 30, where it is shown that a Church, though almost overgrown with tares, is still God's Field by reason of His good seed in it; and note on Acts vii. 38, where God's people, though polluted with idolatry, are still called a Church, by reason of His Presence, and of His Law, and Worship; and the notes on 1 Cor. i. 2, and above, on ii. 1.

The real question, therefore, to be considered in interpreting this Prophecy, is not, whether the Papacy has the Word and Sacraments of God, or whether many holy men lived under it; but, the question is, whether the Papal Roman Power, which succeeded the Pagan Roman Empire, has committed acts of violence, and displayed a wild and ferocious spirit; and whether it exhibited this spirit towards many Christians, and for a considerable length of time.

If this has been the case, then the Papal Roman Power had the marks and attributes of a Wild Beast, and it deserved the name of a Wild Beast as much as the Pagan Empire itself did, to which it succeeded. It was even more like a wild Beast than the Heathen Empire was, inasmuch as it sinned against clearer knowledge, and acted in a temper directly opposed to the Example of the Lamb, and to His Gospel, which it had in its hands, and which it professed to preach; and inasmuch also as its cruelty was directed against the followers of the Lamb, and inasmuch as in persecuting them it persecuted Christ (Acts ix. 4, 5), and therefore it was like a Wild Beast raging furiously against the Lamb Himself.

The historical evidence of its conduct in this respect is too strong to be gainsayed.

On the 24th of August, 1572, St. Bartholomew's Day, five thousand Christians were assassinated at Paris, by command of a King, who acted under the direction of the Papacy; and within a few days after, 25,000 more were slain, in six towns of France. See Ranke's History of the Popes, p. 147, who says that the numbers killed in that massacre amounted to 50,000. Some days after this massacre Pope Gregory XIII. received the tidings of it, and went in procession to the Church of St. Louis at Rome, to give God thanks for it; and he commanded a Medal to be struck in the Papal Mint, to commemorate the slaughter, and on that medal he inscribed the words, "Ugonottorum Strages" ("Massacre of the Hugonots"), and he there represented that savage work as done by an Angel of heaven. See Numismata Pontificum, p. 87, Lutet. 1679, and Clarendon's Religion and Polity, p. 427. These were traits of a Wild Beast; cp. below, xvii. 6.

Again; in the exterminating Wars of Religion, as they were called, waged by the Papacy against the Albigenses and Waldenses, about a million of souls were slain, as Perionius testifies, and his testimony is strengthened by the relation of Thuanus. And from the first institution of the Jesuits, under the special favour of the Papacy, to the year 1480, 900,000 persons were slain for their religion in Hungary, Bohemia, and other countries. The Duke of Alva declared that he destroyed 36,000 Protestants in the Netherlands in a few years. In the space of thirty years, 150,000 Christians perished for their religion by the hands of the Inquisition. The historical Authorities for these statements may be seen in Joseph Mede's Works, p. 503, ed. 1677.

Such acts as these, continued during a period far longer in duration than that of the Persecutions of the Christians by Heathen Rome, sufficiently prove the fitness of the word θηρίον, or Wild Beast, to designate a Power, which displayed itself in such features to the world.

4. προσεκύνησαν τῷ δράκοντι] They paid worship to the Dragon who gave the authority to the Beast.

How, it may be asked, could any Christians be said to worship or pay homage to the Dragon, i. e. the Devil or Satan?

Observe the word προσκυνεῖν. This verb, rendered "to worship" in our Version, does not necessarily, nor usually, imply that highest religious worship, which is due to Almighty God, but homage and obeisance, expressed by kissing the hand to the object of reverence: whence the Latin ad-oro. See above, note on Heb. xi. 13.

In Gen. xxiii. 7, Abraham is said προσκυνεῖν τῷ λαῷ τῆς γῆς, which merely means that he did homage to the people by respectful inclination of the body. Cp. there, v. 12, and in Gen.

xxvii. 29. Isaac says to Jacob that his brethren προσκυνήσουσιν αὐτῷ, and in Dan. ii. 46, Nebuchadnezzar the King is said προσκυνεῖν to Daniel. In the New Testament the word often occurs in a similar sense. See Matt. ii. 2. 8; viii. 2; xviii. 26. Acts x. 25. Rev. xxii. 8.

Observe also the case after προσκυνεῖν, the dative, as A, B, C have it, not the accusative. The distinction may be perceived by comparing such texts as Matt. iv. 10, τὸν Θεόν σου προσκυνήσεις. Cp. Luke iv. 8. John iv. 23, with Matt. ii. 2. 11; iv. 9; viii. 2; ix. 18; xiv. 33; xxviii. 9. Cp. Wetstein, i. p. 242.

The accusative signifies an act of worship paid directly to an object; thus προσκυνεῖν Θεὸν is to honour God as God.

This distinction is remarked by the Grammarians, e. g. Herodian, Philetaer. p. 445.

But the dative case does not necessarily imply this. The use of the dative may be explained by the words of St. Paul in 1 Cor. x. 20, quoting Deut. xxxii. 17, "What the Heathen sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God." The Heathens did not pay worship to devils, as devils. But God regards all divine worship paid to any one but Himself as paid to Satan, who is the author of idol-worship. And St. Paul speaks from the divine point of view there, as St. John does here. They who abetted the Beast in acts of fraud, lying, perfidy, wrath, malice, and murder, which are from the Devil (John viii. 44. 1 John iii. 12), and in deeds of savage cruelty against God's servants, and in acts of religious worship to images, or to any creature, were doing the Devil's work, and ministering to his glory.

This is a view which men may not commonly take of cruelty, treachery, lying, and idolatry: but it is the view which God takes of those sins; and He presents it for our warning in Holy Scripture, especially in the Apocalypse: as to idolatry, see Levit. xvii. 7. Deut. xxxii. 17. Ps. cvi. 37. 1 Cor. x. 20, 21. 2 Cor. vi. 15, 16, and compare the note above on ix. 20, 21.

In v. 5, There was given him (i. e. to the Beast in his present form, as now displayed) a mouth speaking great things, στόμα λαλοῦν μεγάλα. So Daniel speaks of the Little Horn which grew out of the Fourth Beast, τὸ κέρας ἐκεῖνο εἶχε στόμα λαλοῦν μεγάλα.

St. John adds that he had authority to act forty-two months, i. e. 3½ prophetic years.

So Daniel speaks of the Horn, vii. 25, δοθήσεται ἐν χειρὶ αὐτοῦ ἕως καιροῦ καὶ καιρῶν καὶ ἕως ἡμίσους καιροῦ, i. e. 3½ years, or forty-two months, the time here assigned by St. John to the Beast. On this stage of the Beast's existence cp. above, xi. 3; xii. 6. 14, and below on xvii. 10. (Dan. vii. 25.)

In the prophecy of Daniel, the Little Horn is represented as absorbing into itself all the power of the Beast; in fact the Beast passes as it were into the Horn, and is identified with it. The Horn is the Beast in a later stage of its existence. Here is a correspondence with St. John's Vision. There the Beast has seven Heads, and is itself from the Seven; and is an Eighth King. See on xvii. 10, 11.

The language of Daniel is similar to that of St. John; and both are evidently speaking of the same Power. And since the Power, of which Daniel is speaking, is confessedly one which grew up out of the Roman Empire, we here see a confirmation of the proofs already adduced, that the power described by St. John is one which rose up out of that Empire.

Indeed, the identity of the Beast is preserved in St. John; only he appears in a later stage, and in a modified form.

These descriptions also, of that Power in the prophecies of Daniel and in this of St. John, are very similar to the prophetical portrait drawn by St. Paul (in the Second Chapter of the Second Epistle to the Thessalonians) of the Power which was to succeed on the dissolution of the Roman Empire; and they mutually illustrate each other. Accordingly, they were generally believed by ancient Expositors to delineate the same object. See S. Iren. v. 26, where he connects the prophecy of Daniel (vii.) with this of the Apocalypse, and with that of St. Paul, 2 Thess. ii. 3, and so S. Hippolytus, De Christo, §§ 47, 48, p. 23, and S. Jerome on Dan. vii. S. Cyril, Cateches. xv. 11—14. Theodoret on Dan. vii.

The following synoptical view of these prophecies of Daniel, St. Paul, and St. John, may assist the reader in comparing them.

DANIEL. (Chap. vii.)	ST. PAUL. (2 Thess. ii.)	ST. JOHN. (Revelation.)
The Little Horn	The Man of Sin	The Beast
rises up in the midst of the ten horns— which are ten kings (vii. 7. 24), arising out of the head of the fourth Beast (vii. 24; vii. 8. 20) — who rises from a sea (vii. 3), and is the fourth kingdom (vii. 17; cp. Dan. ii. 40—44). The Little Horn differs from, and is more stout, than the other horns (vii. 20. 24); is a King (vii. 24), has the eyes of a Man (vii. 8), has a mouth speaking great things (vii. 8. 11. 20), the power of the Beast is centred in him (vii. 25), and so the Little Horn is virtually the Beast; makes war with the saints and prevails against them (vii. 21).	rises as soon as he that letteth is taken away (ii. 6, 7).	rises from the sea (xiii. 1), is compounded of the emblems of the first three kingdoms of Daniel (see on v. 2), is wounded mortally, but receives a new life (xiii. 3. 12. 14). has ten horns (xiii. 1; xvii. 3. 12), which have crowns and are ten kings (xiii. 1; xvii. 12), who receive power with the beast, and give their strength to him (xvii. 12, 13. 17).
	a Man (ii. 3).	has the number of a Man (xiii. 18).
	a Mystery (ii. 7).	becomes the seat of the Woman, whose name is Mystery (xvii. 5. 7); he is worshipped (xiii. 4. 8), has a mouth speaking great things (xiii. 5).
	sitteth in the Temple of God, and is worshipped (ii. 4).
	worketh signs, and lying wonders (ii. 9).	worketh great wonders by agency of the second beast (xiii. 12, 13).
speaks great words against the Most High, and wears out the saints of the Most High (vii. 25), persecutes during a time, times, and half a time (i. e. three and a half years, vii. 25).	exalteth himself against all that is called God (ii. 4).	opens his mouth in blasphemy against God (xiii. 5, 6), wars against the saints (xiii. 7), acts forty-two months, or three and a half years (xiii. 5), goeth unto perdition (xvii. 8. 11).
	is the son of perdition (ii. 3).
Finally the Beast (whose power subsists in the Little Horn) is slain, and his body given to the fire (vii. 11).	will be consumed with the spirit of Christ's mouth (ii. 8).	the Harlot sitting upon him is burned with fire (xviii. 8), and finally the Beast himself is cast into the lake of fire (xix. 20; xx. 10).

The evidence already adduced in the notes on St. Paul's prophecy, 2 Thess. ii. 3—11, shows that the Power, of which St. Paul speaks, was to arise after, and in the room of, the Heathen Roman Empire, and corroborates the arguments brought forward to prove that the Power here displayed in the Apocalypse was that Power which succeeded in the place of the Roman Imperial Power.

It is, therefore, the Roman Papal Power.

This proof is further strengthened by the fact that the Power of which St. Paul speaks, is described by him as sitting in the Temple of God (εἰς τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ), that is, in the Christian Church. See on 2 Thess. ii. 4.

It hardly needs be shown, that the Papacy has a mouth which speaketh great things, putting forth high and haughty claims in bold language.

At the Coronation of every Pope, the Tiara, or Triple Crown, is placed on his head in the lofty balcony in the façade of St. Peter's Church at Rome, in the sight of thousands; and he is crowned, with these words, "Receive the Tiara adorned with three Crowns, and know thyself to be the Father of Princes and of Kings, the Ruler of the World (Rector Orbis)."

This language has been used for many centuries, and was applied to the present Pope on the day of his Coronation, Sunday, June 21, 1846.

In v. 6 the Beast is described as guilty of blasphemy.

It has been alleged by some, that a Power which confesses the true Faith of Christ in the three Creeds, as the Papacy does, cannot be charged with Blasphemy: and that the Blasphemy ascribed to the Beast indicates that the Beast is not a Christian Power.

But, observe the words of St. John. He says that "the Beast utters great and blasphemous words, and opens his mouth unto blasphemies toward (πρὸς) God, to blaspheme His Name, and those who dwell in His tabernacle in heaven. This is not the same thing as is predicated below of some who are said to blaspheme God (βλασφημεῖν τὸν Θεὸν, xvi. 11. 21), with direct and outrageous impiety.

Is then the Papacy chargeable with acts or words which are blasphemous towards God?

Certainly it is.

The word "blasphemy" in Holy Scripture not only means an open utterance of impious language against God, but it signifies an assumption of those attributes which belong to God alone.

When the Jews said to our Lord, "Thou blasphemest," they did not mean thereby, that He was uttering any thing openly against God. No; they used this term when He forgave sins, for, "Who can forgive sins, but God only?" (Mark ii. 7. Matt. ix. 2.) He claimed Divine Power. And, if He had claimed it wrongly, this claim was Blasphemy. Hence also, they said on another occasion, For a good work we stone thee not, but for blasphemy, because that thou being man makest thyself God (John x. 33).

Again, when Christ said to the High Priest, "Hereafter ye shall see the Son of Man sitting on the Right Hand of Power, and coming on the clouds of heaven," the High Priest rent his clothes and said, He hath spoken blasphemy (Matt. xxvi. 64, 65). He hath claimed for Himself what belongs only to God. And if this claim was not a just one, it was blasphemy. Hence it is clear, that they are guilty of blasphemy, who assume to themselves powers and honours which belong to God.

Apply this test to the Papacy. It claims for itself Infallibility, Indefectibility, Eternity. These are usurpations of the incommunicable Name. "When that which is temporal claims Eternity, this is a name of Blasphemy," says S. Jerome, ad Algasiam, Qu. xi.

The ancient Expositors thus understood this passage. In the Commentary of Bede (which is compiled from older authorities) it is said that the Power foreshown in the Beast will impiously usurp the dignity of God's Name, and will presume to call the Church his own, "dignitatem sibi Nominis Dei impius usurpans Ecclesiam quoque suam nominare præsumet."

This has been fulfilled in the Papacy in a remarkable manner. It calls the Church its own.

The Papacy is chargeable with "blasphemy towards God and His Name," in the canonization and adoration of Saints, and in the worship of Images, and especially in its devotion to the Virgin Mary, whom it calls the "Queen of heaven," and exalts to the Throne of God; thus setting up other objects of worship besides Him Who alone is to be adored (Matt. iv. 10. Luke iv. 8).

The Papacy is chargeable with blasphemy against His Tabernacle; that is, the Christian Church, and those who tabernacle in heaven. It makes itself guilty of this blasphemy, by usurping to itself all the titles of the Holy Catholic Apostolic Church of Christ; which is God's Tabernacle, and by anathematizing as apostates and reprobates, those who are loyal subjects of the kingdom of heaven, and sound members of the mystical Body of Christ Himself, and who dwell in His heavenly Tabernacle, and hear His Word, and receive His blessed Sacraments, and "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the Saints" (Jude 3), and who know, that they themselves would be liable to the anathema uttered by the Holy Spirit in Holy Scripture, (see on Gal. i. 8, 9,) if they were to receive any novel doctrines, such for instance as that of the Immaculate Conception, and others which are now propounded as necessary to salvation by the Roman Papacy. See above, on Jude 3.

This blasphemy against Christ's faithful servants is uttered by the Papacy on many occasions, especially in the Bull commonly called "In Cœna Domini," and required to be read annually on Thursday before Easter; which may be seen in the Bullarium Romanum, tom. iv. p. 118, ed. Lutet. 1742. Streitwolf, Libri Symbolici Eccl. Cath. Rom. ii. p. 353. See below, p. 227.

The claims of the Papacy are thus stated by one of the Popes themselves, Gregory VII., and are set down in the Church History of Cardinal Baronius (Gregory VII. Ap. Card. Baronium, Annal. Eccles. A.D. 1076), and are entitled "Dictatus Papæ," Dictates of the Pope. Surely we may say that he who utters them has "a mouth that speaketh great things" (v. 5), and fulfils the Apocalyptic prophecy;

"That the Roman Pontiff alone is rightly called Universal.

"That all Princes should kiss his feet.

"That his Name is the only Name in the world ('unicum nomen in mundo').

"That he may dethrone Emperors.

"That no Chapter or Book of Holy Scripture is canonical without his authority.

"That all greater causes of every Church ought to be referred to him.

"That the Church of Rome never has erred, and never will err.

"That a Pope of Rome, if he is canonically ordained, is indubitably rendered holy by the merits of St. Peter.

"That no one is a Catholic, who does not agree with the Church of Rome.

"That the Pope is able to release subjects from their allegiance to evil men."

Such claims as these are usurpations of what appertains only to God, and are rightly called blasphemous.

It is illogical and futile to plead, as some persons do, that the Papacy holds the Creeds in her hands, and therefore cannot be said to blaspheme. She has added these claims to the Creeds, and she imposes these claims on all men, as of equal authority with the Creeds. This is an act of blasphemy; and this sin is not lessened, but is rather aggravated, by her possession and profession of the Faith, as declared in the Creeds. The sin is committed against light and knowledge, and is a heavier sin on that account.

From a consideration of such claims as these, and from the clear testimony of History to the manner in which those claims have been enforced, it has been concluded by many of the most judicious, learned, pious, and charitable divines of the Church of England, that this Prophecy of the Apocalypse has been fulfilled by the Papacy. v. 8. All who dwell upon the earth, that is, the great body of worldly-minded persons (see iii. 10), will worship him. The words πάντες, all, and πάντοτε, always, are often used in Holy Scripture to express what is commonly prevalent and habitual. See Exod. ix. 9. Cp. v. 19. Exod. ix. 25. Cp. x. 5. Exod. xxxii. 3. Cp. 1 Cor. x. 7. Matt. iii. 5, πᾶσα Ἰουδαία, and πᾶσα περίχωρος, i. e. the greater part; cp. Care is taken in this prophecy to guard the reader against the notion, that these words are to be understood to signify an universal apostasy, and that the Visible Church failed under the Papacy. In the next chapter we have a view of those faithful people who were not seduced by its errors, xiv. 1—7. The Roll which introduces these Visions is called a Little Roll, although it concerns many people. See above, x. 2. 9. And even just before the fall of Babylon it is intimated that there are in it some people of God, for even then it is said, "Come out of her, My People" (xviii. 4).

v. 8. The Lamb is said to have been slain from the foundation of the world: because in the Divine Mind He was foreseen as our Propitiation, and we were foreknown in Him (Eph. i. 4—11), and His Death was represented in Types, and foretold in Prophecies, even from the beginning of the world; namely, by the creation of Eve, the mother of all living, and the type of the Church, from the side of Adam, the type of Christ (see above on John xix. 34), and in the promise of the Woman's Seed, whose heel would be bruised by the Serpent, and who would bruise the

v. 10. If any one gathereth a captivity, he goeth into captivity.

This seems the true reading; there are some variations in the MSS.

The sense is, They whom the Beast gathers together into his society are here compared to a troop of captives, led together by him into slavery. See this use of αἰχμαλωσία in Numb. xxi. 1. 2 Chron. xxviii. 5. Isa. xx. 4. Ezek. xi. 25. Hab. i. 9.

The abstract term captivity for captives is very expressive, particularly as joined with συνάγει. He professes to collect together a Church; but they are a band of captives, carried into bondage. His retribution will be, that he himself will be carried captive. He has slain many Martyrs by the sword. His recompense will be, that he himself will be slain with the sword. See 2 Thess. ii. 8. Rev. xix. 15.

Here is the patience and the faith of the Saints, a remarkable instance, showing that the Empire of the Beast would be of wide extent, and of long duration. Cp. v. 7.

Some objections have been alleged against the interpretation now propounded; and may be summarily noticed here;

Objection 1—

It has been said by some, that St. John would not have prophesied concerning trials so far off from those of his own age, as the afflictions of the Church under the Papacy.

Answer—

This objection is derogatory to the character of divine Prophecy, and is refuted by the language of the Apocalypse, and of the Book of Daniel, written six centuries before it, which reveal the Day of Judgment and the trials immediately preceding it, Rev. xi. 18; xx. 12, 13. Dan. vii. 21—27.

Objection 2—

It has been said by some, that the power here described is not a Christian power, but is an openly infidel one, rebelling in undisguised impiety against God.

This allegation has been already considered above on v. 5. See also below on v. 11.

Objection 3—

It has been said by some, that a body of persons such as are here described "can have no true sacraments," and that those reformed Churches, which have received their own Holy Orders from Christ through the medium of Rome, and which acknowledge the Baptism and Holy Orders of Rome, would be condemned by this Prophecy, if the Papacy were such a body as is here described.

This objection also has been considered above, xiii. 1—3, p. 223, and will be further noticed below in the interpretation of chap. xvii.

Objection 4—

It has been said by some, that many pious and holy men and women have lived under the Papacy, and have regarded the Church of Rome with reverence and affection, as the centre of religious unity; and that it cannot be imagined, that Almighty God would have allowed them to be so much deceived by it, as they must assuredly have been, if the Papacy is pourtrayed in this Prophecy.

This objection also has been examined, in part, above on xiii. 1—4.

To those considerations may be added the following. Many good and holy men and women lived and died at Jerusalem in the age of our Lord and His Apostles, such as Symeon, Anna (cp. Luke ii. 25), Nicodemus, Joseph of Arimathæa, and others; and they regarded Jerusalem with reverence, as the centre of religious unity. Our Blessed Lord Himself communicated with the Scribes and Pharisees in the public worship of the Synagogue, and in the reading and hearing of the Old Testament, and the religious services of the Temple. Even after the Crucifixion of Christ by the Rulers of the Jews (Luke xxiv. 20. Acts v. 30; x. 39) the Apostles of Christ communicated with them in the public liturgy (Luke xxiv. 53. Acts iii. 1) of the Temple and of the Synagogues.

In like manner, holy and religious men under the Papacy communicated with it in those divine truths and spiritual graces which Almighty God bestowed in His Holy Word and Sacraments, dispensed by its ministry; but holy and religious men did not, knowingly, communicate with it in the acts of violence, treachery, and cruelty, which were too often perpetrated by many of its Rulers; nor did they communicate consciously in the corruptions of sound doctrine which were propagated by them.

On the contrary, many holy and pious men, who lived under the Papacy, censured those acts, and protested loudly against those corruptions; and, even if they were deceived by its claims, yet under the circumstances of the times in which they lived, ignorance or error were then comparatively venial.

But when those corruptions were more clearly manifested by the revival of Learning in the fifteenth century after Christ, and by the wider circulation of the Holy Scriptures, consequent on the invention of Printing; and when those corruptions were enforced by the Church of Rome on the consciences of all men at the Council of Trent, in the sixteenth century after Christ, then many wise and holy men, and societies of men, even whole Nations and Churches, emancipated themselves from the bondage of those corruptions, and they have been blessed by Almighty God with marks of His favour, and they have been made happy instruments in His hands for the advancement of His Kingdom, by the preaching of His Holy Word, and the dispensation of His Holy Sacraments, by an Apostolic Ministry throughout the world.

11—18. καὶ εἶδον ἄλλο θηρίον] And I saw another Beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a Lamb, and he was speaking as a Dragon.

And he exerciseth all the authority of the first Beast in his sight, and causeth the Earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first Beast, whose deadly wound was healed.

And he doeth great wonders, and that fire may come down from heaven on the Earth in the sight of men.

And he deceiveth them that dwell on the Earth by the wonders which he hath power to do in the sight of the Beast, saying to them that dwell on the Earth, that they should make an image to the Beast, who hath the wound of the sword, and lived.

And it was given to him to give breath unto the image of the Beast, that the image of the Beast should both speak, and should cause that as many as would not worship [or do homage to, προσκυνήσωσι τῇ εἰκόνι, see v. 4] the image of the Beast, should be killed.

And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to give themselves a mark in their right hand, or in their forehead: and that no man may be able to buy or sell, save he that hath the mark, the name of the Beast, or the number of his name.

Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the Beast: for it is a number of a man; and his number is six hundred sixty-six.

This second Beast is described as having horns—visible emblems of power (see v. 6; xii. 13)—like a Lamb, i. e. like the horns of a Lamb. Cp. Homer, Iliad xvii. 51, κόμαι χαρίτεσσιν ὁμοῖαι, and see 2 Pet. i. 1. Jude 7. Winer, § 66, p. 549.

St. John uses a particular word in the Apocalypse for Lamb, viz. Ἀρνίον (see on v. 6, p. 181). He never uses ἀμνός, which is found in his Gospel and in other parts of Scripture (John i. 29. 36. Cp. Acts viii. 32. 1 Pet. i. 19), where ἀρνίον never occurs. But Ἀρνίον occurs about thirty times in the Apocalypse, and it always signifies Christ. And this word Ἀρνίον, in the number of its syllables, accent, termination, and gender, stands in direct antithesis, or contrast, to the word θηρίον, or BEAST.

The Lamb, which is Christ, is described above as having horns (see v. 6), and the Beast is here described as having horns, like those of the Lamb; that is, he claims to exercise the power of Christ.

The verbal precision, which is a remarkable characteristic of the Apocalypse (see above, p. 167), proves that the Beast here described as having the horns of a Lamb, that is, as exercising the power of Christ, is not a heathen or infidel Power, but is a Power which professes Christianity. The emblems of his dominion, and the most conspicuous features of his body, are like those of a Lamb, i. e. Christ.

And yet his utterance is described as like that of a Dragon.

13 m Καὶ ποιεῖ σημεῖα μεγάλα, καὶ πῦρ ἵνα ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καταβαίνῃ εἰς τὴν γῆν ἐνώπιον τῶν ἀνθρώπων· 14 n καὶ πλανᾷ τοὺς κατοικοῦντας ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς διὰ τὰ σημεῖα ἃ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ ποιῆσαι ἐνώπιον τοῦ θηρίου, λέγων τοῖς κατοικοῦσιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ποιῆσαι εἰκόνα τῷ θηρίῳ, ὃς ἔχει τὴν πληγὴν τῆς μαχαίρας

m Matt. 24. 24. 2 Thess. 2. 9. ch 16. 14.

This word δράκων, dragon, or serpent, does not always imply open ferocity, but often means wiliness and craft. The word Ἀρνίον, or Lamb, indicates a profession of Christian innocence: and the word δράκων, Dragon, or Adder, signifies that this profession is united with the subtlety of the Serpent who deceived Eve (2 Cor. xi. 3). Cp. Wetstein, ii. p. 794, and note above, p. 187, from S. Augustine. Primasius here observes, that "this Beast is said to speak as a dragon, because he deceives by hypocrisy or semblance of the truth;" and the old commentator in S. Augustine's works on this passage says, "this Beast displays himself with a semblance of Christianity as a Lamb, in order that he may insinuate secretly the poison of the Dragon. This," he adds, "is an heretical Church."

Hence this Beast is hereafter described as the false Prophet (xvi. 13; xix. 20; xx. 10), or false Teacher (see 2 Pet. ii. 1. 1 John iv. 1. Cp. note, 1 Thess. v. 20. Rom. xii. 6). Our Lord's warning applies here, "Beware of false Prophets or Teachers, who come in sheep's clothing," with the semblance of a Lamb, "but inwardly they are ravening wolves" (Matt. vii. 15). Accordingly, in v. 14, this Beast is said πλανᾶν, to deceive, a word descriptive of false Teachers (cp. 2 Pet. ii. 18; iii. 17. 1 John ii. 26; iii. 7; iv. 6. 2 John 7), and which recalls our Lord's warning concerning the latter days, "Many false Prophets shall arise, and shall deceive (πλανήσουσι) many (Matt. xxiv. 11); and many false Christs and false Prophets (words which might almost seem to mark the relation of the two Beasts in the present Vision) shall arise, and shall work great signs and wonders, so as to deceive (πλανᾶν), if it were possible, the very elect. Behold, I have told you before." Matt. xxiv. 24, 25.

We may therefore safely adopt the interpretation of the ancient Expositors, who recognized in this Second Beast a succession of Teachers of unsound doctrine, labouring with great subtlety and success for the aggrandizement of the former Beast. S. Irenæus (v. 28) calls the second Beast the armour-bearer (ὑπερασπιστὴν) of the former Beast; and it will be seen in the sequel, that, after fighting side by side, they will come to the same end at the same time (xix. 20).

The ancient Expositors had not seen, in their days, the particular form of religious seduction which is predicted by this Vision; and they therefore could not fully interpret this prophecy. See above, Introduction, pp. 149, 150.

But Time has unfolded it to later ages. The energy, learning, intelligence, subtlety, unity, and perseverance, with which that great Ecclesiastical Corporation, the Romish Hierarchy, extending itself into almost all the Countries of the world, has laboured for many centuries, and is still labouring, for the spiritual aggrandizement and exaltation of the Roman Papacy, and for the subjugation of all men to its sway, is here delineated by the Spirit of Prophecy.

This Power rises from the Earth; it does not advance the Spiritual Kingdom, the Kingdom of Heaven.

Bp. Andrewes says, "This second Beast represents the Roman Hierarchy, which both by speaking and writing proclaims the Pope as Vice-God." (Bp. Andrewes, contra Bellarmin. p. 287, ed. 1610, where the prophecy is further explained.)

The primary purpose of that Hierarchy, as the prophecy has predicted, is to make the Earth and all that dwell therein do homage to the former Beast, whose deadly wound was healed, v. 12, and to make an image to the Beast who hath the wound of the sword, and lived.

Observe these latter words, studiously reiterated, in order to show that it is not for the Roman Pagan Empire that this second Beast labours, but for the Roman Power, killed as far as its Pagan Empire is concerned, and still "having the wound of the sword" in that respect, and yet alive again; that is, it labours for the Roman power, not as Pagan, for it is dead as to its Paganism, and yet still lives in the Papacy.

The decree of Pope Boniface VIII., that "it is necessary to eternal salvation for every human creature to submit to the Roman Pontiff" (Extrav. Com. lib. i. tit. viii. cap. 1), and the statement of Cardinal Bellarmine (de Pontifice, cap. i. 10), that the "doctrine of the Pope's Supremacy is the essence and sum of Christianity," contain the very pith and marrow of the system propounded by the Romish Hierarchy.

Perhaps the best comment on this verse (v. 12) is to be found in the Oaths which are taken by all Priests and Bishops of the Roman Church throughout the world; in which they bind themselves to be "faithful and obedient to their Lord, the Pope," and "to uphold and maintain the Popedom of Rome, the royalties of St. Peter, and to defend them against all men;" and in which they swear that they "will cause to be preserved, defended, augmented, and promoted, the rights, honours, privileges, and authority of the Church of Rome, and of the Pope, and of his successors;" and "that they will keep, and cause to be kept by others, its decrees, ordinances, sentences, depositions, reservations, provisions, and commandments." The original of this Oath may be seen in the Pontificale Romanum, p. 62, published at Rome, A.D. 1816.

Such are the obligations of Roman Bishops; and all Ecclesiastics, regular and secular, of the Church of Rome throughout the world, take an Oath, in which they declare that they "acknowledge the Church of Rome to be the mistress of all Churches," and swear to "pay true obedience to the Roman Pontiff, the successor of Peter, the Vicar of Jesus Christ, and to maintain all things decreed in the General Councils, especially in the Council of Trent;" and they swear "that they reject and anathematize all things contrary thereto, and that they will hold firm unto death this true faith, out of which there is no salvation, and will take care that it be held and taught by all under their authority." This Oath may be found in editions of the Decrees of the Council of Trent, and in the Roman Canon Law, p. 111, ed. 1839.

vv. 13, 14. This second Beast is said to work signs or wonders, and to deceive by means of those wonders.

It is affirmed by Papal Divines that the presence of miracles is an "essential note of the Church" (Bellarmine, de Ecclesiâ, lib. ii.), where "gloria miraculorum" is reckoned as the eleventh note of the Church. Some of the wonders, which they affirm to have been worked for the exaltation of their own faith, are too well attested to be denied. The Holy Scripture expressly declares that miracles will be wrought for the trial of the faithful by teachers of strange doctrines, for the maintenance of those doctrines (cp. Deut. xiii. 1—5), especially in the latter days (Matt. xxiv. 24. 2 Thess. ii. 9); whereas, on the other hand, there is no reason now to look for further evidence (Luke xvi. 29), except in the fulfilment of prophecy (cp. 2 Pet. i. 19), in behalf of the Truth; and the appeal made by the Papal Hierarchy to the "glory of miracles," manifested among themselves, seems to be a fulfilment of Prophecy, warning the world against its seductions.

This second Beast is also said (v. 13) to work great signs, so that he may make fire to come down from heaven on to the earth. A, C have ἵνα καὶ πῦρ, and so Lach., Tisch.

The Apostle and Evangelist St. John himself had once asked our Lord to allow him to make fire come down from heaven on those who would not receive them; our Lord replied, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of" (Luke ix. 35—55).

That incident affords the best exposition of this verse. It is not affirmed that the Beast actually makes fire to come down; but that he works that it may come down.

This is fulfilled in the operations of the Roman Hierarchy when they imprecate God's wrath, and call down the consuming fires of His vengeance, on those who will not receive their doctrines, and who in any way contravene their practices.

There is a solemn form of Imprecation which is set forth to be pronounced annually by all Romish Primates, Patriarchs, Archbishops, and Bishops on the day on which our Blessed Saviour instituted the Feast of love. This form of imprecation is called "In Cœna Domini;" "In the Lord's Supper."

This form of Imprecation has been authorized and enjoined by twenty different Popes, and anathematizes as Heretics all Protestants, and declares them to be incapable of enjoying civil rights, and liable to temporal penalties, and even to death. Thus it fulfils the divine prediction in v. 13. It may be seen in the Roman Bullarium, iv. p. 118, ed. 1722. See above, p. 225.

The awful form of cursing by "book, bell, and candle," used by the Roman Hierarchy in our own land in former times, by which men were "given over utterly to the power of the fiend, and the souls to be quenched in the pains of hell-fire," may be seen in Fox's Acts and Monuments, p. 947, and in Wordsworth's Eccles. Biog. i. p. 220, ed. 1839.

In that form the Papal Hierarchy claimed the power to execute this curse; the tenor of it was, "we give them over utterly to the power of the fiend; and let us quench their soules as they bee dead this night in the paines of hell-fire, as this candle is now quenched and put out."

καὶ ἔζησε· [15] ° καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ πνεῦμα δοῦναι τῇ εἰκόνι τοῦ θηρίου, ἵνα καὶ λαλήσῃ ἡ εἰκὼν τοῦ θηρίου, καὶ ποιήσῃ ἵνα ὅσοι ἂν μὴ προσκυνήσωσι τῇ

Thus they assumed the power ascribed here to the second Beast.

This prophecy has also been fulfilled in a signal manner by that portion of the Roman Hierarchy which works, and has worked, for many years by the instrumentality of the Inquisition, which calls itself the "Holy Office," and enforces the doctrines of the Papacy, and especially the dogma of the Papal Supremacy, by fire, sword, and rack. The badge of the Holy Office is a drawn sword with an olive branch: thus while it does the work of the Beast, it wears the semblance of the Lamb. See Limborch, Hist. Inquisitions, pp. 370—373.

In v. 14 the Second Beast is said to deceive by means of the signs and wonders which it was given him to work. Observe the word given: the agency of evil is limited by God. He allowed the magicians of Egypt to work miracles, that His own power in overcoming them by His servant Moses might be more glorious. Exod. vii. 11. 22; viii. 7. 18, 19. Christ permitted devils to go into the swine, and to carry them into the deep, that thus He might overcome the devil, and that His love and power in delivering us from him might be more glorified. Matt. viii. 31, 32.

The second Beast is said to command the "dwellers on the Earth," that is, men who are not loyal subjects of the kingdom of heaven, to make an image to the Beast who has the wound of the sword, and lived. It is remarkable that the best MSS., A, B, C, and others, have not ὅ, in the neuter, as Elz., but have ὃς here, in the masculine gender, and so Lach., Tisch.—showing the personality of the former Beast.

It is added, that it is given to the second Beast to give breath to that image, in order that it should speak, and cause that, whoever would not pay homage to the image of the Beast, should be killed.

The reading τῇ εἰκόνι (the dative case, cp. ch. xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4) is sanctioned by B, and more than thirty MSS., and some Fathers; and so Lach. and Tisch. See above on v. 4. The accusative is also used at a later stage of the prophecy, after the fall of Babylon, xiv. 9.

What is this Image of the Beast?

It is described not only as an Image made to the Beast, but also as an Image of the Beast. See here v. 15, and xiv. 9. 11; xv. 2; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4.

The word εἰκὼν, image, effigies, designates a prosopopœia, or personification of something abstract; see Dr. Bentley on Freethinking, p. 278, near the end, who quotes Plato as saying, that if men could have ἐναργὲς εἴδωλον, a conspicuous image of Wisdom before their eyes, they would be enraptured with her beauty; see also Cicero, de Officiis, i. 5, and de Finibus, ii. 16.

In the Apocalypse the word εἰκὼν, image, signifies also an εἴδωλον, idolum, in the sense of an object to be adored, as images of heathen deities were; cp. the use of the word εἰκὼν in Rom. i. 23.

The first Beast itself is the Papacy; and the εἰκὼν or Image of it is the personification of the Papacy, in the visible form of the Pontiff for the time being. Every one who is created Pope—whatever may be his character for learning, piety, ability, or morals, even though he be a Hildebrand or a Borgia—yet immediately on his creation is made into an Image or Idol by the Second Beast or Roman Hierarchy; and is displayed to the homage of the world; and this process of making an Image or Idol of every Pope for the time being, has now been continued for many centuries.

On the first occasion, when a new Pope appears in public after his election to the Pontificate, he is elevated into an object of adoration in the temple of God.

The new Pope, wearing his mitre, is lifted up by Cardinals, and is placed by them on the High Altar of the principal Church at Rome—St. Peter's. He is there seated upon the Altar of God: and while he there sits, the Roman Hierarchy bow down before him and kiss those feet which tread on the Altar of God.

This ceremony of Adoration is prescribed by the official Book of Roman Ceremonies, entitled "Cæremoniale Romanum;" it may be seen described in lib. iii. sect. i. of the edition of 1572; and it has been performed on the election of every Pope for many centuries in succession. It was performed to the present Pope on Wednesday, 17th June, 1846.

This Ceremony is called by Roman writers the "Adoratio Pontificis," and it is represented in the Roman coinage with the following remarkable inscription, "QUEM CREANT, ADORANT," "Whom they create, they adore," Whom the Roman Hierarchy make by their own votes to be Pope—him they adore when made: they worship the work of their own hand. They make an image, and then worship it.

The worship of the εἰκὼν or Image is here described in the Apocalypse by the word προσκυνεῖν (see also xiv. 9; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4), and this word is exactly represented by the Latin word adorare: the word used here for προσκυνεῖν in the Roman Vulgate Version of the Apocalypse; this word adorare is chosen by the Roman Hierarchy to describe the homage which they themselves pay to the person of every Pope in succession on his election to the Popedom, as may be seen in the following Roman books, Lettenburgh's Notitia Curiæ Romanæ, p. 125, ed. 1683, and the works of other Romish writers (Mazaroni and Stevanus) de Adoratione Pontificis, and Histoire du Clergé, dedicated to Pope Clement XI., Amst. 1716, vol. i. p. 17. Tosi, Corte di Roma, a work approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace in 1764, p. 75. An engraving representing the "Adoratio" may be seen in Picart, Cérémonies, vol. i. p. 296.

A specimen of the feelings animating the Papal Hierarchy, and of the language uttered by them, when bowing before the Papal Image, may be seen in the words addressed by Cardinal Colonna in the name of the Clergy to Pope Innocent X. at his Coronation in St. Peter's, in A.D. 1644. "Most Holy and Blessed Father, Head of the Church, Ruler of the World, to whom the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven are given, whom the Angels in heaven revere, and whom the gates of Hell fear, and whom the whole world adores ("quem totus mundus adorat"), we venerate and adore Thee, and commit ourselves and all that is ours to thy paternal and more than divine disposal." The original words are in Banck's Roma Triumphans, p. 384, ed. Franeker, 1656.

In v. 15 the Second Beast is said to give breath to this Image, that the Image should speak.

This prophecy describes the process by which the Papal Image gives utterance to what is breathed into it by the Papal Hierarchy.

It is a remarkable fact, that the Papal Hierarchy first consult together, and frame decrees, or prepare rescripts either in Councils summoned by the Pope, or by some other means prescribed by him; and when this preliminary process has been gone through, then they submit their decrees to the Pope, and desire him to ratify their verdicts by his authority.

Thus they give breath to the Image, which they themselves have made, and then the Image speaks: and what it utters becomes an Article of Faith, and is imposed on all men as necessary to salvation.

The Twelve new articles of the Trent Creed were framed and promulgated in this manner. The Trent Council was convened by the Pope. The Council prepared the decrees; they brought them to the Pope, Pius IV. Thus they breathed breath into the Papal Image, and the Papal Image spake what they had breathed into it. And those Twelve new Articles (such as the doctrine of Seven Sacraments, Transubstantiation, Half-Communion, Purgatory, Propitiatory sacrifice of the Mass, Worship of Images, &c.) have now become, as they affirm, an essential part of the Christian Faith, and they all make a solemn adjuration that no one can be saved unless he profess them,—"extra hanc fidem nemo salvus esse potest." See the Tridentine Creed put forth by Pope Pius the IVth, A.D. 1564, annexed to the Decrees of the Trent Council; and the same Pope's Bull of Confirmation of the said Decrees, A.D. 1563.

A striking specimen of the manner in which this prophecy is fulfilled in the Papacy, has been recently displayed to the world.

On the 8th December, 1854, the Pope promulgated in St. Peter's Church at Rome the new doctrine of the Immaculate Conception, and affirmed that it was thenceforth necessary to salvation to believe that the Blessed Virgin was exempt from original sin, and that all who do not believe this dogma make shipwreck of the faith, and have fallen from the unity of the Church ("naufragium fidei fecisse, et ab unitate Ecclesiæ defecisse").

The mode in which this extraordinary promulgation was effected is specially worthy of notice.

Some years before that promulgation, namely, on the 2nd of February, 1849, the Pope had addressed letters to all the Bishops of his Communion, and in those letters he had stated, that some persons were surprised "that the honour (of being born without sin) was not yet attributed to the most holy Virgin by the Church and Apostolic See;" and he then desired the Bishops to communicate to him "what their opinion was concerning the definition of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary,"—"quid ipsi de hâc definitione sentirent." The Bishops said in reply, that they all desired such a definition from him.

εἰκόνι τοῦ θηρίου ἀποκτανθῶσι· [16] p καὶ ποιεῖ πάντας, τοὺς μικροὺς καὶ τοὺς μεγάλους, καὶ τοὺς πλουσίους καὶ τοὺς πτωχοὺς, καὶ τοὺς ἐλευθέρους καὶ τοὺς δούλους, ἵνα δῶσιν αὐτοῖς χάραγμα ἐπὶ τῆς χειρὸς αὐτῶν τῆς δεξιᾶς, ἢ ἐπὶ p ch. 19. 20. & 20. 4.

The Pope then consulted the consistory of the Cardinals; and they also made the same request.

Nearly six years passed away, and on the 8th of December, 1854, the Representative of the Roman Hierarchy approached the foot of the Throne on which the Pontiff sat in the Church of St. Peter at Rome, and said, "In the name of the Sacred College of Cardinals, and of the Bishops of the Catholic Church, and of all the faithful, we humbly and earnestly demand, O most holy Father, that you would raise your Apostolic Voice, and pronounce the dogmatic decree of the Immaculate Conception of Mary, which will be a subject of joy to heaven, and of exultation to earth." To quote the words of the Roman record of that day, "The Pontiff replied that he received willingly the prayer of the Sacred College, and of the Episcopate, and of the faithful; and after the hymn 'Veni Creator,' he read with a loud voice the decree, in which he solemnly defined that the Blessed Virgin, from the first instant of her being conceived, was preserved free from all stain of original sin."

After the reading of the Decree the same Representative of the Hierarchy returned to the foot of the Throne of the Pontiff, and "returned thanks to him for having defined this dogma, and prayed him to publish the Papal Bull concerning it." The Pontiff gave his consent, and the Bull was published, bearing date "the sixth of the Ides of December, 1854."

"The Hierarchy returning from Rome to their Dioceses, and announcing to their people what they have heard from the Oracle of the Vatican, will tell them what honours are rendered to the Blessed Virgin in the Capital of the Catholic World; and the History of the Church will note the 8th of December, 1854, among its most memorable days, when the august Mother of the Saviour of the world received a new triumph from the chair of truth."

Such is the language of the documents published at Rome. The originals may be seen in No. xliii. of the Editor's Occasional Sermons, pp. 29—47, and in No. xii. p. 93.

And now, when it is objected, that this dogma of the Immaculate Conception is a novel doctrine, a doctrine, as the Pope himself confessed, not hitherto defined by the Church of Rome herself, and first promulgated by her in the nineteenth century, and that it is contrary to the Holy Scriptures, the reply given is, "Roma locuta est," Rome has spoken, "The Oracle of the Vatican has given its response;" let the Earth keep silence before it.

So indeed it is. Breath has been given by the Hierarchy to the Image, which their own hands had made, and had set up to be adored. It has spoken in that same Temple of God in which they had set it up to be adored, and in which they fell down before it, when it sat on the Altar of God.

Thus the Apocalyptic prophecy has been fulfilled by them in the eyes of those "who read, and keep the sayings of this book" (xxii. 7. 9).

In v. 15 the second Beast is said to work that the image may cause all who do not worship it to be killed.

The Popes, inspired by the Hierarchy, have devised and enforced an Oath, by which all Roman Bishops bind themselves "to persecute and to impugn, as far as they are able, all heretics and schismatics, and rebels against their Lord, the Pope, and his successors," that is, all who do not submit to his claims to Supremacy and Infallibility. See the Oath in the Roman Pontifical, p. 63, ed. Rome, 1818.

In v. 16 the second Beast is said to cause all men to give to themselves a mark on their right hand, or on their forehead, and that no one may be able to buy or sell except he that hath the mark, the name of the Beast, or the number of his name.

Observe the words "give to themselves;" the best MSS. have δῶσιν (not δώσῃ as in Elz.), and so in Catenâ, p. 383; a remarkable sentence, intimating compulsion under the semblance of choice: that is, the mark which the hierarchy enforces is represented as imprinted voluntarily by those persons on whom they enforce it. It is like an oath imposed, and yet seemingly taken with good will.

v. 16. Here is wisdom, let him who hath understanding count the number of the Beast; for it is the number of a man: and his number is Six Hundred Sixty-Six.

There are three distinct things to be considered here.

(1) The Mark of the Beast.
(2) The Name of the Beast.
(3) The Number of his name.

On the MARK of the Beast.

The word rendered mark is χάραγμα, from χαράσσω, to engrave. Cp. Acts xvii. 29, and here and in the other passages of the Apocalypse (xiv. 9. 11; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4) it denotes such a kind of engraving as indicates that the person on whom the engraving is made, is the property of, and is subject to, the person whose χάραγμα, mark, cypher, or stamp, is engraved upon him who bears it.

In ancient times, marks were impressed on men for certain special purposes; Slaves were branded with the names of their Masters; Soldiers punctured their flesh with the mark of the General under whom they served; votaries of heathen deities stamped themselves with the names and marks of those deities. Cp. 3 Macc. ii. 29, and see notes above, on Gal. vi. 17, where St. Paul says, "I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus;" S. Ambrose (ap. Wetst.), "slaves are inscribed with the mark of their lord; and soldiers are inscribed with the mark of their leader."

The χάραγμα therefore, or mark, of the Beast, indicates that they who wear it are servants, soldiers, and votaries of him whose mark they wear.

This mark is here described as imprinted on the right hand, or on the forehead. The right hand is the organ of working, the forehead is that of profession. The servants of God are represented in this book as having His seal and His name on their foreheads (see vii. 3; ix. 4; xiv. 1—9; xxii. 4; cp. Ezek. ix. 4), because they confess Him before men. Those who receive the mark of the Beast in their foreheads, profess his faith; they who receive it also on their hands, execute in deed what they profess in word,—"accipiunt inscriptionem in fronte propter professionem (says the old commentary in Augustine's works here), in manu propter operationem;" and Bp. Andrewes here, p. 291, says, "the forehead shows faith, the hand works," the one openly confesses, the other boldly executes.

What then is that χάραγμα, or mark, which, at the instance of the Hierarchy, men are said to imprint on themselves?

It is such a Confession of faith and obedience as that already noticed of Pope Pius IV., which contains a solemn vow of subjection to the Papacy, and to the Decrees of the Council of Trent; and which is affirmed by the Papacy and its Hierarchy to be necessary to be received by all who desire to be saved,—"extra hanc fidem nemo salvus esse potest." "That profession of faith," says Bishop Andrewes here, "is implicitly required of all men by the Papacy; all who are baptized are reckoned, by the very fact of their baptism, to be subjects of the Pope, who claims to be the spiritual head of the Church."

There is a difference, which is marked in the prophecy, where it is said that they receive the mark on their right hands, or on their foreheads. The Papal Hierarchy have the mark on their foreheads and on their hands, because they make a profession by words, and exhibit it in works; others, who do not make such a direct profession by words, yet have it on their hands, because they are virtually bound to execute it by deeds.

In v. 17 it is said that no one may buy or sell,—that is, carry on any commerce—except he has this mark.

This has been and is fulfilled in the Papacy, in two ways: First, by actual restraints of temporal traffic; such restrictions have been imposed on persons whom it calls heretics, and disqualifies, as such, for commerce and secular emoluments. See Limborch, Hist. Inquis. pp. 38. 48, 49. 71. Vitringa, p. 624.

Secondly, by inhibiting them from all spiritual commerce and religious communion.

This doubtless is the fuller sense of the prophecy, as has been noticed by ancient Expositors. Thus Haymo says, "the mark of the Beast is his Creed; and no one is permitted by him to preach, unless he has his mark, namely, his faith;" and Aquinas says, vol. xxiv. p. 311, 3, qu. 63. 3. 3, that the mark of the Beast is a "professio illiciti cultûs."

The word Symbolum, in Ecclesiastical language, signifies a Creed, which is the bond and token of spiritual fellowship of all who sail together in the sacred vessel of the Church; and this word Symbolum, in the language of commerce, signifies a token of communion; and thus the word symbol affords an illustration of the metaphor here, and in other places of the Apocalypse. As is well said by Primasius and Bede, "By this mention of buying and selling, we are taught that as the Church of Christ delivers the Creed (Symbolum) to her people for their spiritual good, so on the other hand these persons are prohibited from buying and selling, unless they have the mark of the Beast: as merchants who sail in the same ship are known by the same sign."

This sense of the Prophecy is exemplified in the Papacy.

q ch. 14. 11. & 15. 2. τὸ μέτωπον αὐτῶν· 17 [q] καὶ ἵνα μή τις δύνηται ἀγοράσαι ἢ πωλῆσαι, εἰ μὴ ὁ ἔχων τὸ χάραγμα, τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ θηρίου, ἢ τὸν ἀριθμὸν τοῦ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ.

r ch. 17. 9. 18 [r] Ὧδε ἡ σοφία ἐστίν· ὁ ἔχων νοῦν ψηφισάτω τὸν ἀριθμὸν τοῦ θηρίου· ἀριθμὸς γὰρ ἀνθρώπου ἐστὶ, καὶ ὁ ἀριθμὸς αὐτοῦ χξϛ'.

The Roman Hierarchy affirms that all who do not bear the Pope's mark—that is, who do not hold the Trent Creed, and submit to him as Supreme Head of the Church on Earth, are cut off from communion with the Body of Christ.

They affirm that no one is a lawful Priest or Bishop, or can communicate any spiritual grace by the ministry of Christ's word and sacraments, unless he bear the Pope's mark; that is, unless he receive a commission to do so from him, and take an oath of obedience to him.

They even affirm, that if a Roman Bishop become an Archbishop, he cannot exercise even Episcopal authority, unless he sue for, and obtain another mark of subjection from the Pope,—namely, the Pallium from Rome. See the Pontificale Romanum, ed. 1818, p. 87.

Thus all powers of spiritual commerce are made to depend on the reception of a mark from the Pope.

On the NUMBER of the Beast.

17, 18.] What now is the meaning of the following words?—Except he who has the name of the Beast, or the number of his name. Here is wisdom. He that hath understanding, let him count the number of the Beast; for it is a number of a man, and his number is 666.

Let him who has understanding count the number, for it is the number of a man; that is, it can be counted, because it is a human number, and not a divine number, which no one is able to count (see above, vii. 9, and below, xx. 8); it is the number of a man, although he who wears it professes himself to be little less than a god (see v. 4); and perhaps in a special sense it is said that it is the number of a man, because the power here described is that of ἄνθρωπος ἁμαρτίας, pourtrayed by St. Paul, 2 Thess. ii. 3, "the man of sin." As the ancient Expositor in the works of Aquinas says, "it is the number of a man, not of a God, although he will exalt himself as God against what is called God, and is worshipped—as the Man of Sin." And so Bede, who says here, "Est homo peccati, filius perditionis," 2 Thess. ii. 3.

Let us first consider the number of the name.

The number of the name is stated by St. John himself, and is expressly declared to be 666.

This number is remarkable in reference to the name of Christ the Lamb—with whom the Beast is placed in contrast.

The name of the Beast makes three sixes: 666. The name of JESUS (Ἰησοῦς) makes (according to the numerical value of its Greek letters) three eights, viz. 888. And the number eight is the symbol and number of resurrection and triumph. See above on Luke xxiv. 1. Thus it stands in striking contrast to the number here mentioned, 666.

The symbol of Christ is  XP, the two first letters of Χριστὸς, Christ (see above, p. 164, on i. 8), and was adopted by Constantine and Roman Christians as the badge and ensign of the Empire, on its military standards and coins. See Euseb. vit. Const. ii. 28. 30. 3. Sozomen, Hist. Eccl. i. 3. Ruffin. i. 9. Lactant. de mart. Persecut. c. 44, and the Coins of Constantine, in Grævii Thes. Rom. vol. x. p. 1529, and Suicer, Lex. art. Ἄβαρον, and Ducange, vol. ii. p. 263.

This symbol of Christ (XP), arranged thus, is equivalent to seven hundreds.

Seven, as already observed (see note at end of chapter xi.), is the numerical symbol of rest after toil and conflict, and is characteristic of Him in Whom alone the soul can find rest (see Matt. xi. 28, 29).

The number of the Beast is composed of three sixes, 666.

The number six, especially in the Apocalypse, is the symbol of conflict and distress; the sixth day of the week, the day of Christ's Crucifixion, the sixth seal, the sixth trumpet, the sixth vial, are all significant of critical seasons of rebuke, and blasphemy, and woe (see above on chap. xi. at end).

Besides, these three sixes represent a threefold failure and declension from that sabbatical rest and perfection, which is represented by the number seven; which, as before observed, is a symbol of Christ and the true Church.

The "bearing of a number" is a mode of speech derived from ancient usage. The deities of heathens had mystical numbers consecrated to them; and their worshippers bare those sacred numbers. Thus the mystical number of the Sun was 608, which, expressed in Greek letters, is XH, and this was borne by his votaries. See Martian. Capellus, de Nuptiis Philologiæ, i. 2. Selden's Works, iii. pt. 2, col. 1402; and Grotius here.

S. Irenæus, remarking on the peculiar arithmetical value of the name Jesus (Ἰησοῦς), as containing three eights, 888 (Iren. i. 15. 2, and ii. 24. 1, ed. Stieren, or pp. 72. 163, ed. Grabe), observes also that the number 666, containing three sixes, represents a triple apostasy, or falling away (Iren. v. 27, 28, ed. Stieren, or pp. 446, 447, ed. Grabe); and Irenæus identifies the Apocalyptic power here described with that of the apostasia, or falling away, pourtrayed by St. Paul, who had used the same word apostasia to describe it (Iren. ii. 25, Stieren; or p. 443, Grabe). See above on 2 Thess. ii. 3.

S. Irenæus observes that Holy Scripture mentions that the Flood came in the six hundredth year of Noah (Gen. vii. 11), and that the golden image of the King of Babylon, which proved the faith of the Three Children, was sixty cubits in height and six in breadth. (Dan. iii. 1.)

The numerical symbol of the Beast, 666, indicates that he aims at and aspires to the attributes of Christ, and puts forth a semblance of Christian Truth, but falls away from it in a triple decline and degeneracy. Such a religious communion as once held the truth as it is in Christ, in its perfection and integrity, as the Roman Church did (see Rom. i. 8), and now displays a triple declension in faith, practice, and worship, seems to be aptly symbolized by such an arithmetical combination as 666.

Besides, this number has found a literal fulfilment in the Papacy.

We derive our knowledge of the Imperial χάραγμα from coins and other public documents. Let us resort to similar evidence for the Papal Mark.

The Labarum of Imperial Christian Rome is not borne by Papal Rome, but has been succeeded by another symbol, represented below; concerning which the Editor of Numismata Pontificum, p. 191, ed. Paris, 1679, says, "Tritus est hic et valdè obvius nummus;" and p. 167, "ita vulgaris est, ut in ipso diutius immorari sit superfluum;" and p. 154, "vulgare est hoc numisma, quod toties repeti solet quoties nova cuditur moneta."

The KEYS arranged as there seen, constitute the badge of the Papacy.

The KEYS declare its claim to universal supremacy.

The words TIBI DABO CLAVES REGNI COELORVM (Matt. xvi. 19), inscribed inside the cupola of St. Peter's, are a demonstration of the grounds on which the claims of the Papacy are made to rest, and an assertion of the authority which those words are supposed by it to have conveyed.

The soldiers of Imperial Rome fought under the standard of the Cross; so those of Papal Rome fight under the standard of the Keys.

The Roman Emperor might be said to conquer by the one, EN TOΥΤΩι NIKAN; so they who successfully resist the power of Papal Rome may be said to be conquerors over the other, NIKAN EK τοῦ χαράγματος (Rev. xv. 2).

The χάραγμα in the Apocalypse forms a Number, and is to be counted (v. 17).

Does the badge of the Keys, as figured on the coins of the Papacy, correspond, when counted, to the χάραγμα described by St. John?

A copy of it, taken from Papal coins, has been inserted

XIV. [1] [a] Καὶ εἶδον, καὶ ἰδοὺ τὸ Ἀρνίον ἑστὸς ἐπὶ τὸ ὄρος Σιὼν, καὶ μετ' αὐτοῦ ἑκατὸν τεσσαρακοντατέσσαρες χιλιάδες, ἔχουσαι τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Πατρὸς αὐτοῦ γεγραμμένον ἐπὶ τῶν μετώπων αὐτῶν [2] [b] καὶ ἤκουσα above. When the MONOGRAM there represented is resolved into its elements, the following letters appear:—

(1) ΧΗΣΤ

and

(2) ΧΗϛ

Let these elements be counted

χ = 600
ξ = 60

and στ is equivalent to ϛ, and we have χξϛ = 666. Or if ϛ be regarded as the digamma, there is the same result.

In Isaac Casaubon's Diary, ii. p. 800, A.D. 1610, is the following entry, "Papa χξϛ."

It has been observed by some ancient Expositors, that Holy Scripture has recorded that the number of Talents of gold paid as yearly tribute to King Solomon, the type of Christ, amounted to 666 (1 Kings x. 14), and they suggest that one of the purposes of the use of this number in the Apocalypse, is to intimate that the Power here described will usurp to himself that tribute of honour and service which is due only to Him who is the Prince of Peace and King of Kings. See Bede here.

On the NAME of the Beast.

The name in question must satisfy the following conditions:

(1) The letters must, when calculated according to their numerical value, amount to 666.

(2) It must be descriptive of the character of the Beast.

(3) His adherents, who are said to bear his name, must be known to own themselves his subjects, and bound by his laws in respect to that particular attribute which the name declares, just as the Saints are said to bear the name of Christ and His Father (ii. 3. 13; iii. 12; xiv. 1; xxii. 4), because they own them as the true objects of worship, and themselves their servants.

S. Irenæus (in v. 30. 2, Stieren; p. 449, Grabe), and after him his scholar, S. Hippolytus (de Christo, p. 26, ed. Lagarde), mention ΛΑΤΕΙΝΟΣ, Latinus, as probably the name in question, for in the Greek notation—

τ = 300
ε = 5
ι = 10
ν = 50
ο = 70

total, 666. And, adds Irenæus, this name makes up the requisite number, 666, and is very probable, because the last kingdom (i. e. the fourth of Daniel) "has this name, for they who now reign are called Latins."

This remark is important, as showing the opinion existing even in the age of Irenæus, the second century, that the Beast would be connected with the Latin race. And S. Hippolytus says, that the Latins were then the rulers of the world, and their name being summed up together into the name of one man, makes ΛΑΤΕΙΝΟΣ.

Both these writers mention some other names also as probable, but this name ΛΑΤΕΙΝΟΣ (as Bp. Andrewes observes, p. 293) is the most probable among them.

It is no objection to this opinion that the word is sometimes written ΛΑΤΙΝΟΣ. The form ει is authorized by usage. See Düsterdieck, p. 456, and this is received by Eichhorn, Ewald, De Wette, and many others.

The Papal Power has succeeded to the Seat of the Latin or Western Empire; and in religious matters it is essentially Latin. It has preferred the Latin Version of the Scriptures even to the Hebrew and Greek originals, and affirms that its own Latin Translation is to be the authentic standard of Holy Writ.

It says in the fourth Session of the Council of Trent, that "if any one does not receive as sacred and canonical all the books which it recites, with all their parts" (some of which are apocryphal), "as they are accustomed to be read in the Catholic Church, and as they are contained in the Old Latin Vulgate, he is to be anathema." And, it adds, "that the old Latin Vulgate edition is to be held to be authentic in all sermons and expositions."

In defiance of God's authority pronouncing a blessing on all who search the Scriptures (Acts xvii. 11. Luke xvi. 31. 2 Tim. iii. 15. Rev. i. 3), the Papacy has been very loth to communicate the blessing of vernacular versions of the Scriptures to the people, and has kept them almost locked up in her own Latin Version; and although the Latin Vulgate itself was a Version made originally for the edification of the people of Italy, it does not allow them the free use of the Scriptures in their own tongue. In spite also of the divine command, to "pray with the understanding" (see on 1 Cor. xiv. 14—20), the Papacy has been very reluctant to grant the use of public prayer in the native language of the nations over whom she exercises her sway, and has restrained the accents of public supplication to God within the trammels of her Latin Missal and Breviary. See Dr. Bentley's language on this subject in his Sermon on 2 Cor. ii. 17, vol. iii. pp. 247, 248, ed. Dyce.

It may indeed be alleged against this exposition, that the Pope does not bear the name Latinus or Latin.

But this is no valid objection. It suffices, if he is in fact what that name declares.

Indeed we should hardly look for a very obvious name here, because the Prophecy describes the search for it as an exercise of wisdom, a trial of understanding, and a work of calculation, —"Here is wisdom: let him that hath understanding count, or calculate, the number of the name."

Holy Scripture says that Christ's "name is the Branch" (Zech. vi. 12), and that "this is the name whereby He shall be called, the Lord our Righteousness" (Jer. xxiii. 16; xxxiii. 6), and that "a Virgin shall conceive and bear a Son, and they shall call His name Emmanuel" (Matt. i. 23). And yet we do not hear that Christ was ever called by any of these names: yet the prophecies which thus speak have been most surely fulfilled, because Christ was, and did, what those names declare.

So it may be with the name before us. The Papacy has succeeded to the seat of the Latin Empire, and rules in the capital of the Latin world. And it is indeed a wonderful characteristic of his empire, that this Latin Ruler will not allow any one of the nations on the earth to buy or sell, that is, to have any spiritual commerce with men or God by preaching, or prayer, unless they accept his Latin language in the place of God's own original Hebrew and Greek in the Holy Scriptures, and unless they accept his Latin language in the place of their own mother tongue, in common prayer and public praise to God, and in the administration of the Holy Sacraments. He would bring all nations of the earth under his own Latin yoke, and thus exercise over them an Imperial sway which was never wielded by Heathen Rome in the palmiest days of her power.

Thus, the exposition given by S. Irenæus and S. Hippolytus in the second and third centuries, has gained by time a force and clearness which they could not foresee; and if it was, as they affirm, very probable then, it is still more probable now.

The LAMB standing upon MOUNT SION, and the ONE HUNDRED and FORTY-FOUR THOUSAND with Him.

CH. XIV. 1—5. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw, and, lo, the Lamb standing upon the mount Sion, and with Him an hundred forty and four thousand, having His name and His Father's name written in their foreheads.

And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard a voice of harpers harping with their harps: And they sing as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four Living Creatures, and the Elders: and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth.

These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins.

These are they which are following the Lamb whithersoever He goeth. These were redeemed from among men, a first-fruit unto God and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no lie: for they are without fault.

This chapter follows the preceding in a natural connexion. It contains a cheering consolation, a triumphant acclamation, and hortatory admonition, consequent upon what has been revealed in the foregoing Vision of the dominion of the Beast, and the persecution of the faithful.

Observe the contrast here.

The LAMB (Ἀρνίον) is displayed standing, in opposition to the BEAST (θηρίον). The Beast had been seen rising from the Sea (xiii. 1), the element of tumultuous agitation; but the LAMB stands upon the Mount Sion, "which shall never be removed" (Ps. cxxv. 1; cp. Ps. ii. 6; cx. 2; cxlvi. 10).

Mount Sion represents the City of the true Church of God, the City of the Lamb (cp. above, ii. 9; iii. 9), and is opposed to Babylon, which is the enemy of God's People, and is the city of the BEAST. (See xvii. 4, 5. 18.)

With the Lamb are seen standing a hundred and forty four thousand (12 × 12,000). This number represents completeness and union in the true doctrine and discipline of Christ, as preached by the Twelve Apostles. See above on vii. 1—9, and note at end of chap. xi. and on xii. 1, and below, xxi. 14.

The symbolical number of 144,000 has a moral significance. These 144,000 stand in the same relation to the portion of the Church which is the subject of these later Visions, as the 144,000 in the Sixth Seal (vii. 4—9) do to the Universal Church of all ages and places of the world.

By this complete Apostolic number, these faithful confessors are contrasted with those who have the number of the Beast, which represents a defection from the Truth (see on xiii. 18). And they have the name of the Lamb and of His Father (so the best MSS.) on their foreheads: and so they are contrasted with those who receive the mark or name of the Beast on their foreheads. (See xiii. 16, 17; xiv. 11.)

This Vision, therefore, reveals the cheering truth, that, although, during the sway of the Beast, who had been displayed in the foregoing chapter, many would fall from the faith, and would do homage to him (see xiii. 8. 16), yet the true Catholic Apostolic Church of Christ would never fail, and would finally triumph over the power of the Beast, and would stand with the Lamb on Mount Sion, in His Kingdom, which will never be destroyed; and is hereafter revealed as established "on a great and lofty Mountain." See xxi. 10.

In v. 1, on the perfect participle ἑστὸς see above, Matt. xxiv. 15, and ἑστάναι, 1 Cor. x. 12. Winer, § 14, p. 72.

St. John hears a sound of jubilee coming out of heaven (v. 2).

The heavenly voices rejoice in the Victory of the Apostolic company of the 144,000 on Mount Sion. The heavenly quire celebrates their victory, by singing a new song before the Throne, and before the Four Living Creatures and the Elders, the emblems of the HOLY SCRIPTURES of the Old and New Testament (see on iv. 4—6), because the Victory has been gained through the power of God and His Holy Word.

In v. 4 the Apostolic Company of the 144,000 on Mount Sion who stand with the Lamb, are described as they which were not defiled with women: that is, they were not corrupted by the spiritual harlotries of Babylon, the false Church who is seated on the Beast, and who lures men with her fascinations, and bewitches them with her charms, and tempts them to drink of the cup of her strange doctrines; and who will be more fully described hereafter (xvii. 1—5). They have not defiled themselves with any spiritual fornications, such as that of the woman Jezebel, the false Teacher, already described as deceiving God's servants, and tempting them to commit fornication, and to be false to their plighted troth and allegiance to Him (see above, on ii. 20. 22).

They were not sullied with any such defilements; for "they are Virgins." Their souls had been espoused to Christ in spiritual wedlock, in Holy Baptism, by an Apostolic ministry, as St. Paul says to the Corinthians (2 Cor. xi. 2), I espoused you as a chaste Virgin to one Husband, Christ. "A pure faith is the virginity of the soul" (S. Aug. See on 2 Cor. xi. 2). They have endeavoured to preserve their virgin purity of Soul in the true faith, "whole and undefiled," and to "perfect holiness in the fear of God," in spirit, soul, and body (2 Cor. vii. 1. 1 Thess. v. 23).

"The Virgins here mentioned," says the ancient Expositor in the works of Augustine (iii. pp. 31. 37), "are not only chaste in body, but they represent the Christian Church, which keeps the faith pure, not stained with any adulteration of heresy, nor with the sensual indulgences of this world: and we all, by baptism, and by Repentance after Baptism, may be Virgins, in the inner man, and may be without guile."

The word παρθένος is applied to men as well as to women. See Suicer in voce, and Fabric. Cod. Apocr. V. T. ii. 92. Kypke, Obs. Sacr. on this passage. St. John himself is sometimes called παρθένος by Ecclesiastical Writers.

These Virgins represent the faithful Bride, married to the spotless Lamb (see xix. 7. 9), and they have not been seduced from their love to Christ by any of the ministers of the Beast; they are they who are following the Lamb whereso'ever He goeth. If He goes to Gethsemane, they follow him thither; if he goes to Calvary, they take up their Cross and follow Him thither; and therefore, since He is gone to heaven, they will be with Him there also.

In v. 4 remark the present participle, οἱ ἀκολουθοῦντες, they who are following the Lamb. Cp. οἱ ἐρχόμενοι ἐκ τῆς θλίψεως (vii. 14), and τοὺς νικῶντας ἐκ τοῦ θηρίου (xv. 2). This use of the present participle with the definite article, which gives it almost the force of a noun substantive, is very expressive, as denoting the prominent feature, and distinctive characteristic which is designed for the reader's attention. Cp. οἱ ἐν Κυρίῳ ἀποθνήσκοντες (xiv. 13), those who are dying in the Lord, οἱ προσκυνοῦντες τὸ θηρίον (xiv. 11), οἱ τηροῦντες τὰς ἐντολὰς τοῦ Θεοῦ (xiv. 12). See Winer, § 18, p. 100, and § 45, p. 316, and note above, on Matt. iv. 3, ὁ πειράζων.

In v. 5 Elz. has δόλος, but A, B, C have ψεῦδος, a lie, and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles. Cp. the contrast in the prophecy of St. Paul concerning the Man of Sin, with his lying wonders, τέρατα ψεύδους, and adherents, who are given over to love the lie (τὸ ψεῦδος), which he upholds (2 Thess. ii. 9—11).

On the word ἄμωμος, without blemish, see Eph. i. 4; v. 27. Col. i. 22. The Saints are made spotless by the blood of the Immaculate Lamb, Who redeemed them, and washed them from their sins, and Who, by offering Himself to God as "a Lamb without blemish (ἄμωμον) and without spot" (1 Pet. i. 19. Heb. ix. 14), enables them to "offer themselves living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to God" (Rom. xii. 1. Heb. xiii. 15).

In v. 5, after εἰσιν, Elz. has ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ, but this addition is not in A, B, C, and is rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., and Tregelles, and it is liable to objection on this account, because the servants of God, who are here presented to the view, are not yet exalted to heavenly glory and everlasting felicity, but are on Mount Sion, the Christian Church, and they are a first-fruit to God and the Lamb (v. 4).

The triumphal song does not originate with this Apostolic company of the 144,000, but it comes forth from heaven (vv. 2, 3), from the lips and harps of Angels, chanting their victory; and it is learnt by the Apostolic company (v. 3), who are on Mount Sion. The triumphs of the Church on Earth are celebrated by the Church in heaven: and the Church on Earth learns the song of praise, and echoes the joyful sound. The γὰρ after ἄμωμοι is not in A, C, and is omitted by Lachmann.

The ANGEL flying in mid-heaven with the EVERLASTING GOSPEL to preach to ALL.

6, 7. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw another Angel flying in mid-heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that sit on the earth, and unto every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to Him; for the hour of His judgment is come: and worship Him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.

Here is another Contrast.

The Beast has been represented in a preceding Vision as warring against HOLY SCRIPTURE, and killing the TWO WITNESSES (see on xi. 3—7), which were raised again by the Spirit of God. The Scriptures have been also represented in another foregoing Vision as having been bound at the Great River Euphrates, which is the River of the Great City, the Mystical Babylon, the seat of the Beast (see above on ix. 14, and below, xvii. 3—5), and as having been afterwards loosed at God's command (see above on ix. 14).

As a natural sequence of those Visions, an Angel is now revealed, flying in mid-heaven,—that is, conspicuously soaring aloft in triumph in the zenith of the sky, in the sight of all the world, and bearing "the EVERLASTING GOSPEL to preach unto (ἐπὶ, so A, B, C, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles) those who are sitting upon the Earth," sitting in worldliness and carnal indifference (see on Luke xxi. 35, and above, iii. 10), and to preach unto (ἐπὶ) every nation, and tribe, and tongue, and people.

This Preaching of the Gospel is a preparation for the End, as Christ Himself has declared. See Matt. xxiv. 14.

The Gospel which the Angel bears is called the EVERLASTING GOSPEL. Here is another contrast to the agency of the Beast above described, and of his adherents. The Gospel of Christ is the everlasting Gospel. It is unchanged and unchangeable. Nothing can be taken from it, and nothing can be added to it. The Gospel is One and the same Gospel as it was 1800 years ago. It is the same Gospel for all Nations, and for all ages, even unto the end of the world. And St. Paul has said, "If any one, or even an Angel from heaven, preach to you any thing, besides what we preached, let him be anathema." (See on Gal. i. 6—9.)

Yet, in spite of that Apostolic anathema twice repeated, the adherents of the Beast have pronounced their anathema on all who do not receive the new doctrines which they have added to the Gospel of God.

The words with which the Trent Council concluded its deliberations were words of malediction, "Anathema, Anathema;" and they were reiterated against all those who will not accept their novel decrees. Concil. Trident. Session xxv. Decr. 4, 1563.

In that Council the Papacy affirmed that its own Latin Version is to be the authentic Standard of Holy Scripture: and it has denied the free use of vernacular Versions of the Holy Scriptures to Nations under its sway (see above on xiii. 17, 18): but in this Vision the Angel flies (such is his eagerness and love) to preach the Everlasting Gospel unto every nation, and tribe, and language, and people.

The Angel also commands the world to worship God. Here is another contrast to the agency of the second Beast or false Teacher described above, who has horns like a Lamb, and endeavours to make every one worship the Beast, and his Image (see xiii. 11, 12. 15).

ANTICIPATION of the FALL of BABYLON.

8. καὶ ἄλλος] And there followed another Angel, saying, "Fell, Fell, Babylon the Great," who hath given to all nations to drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornications.

Remark the aorist here, ἔπεσεν, repeated, "Fell, Fell, Babylon the Great." The English words "is fallen" do not exactly represent the Angel's prophecy. The meaning is,—though Babylon is now so great, and seems so strong, yet she fell. He foresees her fall as an event so certain that he describes it as past. On this prophetic use of the aorist, which expresses the certainty and suddenness of the fall, as if it were by a single blow, see above on ἐτελέσθη, x. 7.

There is also a peculiar significance in these words ἔπεσεν, ἔπεσεν Βαβυλὼν ἡ μεγάλη, as connecting this Apocalyptic prophecy concerning the fall of the mystical Babylon with the predictions of the Hebrew Prophets concerning the fall of the literal Babylon. Compare here Isa. xxi. 9, πέπτωκε πέπτωκε, Βαβυλών, and Jer. li. 8 = xxi. 8 in the Septuagint Version, ἔπεσε Βαβυλών. And this parallelism between Hebrew Prophecy and the Apocalypse suggests and teaches, that as certainly and as suddenly as the literal Babylon fell, so certainly and so suddenly will the mystical Babylon fall.

Babylon fell. Here is an anticipation. It is a characteristic of the Apocalypse, as it is of Hebrew Prophecy, to anticipate future events, and to speak of them as having already taken place: and afterwards to return, by way of recapitulation, and to enlarge more fully upon them. See Augustine, de Civ. Dei xx. 14, "recapitulando dicit, tanquam ad id rediens, quod distulerat;" and ibid. c. 17, in Apocalypsi Joannes, "eadem multis modis repetit." See above, Introduction, p. 148, and below, xx. 1—7, and cp. Düsterdieck, Einleitung, pp. 15—21.

Here, then, is a prophetic pre-announcement of an event which is to be described more fully hereafter—the fall of the mystical Babylon. See below, xvii. 1—18, pp. 244—247, where the question will be considered,—What City is meant by "Babylon the Great?"

It is not said here that Babylon was able to compel all nations to drink of her cup. The verb ποτίζω is used in fourteen other places of the New Testament, and in no case does the verb ποτίζω bear that meaning. The sense is, that she endeavours to make all Nations to drink of her golden cup (see xvii. 4). This cup is declared to be full of the wine of the wrath, that is, the wrath of God (cp. ἡ ὀργὴ, 1 Thess. ii. 16. Ps. lxxv. 9. Isa. li. 17. Jer. xxv. 15, 16), who, in His righteous retribution, will give to her to drink of the cup of the wine of the fierceness of His wrath (xvi. 19; cp. xiv. 10).

She is arrayed in splendid attire (xvii. 3), and professes to give them a delicious beverage from her golden chalice; but it will be found by those who drink it, to be no other than the wine of the wrath of God. And it is said to be the wrath of her fornication, because her fornication is the cause of that wrath, and because it is the object against which that wrath is directed.

On this use of the genitive, see above on Luke vi. 12, and Winer, § 30, pp. 167—169.

Some recent expositors have rendered these words, "Who hath forced the nations to drink of the wrath of her fornication;" and have interpreted the word fornication to mean "secular commerce," and "wrath" to signify the violence with which the commerce is driven forward. Such interpretations may be mentioned as indicating the results produced by the erroneous theory, that St. John is here speaking of a secular or heathen power; and as serving, among other evidences, to show the unsoundness of that theory.

WARNING against Worship of the BEAST.

9. καὶ ἄλλος] And a third Angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worshippeth the Beast and his Image, and receiveth his mark upon his forehead or upon his hand, he also shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God which is mixed undiluted into the cup of His indignation: and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone before the Lamb. And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the Beast and his Image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name.

— εἴ τις προσκυνεῖ] If any man worshippeth the Beast, he shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God.

These words contain an answer to the objections of some who allege, that the interpretation propounded above—which applies the description of the Beast to the Roman Papacy—cannot be true, inasmuch as it would involve a denial of the salvability of all who lived under it.

This objection is wholly unfounded.

The Apocalypse itself refutes such a supposition. It declares that there are some servants of God in Babylon, the city of the Beast, and that there will be some servants of God in her there even till the eve of her fall. It contains a warning to God's people to come out of her; and it is evident from this warning, that some who are in her are people of God (xviii. 4).

Many, doubtless, there are, and ever have been, under the Papacy like those of Thyatira, who are described in this book as not knowing the depths of Satan (ii. 24).

It is not till after the fall of Babylon, already anticipated in

v. 8, and now supposed to have taken place, that the solemn and awful denunciation contained in these verses (vv. 9, 10) is uttered. But that fall has not taken place yet. It is present to God, who foreknows all things. Indeed, it is so certain, that it is represented as already past (v. 8). But it is still future to us. Babylon still stands. The woe pronounced in these verses will light on those who have seen the dreadful judgments which will be executed by God on Babylon, and yet will not profit by the warning of her fall, but will persist in worshipping the Beast, even to the end. See note on v. 11.

But here a caution is necessary.

Many, doubtless, there were in former times in our own land, who had not the privilege, which we enjoy, of hearing the voice, "Come out of her, My People." They had not the warnings of the Everlasting Gospel: to them it was almost a sealed book. And this, too, is still the case with many in foreign lands. And since men's responsibilities vary with their privileges, and God judgeth men according to what they have, and not according to what they have not, therefore Christian Love, which hopeth all things, will think charitably, and if it speak at all, will not speak harshly of them.

This is true. But this is not all. What will be the lot of those who hear the voice, "Come out of her," and do not obey it? And, still more, what will be the lot of those who go in to Babylon and dwell there, when the voice from heaven says, "Come out of her, My people?"

The holy Angels are represented here as preaching the Gospel (v. 6), and announcing God's warnings to the world, especially those warnings which concern Babylon, and the power of the Beast (vv. 8, 9. 11).

Let us, therefore, take heed not to weaken the force of these divine warnings, lest we ourselves be excluded from the blessed company of the Angels. We may hope for the enjoyment of their society, if with hearts like theirs, full of love to God, and of zeal for the salvation of mankind, we announce these warnings to others, and labour and pray for those who are in need of these admonitions.

It is to be carefully observed, that in the present Chapter we are brought to the very eve of the Second Advent of Christ; see vv. 7. 14, 15. 18.

Here is another example of anticipation which is very common in the Apocalypse. If (as some have said, and even still say) the Beast, as represented here, means the Heathen Empire of Rome, and if, as some allege, Babylon means the Heathen City of Rome, then the warnings of this Chapter would be altogether irrelevant. The Heathen Empire of Rome has disappeared more than a thousand years ago, and the Heathen City of Rome is no longer Mistress of the Earth. There is not, nor has there been for ten centuries, any need of an Angel from heaven to warn the world not to worship Heathen Rome.

But there is great need of an angelic voice to warn the world not to bow down, in their Consciences, Judgments, Reasons, and Wills, to another power, whose throne is at Rome; and who exercises a potent spiritual sway in many countries of the world.

In v. 10 the wine of God's wrath is said to be mixed (κεκερασμένος), and yet to be undiluted or unmixed (ἄκρατος).

Here is an oxymoron, showing that this saying is a spiritual one, and not to be taken literally. The wine of God's wrath is mixed, because it is mingled with the bitter ingredients of His indignation; as wine among the Hebrews sometimes was mixed with drugs, for the purpose of giving it greater potency (see Ps. lxxv. 9, and on Matt. xxvii. 34). But it is also unmixed, as not being tempered with any elements of mercy; as wine among the Hebrews and other ancient nations was diluted with water. See Isa. i. 22, and cp. Jahn, Archæol. § 144.

In v. 11 οἱ προσκυνοῦντες τὸ θηρίον is a stronger expression than "those who worship the Beast:" it means those whose distinguishing characteristic is, that they are worshipping the beast, and persist in worshipping him, even to the end. On this sense of the present participle with the article, see above, v. 4, cp. vv. 12, 13.

This characteristic is so strongly marked that they are here represented as keeping it even after their death; they, who are the worshipping votaries and vassals of the Beast, they who live and die with this character stamped upon them, have no rest day or night after death.

12. ὧδε ἡ ὑπομονή] Here is the patience of the Saints: they that are the keepers of the commandments of God and of the faith of Jesus.

13.] And I heard a voice from heaven saying, Write, Blessed are the dead, they who are dying in the Lord henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow with them.

They who are the keepers of the faith of Jesus, that is, the faith taught by Jesus (see on Rom. xii. 6. Jude 3, and of which He is the object, see xii. 17), are contrasted with those who have been just described (in vv. 9 and 11), as the worshippers of the Beast and the wearers of his mark, that is, the upholders and promoters of his profession of faith. The contrast between the number of Jesus and that of the Beast has been mentioned above, on xiii. 18.

After λεγούσης in v. 13, Elz. adds μοι, but this is not in the best MSS., and is rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles.

The word ἀπάρτι, henceforth, from this time forth (see John i. 52; xiii. 19; xiv. 7), intimates that there is a special blessedness announced from heaven to those who in times of great trouble and trial remain unwavering and firm, and stand fast, keeping the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus. This mention of the faith of Jesus is a caution against the Judaistic notions of St. John's days, and reminds the reader that the Sion of the Apocalypse (see v. 1) is the Church of Jesus Christ.

Some Ancient Expositors connect ἀπάρτι with ναί. See Andreas, Primasius, Bede, and so B, and Vulg., "Amodo, jam, dicit Spiritus;" the meaning of which would be that they who depart hence in the Lord enjoy immediate blessedness after their dissolution (see on Luke xxiii. 43). But wherever ναί is used in the New Testament, it stands the first word in the sentence. Perhaps, however, this sense, in a somewhat modified form, is the true one. Blessed are they who are dying in the Lord: and then a pause is to be made, and ἀπάρτι may stand by itself, the word blessed being repeated: blessed they are even from this moment in which they are dying; the present participle being used here. Yea, saith the Spirit, blessed are they who are thus dying, that they may rest from their labours.

They (says Bede) who worship the Beast to the end never rest after their death (see v. 11), but they who die in the Lord enjoy repose and are blessed, even from the moment of their death. And so the passage is understood by A Lapide, Wolf, Ewald, De Wette, Hengstenberg, Ebrard, see Düsterdieck, p. 470. Thus this passage would indeed declare the immediate blessedness of the faithful, whose complete blessedness is hereafter declared in xix. 9, which is the consummation of this declaration (cp. Hengstenberg here). Yea, even so saith the Spirit, blessed are they who thus depart this life, not that they may perish (1 Cor. xv. 18), or pass into a place of everlasting torment (v. 10), as will be the lot of those who persist in worshipping the Beast, after the fall of Babylon, and continue worshipping him even to the end (vv. 8—11), but who go hence in order that they may rest in peace from their labours (see above, on vi. 11. Cp. Winer, p. 409), and their works are not lost, but follow with them, and will receive an eternal reward at the Great Day.

A, C have ἀναπαήσονται here, and this has been compared with the form ἑκάην from καίω (see Winer, § 15, p. 80), but there seems to be little analogy between the two. B has ἀναπαύσονται.

A, C have γὰρ before ἔργα, and so Lachmann and Tregelles; but B and the majority of Cursives have δὲ, and so Tisch., and this reading seems preferable as introducing an additional circumstance of blessedness.

Preparation for the LAST JUDGMENT.

14—16. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw, and behold a white cloud, and one sitting on the cloud like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. And another angel came out of the inner temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the season is come to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe. And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped.

One like the Son of Man is Christ (see i. 13) in His Human Nature coming to judge the world. He sitteth because He is the Judge; and He sitteth on the Cloud, which is like His judgment-seat and chariot, on which He is described as coming in glory to judgment (see Dan. vii. 13. Matt. xxiv. 30; xxvi. 64. Luke xxi. 27. Acts i. 11; above, i. 7; x. 1; and xi. 12), and this cloud is white like light, the colour of Christ (see vi. 2). And He has a golden crown of victory, as in the First Seal. See vi. 2, and Andreas here.

Hitherto we had heard the voices of the Heralds announcing the approach of their Lord, but now we see the JUDGE (Bede).

He receives a commission to reap. The commission comes through the Angel from God. The Angel is only the bearer of it. The commission comes from the ναὸς of God; that is, from the inner shrine of the heavenly Temple, from the oracle of the Heavenly Holy of Holies, in which the Godhead dwells in ineffable glory, and it comes to Christ as Son of Man. "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son, and hath given Him authority to execute judgment also because He is the Son of Man" (John v. 22. Acts x. 42; xvii. 31). And the hour appointed for the Last Judgment is determined by the FATHER. Matt. xxiv. 36. Acts i. 7.

Vision of the LAST JUDGMENT. The work of JUDGMENT is described under a double figure,

1, As a HARVEST; 2, as a VINTAGE.

The dominant idea in the metaphor of the Harvest is the ingathering of the Good: the dominant idea in the metaphor of the Vintage is the crushing of the Wicked.

The Harvest is mentioned first; and this priority shows that Christ's first desire is that all should be saved (see 1 Tim. ii. 4). The Harvest is the manifestation of God's Love in the ingathering of the Good wheat into the heavenly barn (Matt. xiii. 39). In like manner when Christ describes the transactions of the Great Day, He speaks first of the reward to them on the right hand (Matt. xxv. 34), and afterwards He pronounces the doom of those on the left hand (v. 41).

The Parable of the Tares and the Wheat is not at variance with this view; for there the whole drift of the Parable is concerning the existence of evil in the world, and in the Church: and evil is therefore put prominently forward; and the Wheat could not be reaped with the sickle, unless the Tares growing with it had been first rooted up (Matt. xiii. 30. 39. 43).

In accordance with this view of the divine desire for the salvation of all men, the work of reaping the Harvest of the good seed is here done by Christ Himself, the Son of Man (v. 14), but He executes by an Angel the work of the Vintage.

It is indeed Christ Who treads the Winepress (see xix. 15), "for all judgment is committed to Him."

The World's VINTAGE.

17—20. καὶ ἄλλος] And another angel came out of the inner temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle. And another angel came out from the altar, he that hath authority over the fire: and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the Earth: for her grapes are fully ripe. And the angel thrust in his sickle into the Earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great Winepress of the wrath of God. And the Winepress was trodden without the City: and blood came out from the Winepress, even up to the bridles of the Horses, for the space of a thousand six hundred furlongs.

In v. 18 A, C have ὁ before ἔχων, and so Lach., Tisch. Elz. omits it. In v. 19 A, B, C have τὸν μέγαν, and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles; and some of the old Commentators (e. g. Primasius) have remarked on this singular combination of a masculine adjective with a feminine substantive. Cp. Winer, § 59, p. 466. If the reading is correct, perhaps this is another specimen of the practice of the writer of the Apocalypse endeavouring to stimulate the attention of the reader to things and persons of unparalleled grandeur and sublimity by bold solecisms (see above, i. 4). The substantive ληνὸς is feminine, but his view of it, as here used, may be, that a feminine adjective would be too weak to describe its awful fury: and that the exceeding terror of the winepress of the wrath of God may best be described by a combination at variance with ordinary human utterances concerning the things of this lower world. Even in heathen Poets we find something of the same anomalous combination, e. g. in Æschyl. Eumen. 551, Wellauer; Agam. 545, Blomf. Eurip. Hippol. 387. Pindar, Olymp. vi. 23, Heyne. Cp. Matt. G. G. § 436. There was something of the same δεινότης in the acclamation "Moriamur pro rege nostro Mariâ Theresâ."

The casting of Grapes into a Winepress, and the act of treading them under the feet, so that the juice flows out of them in purple streams, is emblematic in Holy Scripture of destruction of Enemies in battle, with great carnage (Isa. xvii. 6. Jer. xlix. 9. Lam. i. 15). It is especially descriptive of the Last Judgment to be executed by Christ. For He in His own Death and Passion poured out His own blood in the Winepress of God's fury against the Sin of the World, and thus He was a Saviour and a Redeemer of all, before He became their Judge. But when the Day of grace and salvation is past, and the Day of Doom is come, and the season of the World's Vintage, then He will tread all His enemies under His feet (1 Cor. xv. 25. 27) with the same ease as the treader of grapes in a Winepress tramples the ripe, luscious fruit; He will trample them in the great Winepress of the wrath of God. Compare the prophecy of Isaiah (lxiii. 1—6), where the two ideas above expressed are combined in one picture; and see Joel iii. 9. 13, where the imagery of the Vintage is used to describe the Judgment of God.

This judgment and destruction of His Enemies will be universal. None will escape. The blood is therefore described as flowing from the Winepress for 16,000 furlongs, i. e. 4×4000, which is symbolical of all space,—"per quatuor omnis mundi partes," says Primasius. See above, on ch. xi. at end.

On the use of ἀπὸ here, to signify distance, see on John xi. 18; xxi. 8.

The Winepress is trodden from without the City: for no unclean thing can enter into the City, the Holy City (xxi. 27; xxii. 15). Elz. has ἔξω here; but A, B, C have ἔξωθεν, and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles.

The blood is said to reach up to the bridles of the Horses. This mention of Horses, in connexion with the Winepress, may at first cause surprise. But it serves an important purpose. It is doubtless designed to show, that the words are to be understood figuratively and not literally: a purpose which is also answered by the combination of a sickle with the vintage (v. 18). And the Horses are mentioned here, in order to connect this prophecy of Christ's Triumph over His enemies with the vision of His Victories on the White Horse revealed in the first Seal (vi. 2), and with His final conquest in xix. 11—14, where He is described as "riding on the White Horse, and His Armies follow Him on White Horses, and He has a vesture dipped in blood, and He treadeth the Winepress of the fierceness and wrath of the Almighty; and He hath on His vesture His name written, KING of KINGS, and LORD of LORDS." Observe the combination of the Winepress with the Horses in that Vision, as here.

CH. XV. 1. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvellous, seven angels, having seven plagues, which are the last, for in them is finished the wrath of God.

St. John, having been brought, in the foregoing chapter, to the eve of the Day of Judgment, now re-ascends, as usual, to an earlier point in the Prophecy; and enlarges on the judicial chastisements to be inflicted on the Empire of the Beast.

Those chastisements are called the Seven last Plagues, or SEVEN VIALS (see v. 5, and xvi. 1).

The plagues which are to be poured out upon the Empire of the Beast are called the last, for in them is filled up the wrath of God.

Here is another Evidence that the Empire of the Beast is a Power that will endure to the eve of the end; and cannot be (as some have imagined) the Heathen Empire of Rome.

The aorist ἐτελέσθη (literally, was finished) is the prophetic aorist, which speaks of a thing foreseen and decreed by God as already done. See above, note on ἐτελέσθη, x. 7.

ANTICIPATIONS, continued and expanded, of the future VICTORY of the Faithful over the Power of the Beast.

2. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire, and those who come forth conquering from the Beast and his image, and the number of his name, standing on the sea of glass, having harps of God. And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, O Lord God the Almighty: righteous and true are thy ways, thou King of the Nations. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all the nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments were made manifest.

St. John sees a sea of glass mingled with fire. Here is an allusion to the deliverance of the Israelites from the captivity of Egypt, and to the Divine retribution executed on the enemies of the ancient People of God. The fire is the emblem of Judgment. The sea which St. John beholds calls to mind the Red Sea which overwhelmed God's foes with its waves, but which is not a tumultuous element to His faithful servants, but a placid sea of glass, like the crystal sea in Heaven described above, iv. 6.

Standing on its shore are seen those who come forth conquerors out of the bondage of the Beast, that is, those who are delivered from his sway, as the Israelites were in their Exodus from the land of Pharaoh, and from the house of bondage, and who emerged in triumph from the waters of the Red Sea. This is the idea expressed in the phrase τοὺς νικῶντας ἐκ, a very significant phrase, as showing that their victory consisted in deliverance from the Dominion under which they had been enslaved, and from the dangers by which they were compassed. Compare the phrase μετανοεῖν ἐκ, ii. 21, 22; ix. 20, 21; xvi. 11; and cp. Ps. xviii. 21, "Thou hast heard me out of the horns of the unicorns," and Winer, § 47, p. 329.

Observe the use of the participle with the article, τοὺς νικῶντας, literally, the conquering ones, those who conquer, and continue conquering; and are presented to the view as ever conquering, inasmuch as the fruits of their victory are everlasting. See above, on xiv. 4, οἱ ἀκολουθοῦντες τῷ ἀρνίῳ.

The κιθάραι τοῦ Θεοῦ, harps of God, are those which sing His praise, and are dedicated wholly to that purpose. Cp. v. 8; xiv. 2.

Here is comfort to the Churches of England, Ireland, America, and others which have been delivered from the bondage of the Papacy. There is also admonition to them in this prophetic Vision. Let them stand, as it were, on the sea-shore, as the Israelites did on the Eastern side of the Red Sea, and let them praise God for their deliverance. Let them have harps of God in their hands, and sing the song of Moses the servant of God, as the ancient Church did after its Exodus (Exod. xv. 1. 6. 13), and as Moses did on that occasion and at the close of his life (Deut. xxxiii.), and let them sing the song of the Lamb, for they overcame by the blood of the Lamb, and by the Word of their testimony (xii. 11). In other words, let them not be content with having renounced the errors of the Papal Egypt, but let them hold fast the true faith. Let them offer a pure and holy service to God; let them sing with their hearts, and in their lives, a perpetual song of love and obedience to Him and to the Lamb.

On the form of the adjective, ὑαλινὸς, of glass, see above, note on 1 Cor. iii. 1. Winer, § 16, p. 89.

In v. 2 Elz. has ἐκ τοῦ χαράγματος αὐτοῦ after εἰκόνος αὐτοῦ καὶ, but those words are not in A, B, C, and have been rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles.

Also Elz. has ἁγίων, of saints, at the end of v. 3, but ἐθνῶν, of Nations, is the reading of A, B. Compare Jer. x. 7. And this reading has been received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles. C has αἰώνων, but this (as Tregelles has observed) is only a slight variation from ἐθνῶν, arising from the similarity of sounds of αι and ε in the ancient pronunciation—still maintained in Greece—and from the likeness of the letters Θ and Ω.

Remark, that God is here praised as King of Nations. He judges Nations as well as Individuals, and in the last days His Divine Judgments will be more and more manifest, because Nations will have no national existence in the next world, and therefore Nations must expect to be judged in this world. Let Nations therefore take warning from this prophecy.

v. 4. "Thou only art holy." ὅσιος.

The God whom Christians worship is the only God who is ὅσιος, holy: the deities of the heathen are unholy. Even their worshippers represent them as actuated by evil passions, such as σε, Κύριε, καὶ δοξάσει τὸ ὄνομά σου; ὅτι μόνος ὅσιος· ὅτι πάντα τὰ ἔθνη ἥξουσι καὶ προσκυνήσουσιν ἐνώπιόν σου, ὅτι τὰ δικαιώματά σου ἐφανερώθησαν.

Preparation for the pouring out of the SEVEN VIALS on the Empire of the Beast.

5. καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα] And after this I saw, and the inner-temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened: And the seven Angels came out of the inner-temple, who have the seven plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles. And one of the four Living Creatures gave unto the seven Angels seven golden Vials full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever. And the inner-temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from His power; and no man was able to enter into the inner-temple, till the seven plagues of the seven Angels should have been finished.

The place from which the seven Angels who have the seven plagues come forth is the ναὸς, the inner-temple in which God dwells (ναίει). See on xi. 1, 2, and on 2 Thess. ii. 4.

It is called the sanctuary of the tabernacle of the testimony, because the testimony (μαρτύριον) was in the Holy of Holies in the Levitical Temple; and it bare witness to, and was typical of, the offering to be made by Christ, the Great High Priest, in the true heavenly Holy of Holies, before the Mercy-seat of God. See above, note on 1 Tim. ii. 6.

The seven Angels come forth from the Heavenly Holy of Holies, the throne of God's majesty and mercy, and the sanctuary in which Christ is ever offering prayer, and in which the testimony of His Love is enshrined, and they are arrayed in pure, bright linen garments, and with golden girdles about their breasts, v. 6; that is, they are arrayed in the attire of Priests of the heavenly temple (see above, i. 13; and cp. Exod. xxviii. 6. 8); and one of the four Evangelical Living Creatures (see above, iv. 6) gives them their instruments of vengeance.

These instruments are called Vials, or rather sacred bowls, for sacrificial purposes (see above on v. 8, and below, xvi. 1), showing that the office which these seven Angels are commissioned to execute is a sacred one. They are not swayed by the impulse of human passion in undertaking it; it is a sacerdotal office, a religious function, discharged in obedience to God's command, issuing from His heavenly throne, and for the vindication of His honour and service, and for retribution on His enemies, who have despised and disobeyed the Law of His testimony. It also calls to mind, that the destruction of those who impiously rebel against God, is, as the Hebrew Prophets represent it, like a great sacrifice (cp. Isa. xxxiv. 6; lxiii. 1. Jer. xlv. 10. 18. Zeph. i. 7; cp. above, James v. 5; below, xix. 17), and that it is a consequence of the prayers of the Church for deliverance, and of Christ the Mediator and Advocate, the King and Judge of all.

In this respect, as in others, which will be noted hereafter, the VIALS which are poured out upon a particular form of hostility to God, bear a striking resemblance to the TRUMPETS, which announce God's Judgments generally against the wicked. The VIALS are to the Empire of the Beast, what the TRUMPETS are to the whole body of God's enemies, with this difference, that the Trumpets announced Judgments, the Vials execute them. Cp. on viii. 2—6.

v. 8. The smoke in the inner-temple is like a prelude to the breaking forth of the fire of God's wrath. It is the warning of coming judgments now to be described. Cp. Exod. xix. 18. Isa. vi. 4. Heb. xii. 18.

No one could enter the Inner-Temple on account of the Divine presence in the manifestation of the Divine indignation. Cp. Exod. xl. 34, 35, where Moses is not able to enter the Tabernacle; and 1 Kings viii. 10, where no one could stand to minister because of the cloud. If that was the case in consequence of the cloud, which was not an evidence of anger, how much more would it be here, by reason of the smoke, which is a precursor of the outbreak of the fiery indignation of GOD!

The SEVEN VIALS.

CH. XVI. 1—10. καὶ ἤκουσα] And I heard a great voice out of the inner-temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God into the earth.

And the first went his way and poured out his vial into the earth; and there came a noisome and grievous boil upon the men which have the mark of the Beast, and upon them which worship his image.

And the second poured out his vial into the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every soul alive died, —those that were in the sea.

And the third poured out his vial into the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood. And I heard the angel of the waters say, Righteous art Thou, O Lord, which art, and wast, holy art Thou, because Thou didst judge thus. For they poured out the blood of saints and prophets, and Thou hast given them blood to drink; they are worthy. And I heard the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are Thy judgments.

And the fourth poured out his vial upon the sun; and it was given unto him to scorch men with fire. And men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, who hath the authority over these plagues: and they repented not to give Him glory.

And the fifth poured out his vial upon the throne of the beast; and his kingdom was filled with darkness; and they were gnawing their tongues for the pain, and they blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds.

The same imagery is preserved as in the preceding chapter; the scenery is derived from Egypt; and the Empire of the Beast is scourged by Plagues, like those which fell on Pharaoh and his people.

These Plagues are poured forth from VIALS.

To understand the full meaning of the word Vials, we must refer to the history of the Egyptian plagues.

"The Lord said unto Moses and Aaron, Take to you ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle it toward the heaven in the sight of Pharaoh; and it shall become small dust in all the land of Egypt, and shall be a boil breaking forth with blains upon man and upon beast, throughout all the land of Egypt. And they did so. And the Magicians could not stand before Moses because of the boils; for the boils were upon the Magicians, and upon all the house of Pharaoh." (Exod. ix. 8—11.)

One of the Egyptian plagues was a boil on the Egyptians, even on the Magicians and house of Pharaoh; and the first of these Seven Plagues of the Apocalypse is a boil upon all who have the mark of the Beast.

The word used by St. John to describe this plague is ἕλκος, the same word as used by the LXX in the Books of Moses to describe the plague on the Egyptians. See Exod. ix. 10, 11. Deut. xxviii. 27. 35.

In Egypt the action was performed by Moses and Aaron the a Exod. 9. 9—11. ch. 13. 14, 16, 17.

2 [a] Καὶ ἀπῆλθεν ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ἐξέχεε τὴν φιάλην αὐτοῦ εἰς τὴν γῆν· καὶ ἐγένετο ἕλκος κακὸν καὶ πονηρὸν ἐπὶ τοὺς ἀνθρώπους τοὺς ἔχοντας τὸ χάραγμα τοῦ θηρίου, καὶ τοὺς προσκυνοῦντας τῇ εἰκόνι αὐτοῦ.

b Exod. 7. 17, 20. ch. 8. 8, 9.

3 [b] Καὶ ὁ δεύτερος ἐξέχεε τὴν φιάλην αὐτοῦ εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν· καὶ ἐγένετο αἷμα ὡς νεκροῦ· καὶ πᾶσα ψυχὴ ζῶσα ἀπέθανεν, τὰ ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ.

Priest with common fire from the furnace; but here the plagues are poured forth by Angel Priests with φιάλαι, VIALS. This word, as was before observed (v. 8), is not to be understood in its common English acceptation. It does not signify a bottle, but a bowl-like dish. It is a word borrowed from the Temple-Worship, and describes the sacred bowls, in which the aromatic incense, that was lighted by coals taken from the great brazen altar of sacrifice, which stood in the outer court of the Temple, was offered on the Golden Altar, which stood in the inner court or Holy Place, before the Veil.

The Vials, then, are sacred Vessels. The incense now contained in them is called the Wrath of God; and there is a contrast between φιάλη γέμουσα θυμοῦ, and φιάλη γέμουσα θυμιαμάτων. (Rev. v. 8.) The former, instead of containing θυμίαμα, incense, contains θυμὸς, wrath, burning like fire. We have, in English, a parallel to this, in our word incensed.

The incense of God's wrath is poured out by Angel-Ministers coming forth from the heavenly oracle; and it is poured forth on the power of the Beast, on which the Harlot City, Babylon the Great, sits enthroned. (Rev. xvii. 3. 7. 18.)

The act of pouring forth had already been used in Hebrew Prophecy as an image descriptive of the execution of Judgments from heaven (see Ps. lxxix. 6. Zeph. iii. 8); and it exhibits, in a striking manner, the ease with which the Almighty Ruler of the World, the King of Nations (xv. 3), punishes the most powerful Kingdoms of the Earth. He pours out upon them some of the ingredients of the cup of His wrath, and forthwith they are destroyed thereby.

The sixth plague of Egypt—that of the boils—is the first plague here. The reason of which (as Dr. Lightfoot has suggested) seems to be, that the sixth plague of Egypt was on its false Teachers, the Magicians; and they could not stand before Moses (see Exod. ix. 11); and the Empire, on which these Apocalyptic Plagues are poured, is not only a temporal Power, but a spiritual Empire.

The Vessels here used as instruments of punishments are holy Vessels, filled with coals from God's altar, by ministering Angels in priestly attire; and, according to that adaptation and adjustment which usually subsist between divine punishments and the human sins which are punished, the sacred Vials are poured out by Angel Priests, coming forth from the heavenly Church, upon an hierarchical Empire, for spiritual sins.

Vials are holy Vessels, and the use of Vials in the execution of Vengeance, represents the change of instruments of blessing into weapons of chastisement. It exhibits a solemn warning, a moral lesson, and spiritual admonition. Wherever means of grace are not duly used, they recoil on those to whom they have been offered, and become means of punishment. These Vials represent blessings changed into banes. The greater the gifts of God are to a Church, the more fierce will be His wrath against her, if she abuse them. "Now, O ye Priests," says God by Malachi (ii. 1), "the commandment is for you, If ye will not hear to give glory to My Name, I will send My curse upon you, and will curse your blessings."

"Thanks be to God," says St. Paul, "Who always leads us in triumph in Christ and maketh manifest the savour (or odour, rather) of His knowledge in every place. For we are a sweet savour (or perfume, rather) of Christ in them that are saved, and in them that perish. To the one we are a savour (odour) of death unto death; to the other a savour (odour) of life unto life. And who is sufficient for these things? For we are not as the many who corrupt the Word of God." (2 Cor. ii. 14—16.)

The Apostles of Christ, who dispense the Word and Sacraments in truth and godly sincerity (2 Cor. ii. 17) in His name Who gave Himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God, for a sweet-smelling savour (Eph. v. 2), are like the Priests of the Temple offering sweet incense to God on the altar of His Sanctuary, which oblation is acceptable to Him in Christ, "Who has entered within the Veil" (Heb. vi. 19); and this Ministry of Apostles, and Apostolic men, is a sweet-smelling odour to Life Eternal for all who gladly receive what they deliver.

But, if a Church adulterates the Word and Sacraments, the aromatic incense of their spiritual censers fills up the Vials of God's wrath, and instead of ascending into Heaven in fragrant clouds, it descends upon her in fiery streams. The blessings of His Word and Sacraments become Plagues. Scripture becomes a Scourge, and the Word a Woe. They are an odour of death unto death.

All the Vials are poured into (εἰς) the earth; and yet one of them, especially, is described as poured into the earth (v. 2), and another is poured into the sea (v. 3), and another into the rivers (v. 4), and another upon the sun (v. 8). All are poured from heaven downward into the lower earthly region; and each is poured upon special objects in that lower region.

Observe also the change in the use of the preposition prefixed to the several objects of the seven Vials. The first three Vials are poured εἰς, or into: i. e. into the earth; into the sea; into the rivers. The last four Vials are poured ἐπὶ, or upon, with an accusative; i. e. upon the sun; upon the Throne of the Beast; upon the river Euphrates; upon the air (ἀέρα).

The former preposition (εἰς, into) seems to denote infusion into and admixture with the object of punishment; the latter (ἐπὶ, upon) seems to denote the Divine dominion over the object which has exalted itself against God, and to indicate His Majesty and Vengeance triumphing and treading upon it.

Remark also that the VIALS are represented as poured out successively, without any such interruptions or episodes as occur in the series of the TRUMPETS. They all concern the same Empire, that of the Beast, and this consecutive and continuous character seems to represent the regularity and celerity with which the Divine Judgments will be inflicted upon it.

The FIRST VIAL is poured into (εἰς) the earth, as the First Trumpet ushered in a Judgment on the earth: and there comes a boil (ἕλκος, ulcus, ulcer), sore and grievous, upon the men who have the mark of the Beast and worship his image.

This plague sent into the Earth is directed against that carnal, earthly element, which is opposed to the spiritual and heavenly. See i. 7; iii. 10; xiii. 12. It is upon men's persons, and represents something loathsome, as well as painful.

Before we enter on the exposition of this and the following Vials, it is requisite to premise, that, although even now, at the present time, the state of Europe exhibits some striking evidences of the fulfilment of these Visions of the Vials, yet it is probable that what we now see is only a portion of the evidence; and is like a prelude and specimen of what will be more fully developed in later times; as may be inferred from their name, "the last plagues."

The contempt of God's Holy Word has already brought forth many foul boils, and blotches, and eruptions upon those who are subject to the Papacy. Almighty God, in His Word, condemns those who forbid to marry (1 Tim. iv. 3); St. Peter,—whom the Popes profess to succeed, and on whom they build their claims,—was a married man (Mark i. 30), and had his wife with him in his Apostolic journeys (1 Cor. ix. 5); and St. Paul gives precepts concerning the wives and children of the Clergy (1 Tim. iii. 1—5. 12).

But, in defiance of this divine warning, example, and doctrine, the Papacy has enforced celibacy on her ecclesiastics for nearly a thousand years. This enforcement has engendered many impurities both of body and soul. Cp. Gieseler, Eccl. Hist., Third Period, § 65.

Again; the Papacy claims to dispense with the Law of God in Matrimonial causes, and to supersede the degrees of consanguinity and affinity, which are set forth in the Word of God, and thus many unholy and incestuous Marriages have been contracted under its sanction, which have entailed a miserable inheritance of imbecility and ignominy on many princely houses. Evidence of this may be seen in Sandys, Europæ Speculum, p. 41, ed. 1673.

Further; the ministry of the Confessional familiarizes the Romish Priesthood and People with thoughts and actions which ought to be veiled in silence, and mars that modest delicacy of feeling which is one of the best safeguards of virtue. It provides a ready expiation for gross sin; and the doctrines of the Casuists,—such as Liguori and others,—who have devised ease for the troubled conscience, by subtle equivocations and mental reservations, have produced foul sores on the social and domestic constitution of Nations subject to the Papacy, and especially on the Hierarchical body; sores visible to all, and like penal retributions for the neglect of those precepts of Chastity, and motives to purity, which are supplied in God's Word and Sacraments.

The Vials of His wrath for this desecration of Holy Things have been poured on the Papal Empire, and have produced a loathsome disease like the boils of Egypt.

The Second Vial.

In v. 3 the Second Vial is poured into the Sea; and it becomes blood, as of a dead man; as in the Second Trumpet (viii. 8), and every soul alive died,—the things that were in the sea.

This is explained by another passage in the Apocalypse. The Woman who is enthroned on the Beast, is said to sit upon many waters (xvii. 1), and the waters where the Harlot sitteth, are explained to mean Peoples, and Multitudes, and Nations, and Tongues (xvii. 15).

These are now described as a Sea.

The Sea in the Apocalypse represents Nations in a restless state, tossed about by winds and storms of passion, like the Sea to which the wicked are compared by Isaiah, "the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt; there is no peace, saith my God, for the wicked" (Isa. lvii. 20, 21).

The language of this Vial may be illustrated by the description in chap. viii. 9, ἀπέθανε τὸ τρίτον τῶν κτισμάτων τῶν ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ, τὰ ἔχοντα ψυχάς, where see the note.

The sense of the word ψυχὴ here appears to be the same as there, and to designate the carnal mind; and the word ζῶσα, living, is added to show that, while alive in name, they are in fact dead. They are like the Church of Sardis described above, chap. iii. 1, "Thou hast a name that thou livest, and thou art dead" (νεκρός).

The carnally-minded widow "is dead while she is living" (ζῶσα τέθνηκε, 1 Tim. v. 6). These passages supply the best comment on the present one. A, C have ζωῆς here, but this reading may be ascribed to want of perception of the oxymoron in ζῶσα ἀπέθανε, supposed to be a contradiction. However, if ζωῆς is the true reading,—and it derives some authority from ψυχὴ ζωῆς in Gen. i. 30, and it is received by Lachmann and Tisch.,—it will make little difference in the sense. Cp. Winer, § 30, p. 169.

There is also a peculiar significance in the neuter here, τὰ, namely, the things in the sea; intimating that carnal minds lose the genuine properties of men, and are merely like inanimate things, and become κτίσματα, creatures, as they are called in the parallel place above in viii. 9, which happily illustrates the meaning here; see the note there. Elz. omits τὰ, but it is in A, C, and is restored by Lach., Tisch., Tregelles. The reading τὰ is also confirmed (as Hengstenberg has observed) by the parallel passage in the Septuagint concerning the Egyptian plague of blood, Exod. vii. 20, 21.

An important lesson and practical religious truth may be derived from this passage. A life tossed about in the restless sea of popular passions, and agitated by the fickle winds and waves of popular tumults, may appear to the world to be full of energy; but it is not life; it is not worthy of that name; it ought rather to be called death. And they who pass their lives in such a tempestuous element, and are swayed to and fro by it, forfeit the genuine characteristic of independent men; they lose the masculine vigour of true Christians (cp. xii. 5); they become things, —the sport and laughing-stock of the veering gale.

The Third Vial.

v. 4. The third Vial is poured into the rivers and the wells of water, and they become blood.

Here also is a parallel to the plagues of Egypt. Exod. vii. 19, 20. Ps. lxxviii. 44, and compare above, the third Trumpet, viii. 10, 11.

The rivers and wells are the channels and springs of the prosperity and health of the Power which is here punished.

The prophecy contained in this Vial has also already been in part fulfilled. It foretold calamities to be inflicted on the resources of the Papacy; and announced that those very things which were once tributary to it, and supplied it with the means of greatness, would be turned against it, and become occasions and instruments of its suffering and shame.

This may be applied to the traffic of the Papacy in Indulgences, and Legendary Fables, and Miracles, which were for many centuries like wells and rivers of wealth to the See of Rome; but which became the sources of her weakness, by opening the eyes of Nations to the fraudulent cheats and impostures practised by her, and by arousing their indignation against her. See the evidence in Gieseler, Eccl. History, Third Period, Division iv. chap. vi. and viii.

In v. 4 A has ἐγένοντο: in v. 5 Beza and Elz. 1633, have ὁ ἐσόμενος, but this has little, if any, MS. authority.

The pouring out of this Vial, by which the rivers and wells are said to be changed into blood, is declared to be due to the sins of those who are punished, in pouring out the blood of Saints and Prophets; that is, of holy men, especially preachers of the Gospel. See xi. 3. 10.

In v. 7 we read, "I heard the Altar saying, Yea, O Lord, the God, the Almighty."—The Altar speaks. Such is the reading of the best MSS. received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles; and so the words are interpreted by Bengel, De Wette, and Düsterdieck. The reading ἄλλου, alterius, seems to be due to Latinizing MSS., and to be a repetition of altaris. The Altar speaks: for it is God's Altar; and this is in harmony with the general tone of the Apocalypse, in which the things of the Living God are themselves endued with life. Thus the Gospels are ζῶα, living creatures (iv. 6). The Altar speaks, as the Blood of Abel is said to cry (Gen. iv. 10; cp. Heb. xii. 24), and the Stones of Jerusalem to cry out (Luke xix. 40). The Altar speaks, because the souls of the Martyrs, who had been slain by the Beast, are described as Victims whose blood has been poured out upon God's Altar (see above, vi. 9, and 2 Tim. iv. 6). The Altar itself, though typified by what was of stone and brass, yet, inasmuch as it is a heavenly Altar, and an Altar of God, is beautifully represented as feeling compassion for the sufferings of His Martyrs, and as rejoicing in the vindication of God's honour by the execution of His judgments on those who had slain His servants.

The sublime address of the Prophet of Judah to the Altar of Jeroboam, "O Altar! Altar!" (1 Kings xiii. 2,) is conceived in the same spirit of poetic beauty, and oratorical vehemence, which is characteristic of Hebrew Prophecy, and which often finds utterance in the Apocalypse, and makes it to be one of the noblest Poems, as well as sublimest Prophecies, that have ever been given to the world.

The Fourth Vial.

v. 8. The Fourth Vial is poured upon (ἐπὶ) the Sun; and the Sun scorches the men (that is, the men of this Empire; cp. vv. 2. 21, and above, ix. 4. 10, "the men who had not the Seal of God") with fire; and they blaspheme the name of God.

On the accusative καῦμα see Luke xii. 47. Winer, § 32, p. 204.

Observe the change of preposition here. The first three Vials are poured into (εἰς) the elements, &c., which are the objects and instruments of punishment; the last four are poured upon them. See above on v. 1.

The verb ἐδόθη, "it was given," does not intimate any benefit bestowed upon the recipient, but it intimates that all these penal results are due to the permission of God. Cp. the use of ἐδόθη in vi. 4. 8; ix. 1. 3. 5.

The objects, upon which the Vials are poured out, are elements and powers of the Empire of the Beast.

The Sun is the glory of that Empire, that which dazzled men with its brilliance. The Sun is here represented as scorching men by its heat. This image is derived from the history of the Exodus, and of the pilgrimage in the wilderness, when the people of God were sheltered from the sun's glare by the pillar of cloud by day, Exod. xiii. 21, 22; xl. 38. Numb. xiv. 14. And it is a figure frequently occurring in Hebrew prophecy (as Isa. iv. 6; καυματίσαι τοὺς ἀνθρώπους ἐν πυρί· 9 [f] καὶ ἐκαυματίσθησαν οἱ ἄνθρωποι καῦμα μέγα· καὶ ἐβλασφήμησαν τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ἔχοντος τὴν ἐξουσίαν ἐπὶ τὰς πληγὰς ταύτας· καὶ οὐ μετενόησαν δοῦναι αὐτῷ δόξαν.

This prophecy also has been partly accomplished already.

The temporal splendour of the Papacy has already had an effect similar to that which is here described. The earthly grandeur of the Romish Hierarchy, its profuse expenditure in pompous pageantries, and in sumptuous edifices, its prodigal profusion in the aggrandizement of Papal families, and in their luxurious affluence of Palaces, Equipages, Pictures, Statues, Demesnes, and Gardens, have made themselves felt by those under its sway, in galling exactions, and oppressive burdens entailed upon them for the maintenance of the solar splendour of that brilliant magnificence. The meridian glory of this Spiritual Empire has scorched the people of the Romagna and of Italy by the glare of its rays.

The provision of revenues for the erection and decoration of the Church of St. Peter at Rome by means of a shameless sale of Pardons and Indulgences, may be cited as one example among many of the manner in which the grandeur of Papal Rome has been created and supported; and its traffic in Bulls, Dispensations, and the levy of Annates and First-fruits, and Peter-Pence, and other onerous imposts, and the simoniacal sale of Ecclesiastical Preferments, in all countries under its sway; and the burdensome taxation of those under its temporal monarchy, have been like parching heat, withering the herbage and exhausting the resources of the soil.

The historical proofs which substantiate these statements are open to all. A summary of them may be seen in Isaac Casaubon's Dedication to his Exercitationes Anti-Baronianæ, p. 9. Sir R. Twysden's Vindication, chap, iv. Dr. Inett's Origines, ii. pp. 488—503, and Gieseler, Eccl. Hist., Third Period, Division iii. ch. i. § 55. 84. 103. 105, who thus speaks (in § 103): "All kinds of Church-oppression, which, when essayed by temporal Princes, had been resisted by the Papacy, were now practised in a greater degree by the Papacy itself."

The consequences of this parching heat may be described in the words of St. John (v. 9); "the men blasphemed the name of God; and they did not repent to give Him the glory."

This unhappy result has been already displayed to the world.

The usurpations and corruptions of the Papacy have already produced a baneful harvest of Infidelity and Blasphemy.

Men, seeing and feeling in their own persons that evil practices are promoted and enforced under spiritual sanctions, and with spiritual penalties, by a Christian Government, even by the Government of one who calls himself the Head of the Church and the Vicar of Christ upon Earth; and not being acquainted with any other form of Christianity than that which presents itself too often before them as a minister of superstition and imposture, tyranny, and wrong, have been led to identify Christianity with Papal corruptions and usurpations, and have been goaded on by a spirit of vindictive resentment and indignation to blaspheme the Gospel itself, as if it were the cause of their sufferings. One of the worst evils produced by the fanaticism, fraud, and oppression practised by the Papacy, is this; that it has estranged whole Nations from Religion, and has driven them by a reckless recoil and desperate reaction into Infidelity; and has thus prepared the way for some future terrible outbreak of anarchical rebellion against all lawful authority, and even for an impious insurrection against Christ Himself.

The Fifth Vial.

v. 10. The fifth Vial is poured upon the throne of the Beast; and his kingdom is darkened.

Here is another reference to the plagues of Egypt, that of the "darkness that could be felt." (Exod. x. 21. Cp. Ps. cv. 28. Wisd. xvii. 21.)

They did not repent from their deeds; but their hearts were hardened—like that of Pharaoh. Exod. x. 27.

They were biting their tongues for the pain. On the use of ἐκ see viii. 13 above; ix. 21. Acts xxviii. 3. Winer, § 47, p. 329.

The Sixth Vial.

12. καὶ ὁ ἕκτος] And the sixth poured out his vial upon that great river, the Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the Way might be prepared of the Kings who come from the sunrising.

The mention of the Euphrates reminds us that the Vision concerns the Power which sits upon the Beast, and is the mystical Babylon, xvii. (1—5.)

What is its Euphrates?

In the Apocalypse, Babylon is not the literal city; and Euphrates, the river of Babylon, is to be understood spiritually. See note above on ix. 14, p. 205.

There is an allusion here to the manner in which the literal or Assyrian Babylon was taken; namely, by the drying up of its great River, the River Euphrates.

It has been said, indeed, by some learned persons (e. g. Hengstenberg) that the Apocalypse does not derive any of its imagery from events related by Heathen writers, such as Herodotus and Xenophon, who describe the taking of Babylon by Cyrus, when he had drained the Euphrates from its bed, and made for his army a passage by the dry channel into the city.

This may be true; but it is to be remembered, that the drying up of the Euphrates by Cyrus, as a preparation for the capture of Babylon, is not only described by heathen historians, Herodotus (i. 190), and Xenophon (Cyrop. vii. 5), but was also predicted by the Holy Spirit Himself, speaking by the mouth of the Hebrew Prophets, Isaiah (xliv. 27) and Jeremiah (l. 38; li. 36).

It cannot reasonably be doubted, that St. John here refers to that circumstance; and this reference to the means which led to the capture of the literal Babylon, has been rightly recognized by the ancient Expositors: e. g. Haymo, who says, "Euphrates quippe fluvius Babyloniæ est; Medi et Persæ hunc diviserunt fluvium, et per ejus alveum ingressi sunt Babyloniam."

The glory and strength of the literal Babylon was the Euphrates; and its channel was made dry by Cyrus, and so Babylon was taken.

The glory and strength of the mystical Babylon is her Supremacy, spiritual and secular, which have blended their streams in a swelling and navigable flood; by which her ships have gone forth, like those of a Merchant City, and riches have flowed into her bosom from all nations of the earth.

Accordingly, an Expositor of the Apocalypse, who lived in the fourteenth century, Peter Olivi, thus speaks, "The Primacy of the Pope, and the multitude of those who are subject to him, are, as it were, a River Euphrates, which hinders the passage of the Kings of the East;" and obstructs the expeditions of those who desire to see the Evangelical restoration of the Christian Church. See Baluzii Miscell. i. p. 213, sqq. The tide of this Papal Euphrates, which has long impeded the march of the Kings of the East, is already ebbing, and will one day be dried up, and open a way for them.

What is this Way?

In Scripture language "the way" is the "Way of God;" the "Way of Salvation." See above, Acts ix. 2; xvi. 17; xix. 9. 23; xxii. 4; xxiv. 14. 22.

Who are the Kings of the East?

The expression is figurative, and to be understood spiritually. The words rendered Kings from the East are οἱ βασιλεῖς οἱ ἀπὸ ἀνατολῆς ἡλίου: that is, the Kings from the rising of the Sun.

The Sun here is Christ. He is "the Sun of Righteousness rising with healing on His wings" (Mal. iv. 2). "He is the Day-spring (Ἀνατολὴ) from on high" (see on Luke i. 78, cp. Zech. iii. 8; vi. 12, where Christ is called Ἀνατολὴ in LXX).

In the Apocalypse the Church is clothed with the Sun, xii. 1, that is, with Christ; and the Angel who seals the elect comes from the rising of the Sun, vii. 2; and Christ says, "I Jesus am the bright and Morning Star," xxii. 16; cp. ii. 28.

The above interpretation is given by the ancient Expositors. See Aug.?, Bede, Haymo, and others. The words of Bede are

Εὐφράτην· καὶ ἐξηράνθη τὸ ὕδωρ αὐτοῦ, ἵνα ἑτοιμασθῇ ἡ ὁδὸς τῶν βασιλέων τῶν ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν ἡλίου. 13 [k] Καὶ εἶδον ἐκ τοῦ στόματος τοῦ δράκοντος, καὶ ἐκ k 1 John 4. 1, 3. ch. 12. 3, 9. & 19. 20. & 20. 10.

"The saints are the Kings of the East, whose way is made open by the drying up of the Euphrates."

The reference here made to the capture of the literal Babylon, as prefiguring the fall of the mystical Babylon, is fraught with practical instruction at the present time.

(1) Some persons may now be in danger of being deluded by the confident language and bearing of Rome. They may imagine that a cause pursued with such sanguine reliance must be good. But let them remember the parallel—Babylon. Its streets echoed with music; its halls resounded with mirth and revelry; the king's guards were intoxicated at the gates of the city and at the very doors of the palace, and the vessels of God were on the table at the royal banquet, when the fingers of a man's hand came forth from the wall,—and Babylon fell. See Dan. v. 5, and Isa. xxi. compared with Xenophon, Cyrop. vii. 5.

So it may be with the Papacy. It may be most infatuated when most in peril. It may vaunt its power, and make new aggressions, and put forth new doctrines, and be entranced in a dream of security, when its doom is nigh. And, as the great river, the river Euphrates, the glory and bulwark of Babylon, became a road for the Conqueror of the city, so the swelling stream of Rome's temporal and spiritual Supremacy, which has now flowed on so proudly for so many centuries, and has served for the aggrandizement of the Papacy, may be in God's hands the means and occasion of its fall. The reason of this is obvious. The Papacy puts forth lofty claims, above all human pretensions, and rivalling the divine attributes. Such claims as these, uttered in proud language, and resting on unsound foundations, provoke the indignation and hostility of men—and how much more of Him who is a jealous God, and will punish all usurpations of His own Prerogatives! The Papal Supremacy will one day be dried up, and will supply the appointed means of the Papal downfall. It will be like a channel of the Euphrates, and give an entrance to the beleaguered city.

(2) It is said by St. John, that the Euphrates is to be dried up, in order that the way of the Kings from the East may be prepared.

Cyrus, "the shepherd" of God (Isa. xliv. 28), "the anointed of God" (Isa. xlv. 1), the King who was raised up from the East (Isa. xli. 2. 25), for the preparation of whose way God dried up the rivers (Isa. xliv. 27), was a signal instrument for executing God's counsel, and for performing all God's pleasure (Isa. xliv. 28; xlvi. 11), not only in punishing Babylon for its pride, cruelty, blasphemy, and idolatry (see Isa. xlvi. and xlvii. Dan. v. 22—24, and Hab. ii. 5—20), but also in delivering God's people from their captivity in Babylon, and for restoring Jerusalem (Isa. xliv. 28. Ezra i. and ii.). See the excellent remarks in Dean Jackson, on the Creed, v. 404—414, book vi. pt. ii. ch. xxvi. Dean Prideaux's Connexion, B.C. 538—536.

From the past history of the literal Babylon we may gather some anticipations with regard to the future fate of that Power which is compared to Babylon by Almighty God in the Apocalypse. The drying up of the Euphrates for the march of the Persian King, and the consequent capture of the literal Babylon by Cyrus, was, in God's hands, the occasion of the liberation of the literal Israel; and of the rebuilding of the literal Jerusalem.

It may reasonably be expected, that the drying up of the Papal Euphrates, in order to expedite the march of the spiritual soldiers of Him Who was typified by Cyrus, and Who is the true King from the East, JESUS CHRIST; and the fall of the mystical Babylon, may be preparatory to the deliverance of many of God's People, who are now in spiritual bondage at Babylon, and for their restoration to their true home, in the Spiritual Sion, the Christian Church.

Perhaps, also, in God's divine purpose it may not be without its gracious results to God's own ancient People, the JEWS.

It is, and long has been, a deeply-rooted opinion among the Jews, that, as the Restoration of their forefathers by Cyrus did not take place till Babylon was taken, and then immediately ensued, so "the Redemption of Israel cannot be accomplished before Rome is destroyed." See R. Kimchi in Abdiam עם דרבן אדום תהיה תשועת ישראל cum devastabitur Roma (Edom), erit redemptio Israeli; cp. Mede's Works, p. 902.

There is much reason in this supposition.

When we consider the stumbling-blocks which the Papacy places in the way of the conversion of the Jews, by adding the Apocryphal Books,—as of equally divine authority,—to the Hebrew Scriptures, and by its adoration of the Blessed Virgin, and of Saints, Angels, and Images,—idolatrous practices, which the Jews, having once so severely suffered for Idolatry, regard with the greatest abhorrence,—we cannot but believe, with humble submission to the mysterious counsels of Divine Providence, that there is a solemn truth in this their popular conviction; and that the spiritual Redemption of Israel will be ushered in by the fall of Rome.

It may also be reasonably supposed, that together with this reference to the drying up of the Euphrates, previously to the capture of Babylon, and the liberation of God's People, by Cyrus marching from the East, there is also an allusion to the circumstances of the drying up of the River Jordan to facilitate the passage of Joshua, before the capture of Jericho: see Josh. iv. 22, 23.

This is the more probable, because there is a constant retrospect in the Apocalypse to the circumstances of the Exodus, and to the pilgrimage in the wilderness, and to the victorious entrance under Joshua, into Canaan, the type of Heaven. See above concerning the Trumpets, viii. 6.

It is also remarkable, that in the book of Joshua there is a marked emphasis laid on the fact that he and his army came into Canaan from the sunrising: see Josh. i. 15; iv. 19, where the Septuagint has ἡλίου ἀνατολὰς—the words here used by St. John.

If this be so, we may derive another anticipation from this reference;

The drying up of the stream of the Papal Supremacy may be preparatory to new victories to be achieved by Christ the Divine Joshua, and to the overthrow of the Jerichoes of this world, and to the glorious entrance of His faithful soldiers into their promised Land, and to the full and final possession of their heavenly inheritance.

Three UNCLEAN SPIRITS come forth from the mouth of the Dragon, and of the First and Second Beast; and gather together the kings of the whole world for the great conflict of ARMAGEDDON, against Christ.

13. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs from out of the mouth of the dragon, and from out of the mouth of the beast, and from out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth upon the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty.

Here we are again reminded of Egypt and its plagues.

"Aaron stretched his hand over the waters of Egypt, and Frogs came up and covered the land" (Exod. viii. 6). "Their land brought forth Frogs; yea, even in their Kings' chambers" (Ps. cv. 30).

Aaron brought up Frogs on Egypt; and the Magicians of Egypt did the same; they also brought up Frogs; but this was their last action of this supernatural kind. When Aaron smote the dust of the earth, and it became lice, the Magicians attempted to do the same, but they could not, and they said, "This is the finger of God" (Exod. viii. 19).

The Dragon, the Beast, and the False Prophet are here seen leagued together; and as it was with the literal Egypt, so it will be with them; they will send forth frogs; but as the ancient Interpreters have observed, this will be their last struggle, as it was of the Magicians, and be the omen of their defeat. As St. Paul says, speaking of the Magicians of Egypt, they shall proceed no further (2 Tim. iii. 8, 9).

The Apostle St. Paul, in the passage first cited, appears to offer an explanation of the meaning of the sending forth of frogs by the Magicians of the Papal Egypt,—"They are men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith," "men who have the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof" (see note on 2 Tim. iii. 1—9), "lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers."

St. Paul has there described a confederacy like that in this Apocalyptic Vial, where the Dragon or Satan, the Beast, and the False Prophet are united. He represents a combination of corrupt Religion having a form of Godliness, and allied with Lawlessness and Infidelity.

These emissaries thus leagued together will endeavour to enlist the World in a campaign against true Religion. They will draw out their forces in terrible array; and while Christ, the King from the East, is marshalling His legions from the bright Day-spring under His heavenly banner, they will come forth from the realms of darkness, and muster their forces for the conflict.

They are called βάτραχοι, frogs, and unclean spirits (v. 13). They are strangers to the clear light and fresh streams of divine

[n] ch. 19. 19.

Truth, and dwell in the slime and quagmire of sordid cogitations, loving the slough of debasing lusts, or the misty glimmerings of false Philosophy and worldly Policy, and yet are puffed up with pride, and speak swelling words, and come forth in the Evening of the World's existence, and make it ring with their shrill discord.

Such are they who do not own that the glory of the Highest, and the eternal happiness of men, are the true ends, and right reasons, and immutable laws of all Government, secular and spiritual; but limit its aims to earth, and degrade it into an abject slave of human opinions, and human appetites. Such are they, who do not receive the doctrines of Religion as God has been pleased to reveal them, but would make themselves the standards and oracles of Truth, and would make Truth to vary with their own proud and fickle caprices. In a word, such are they who do not raise their eyes upward to the sun and stars of God's Power, Providence, and Wisdom, set in the clear vault of His glorious firmament, but look downward to earth, and judge of the things of heaven as they are reflected in the watery mirror of the low pools and miry marshes of their own minds.

These unclean spirits, it is said, work miracles.

We are, therefore, to be prepared to hear of strange Apparitions. The Emissaries of whom St. John speaks will be permitted to show "signs and wonders, with all power, after the working of Satan," Matt. xxiv. 24. 2 Thess. ii. 9; as the Magicians of Egypt were with their enchantments, Exod. vii. 11. 22; so as to deceive, if it were possible, the very elect, Matt. xxiv. 24. Mark xiii. 22.

Further: These spirits, it is added, go forth upon the Kings of the Earth to gather them to the Battle.

The Kings of the Earth are opposed to the Kings of the East, that is, they are opposed to Christ and to those whom Christ has made to be Kings (v. 10), by their incorporation in Himself, Whose Kingdom is the Kingdom of Heaven (xvii. 14), and Who is King of Kings (xix. 16).

The unclean spirits are said to go forth upon (ἐπί) the kings of the World; which seems to denote, that these spirits will not only address themselves to, but also will exercise some influence upon and over, these kings. Cp. Winer, § 49, p. 362.

Thus St. John foreshows that the Papacy, when distressed by the drying up of its Euphrates, will resort for help even to godless powers; that it will advocate doctrines of political licentiousness, and flatter Rulers with seducing words for their own advantage; that it will countenance men in disobeying the divine Word, as the Egyptian Magicians encouraged Pharaoh in his resistance to God; that it will palliate crimes which the Gospel condemns; that its emissaries will encourage disloyalty and Insurrection against Christian powers opposed to themselves, and will invoke benedictions on Rebellion, and be like Hierarchs of Revolution.

The scene of the future conflict is called "in the Hebrew tongue ARMAGEDDON," of which more will be said hereafter. See v. 16.

But in the mean time, while these preparations are going on, Christ mercifully interposes and pronounces a warning.

v. 15. Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.

See above, on 1 Thess. v. 2. 4, and on the garments, and on the word naked, see above, iii. 4, 5. 17, 18.

Preparations for ARMAGEDDON.

The conflict itself does not take place yet; it is described hereafter (see xix. 19—21). We have now only a view of the gathering together of the hostile forces against Christ.

v. 16. And they gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

As to the reading of the word, B and some Cursives have Μαγεδών, or Μαγεδδών; A has Ἁρμαγεδών, and ποταμὸν for τόπον. Lachmann and Tisch. print the word with an aspirate, Ἁρμαγεδών, and ancient Latin authorities have Hermagedon.

What is meant by AR-MAGEDDON, or Har-magedon?

Observe that St. John here specially calls attention to the Hebrew etymology, by saying that the place is called in the Hebrew tongue Ar-magedon, or Har-magedon.

Ar-mageddon, or Har-magedon, is formed of two Hebrew words; the one signifying a Mountain, הַר, har, the other, a cutting to pieces; from גָּדַד, excidit; and thus it means the Mountain of excision, or of slaughter.

When the Prophet Zechariah is speaking of the destruction of all nations that come against the City of God, he says that there will be a great mourning in the valley of Megiddon (Zech. xii. 9); and Megiddon is there translated by the Septuagint Interpreters, cut up, or destroyed. LXX, Zech. xii. 11, ῥοῦνος ἐν πεδίῳ ἐκκοπτομένου.

Lightfoot and Vitringa, who have called attention to this etymology, do not seem to have been aware that they had been anticipated by Andreas and Arethas ad loc., and in the Ancient Greek Catena, Cramer, p. 420, and also by Œcumenius, ibid. p. 552, who deserve to be cited. Catena, Cramer, p. 420, xvi. 16, τόπον τὸν καλούμενον Ἑβραϊστὶ Ἑρμαγεδὼν τόπον νῦν τὸν καιρὸν ἀκουστέον· τῷ καιρῷ τοίνυν τούτῳ οἱ ἀπὸ πονηρῶν πνευμάτων ἀπατηθέντες καταλαμβανόμενοι τεύξονται διακοπῆς· τοῦτο γὰρ Ἑρμαγεδὼν ἡ Ἑβραϊκὴ λέξις εἰς τὴν Ἑλλάδα διάλεκτον διατορθμευομένη νοεῖν παρίχει.—Œcumenius, ibid. p. 552, τὸ Ἁρμαγεδὼν διακοπὴ ἢ διακοπτομένη ἑρμηνεύεται, ἐκεῖ γὰρ τὰ ἔθνη συναγόμενα ἐκκόπτεσθαι νοεῖν ἀκόλουθον.

The word Armageddon, then, signifies a Mountain of slaughter; like that valley of decision or cutting off, described by the Prophet Joel (iii. 14), and it is a figurative expression similar to that in the same Prophet, namely, the Valley of Jehoshaphat (Joel iii. 2. 12), or judgment of God. There may be also a reference in this word to the Hebrew root גָּדַד, to gather together in a troop for an attack.

The word Ar-mageddon seems also designed to signify a defeat and slaughter, such as that of the Kings of Canaan at Megiddo, in the region of Galilee, wrought by a miraculous interposition of Almighty God, discomfiting the vast and terrible army of Sisera and his confederate Princes. "The Kings came and fought, then fought the Kings of Canaan in Taanach by the waters of Megiddo. They (the armies of God) fought from heaven; the stars in their courses fought against Sisera" (Judges v. 19, 20).

The Holy Spirit, by the mouth of David, specially speaks of these Kings as types of God's foes, in their sin and doom. "Do Thou to them as unto the Midianites; unto Sisera, and unto Jabin, at the brook of Kison; who perished at Endor, and became as the dung of the earth" (Ps. lxxxiii. 9).

These Kings had oppressed Israel, and were routed by the army of God at Megiddo; and, in like manner, earthly powers will rise against Christ and His Church, and be defeated in a marvellous manner, in a great encounter, which is called by St. John Ar-mageddon.

It will also be remembered, that King Josiah was defeated and mortally wounded at Megiddo (2 Chron. xxxv. 20. 22); and though Josiah was a pious King, yet, when at Megiddo, he was disobeying a Divine command, given him by the Prophet Jeremiah. 1 Esd. i. 25—32, where the LXX has Μαγεδδώ, Mageddon. See also S. Jerome, ad Ctesiphontem, ad finem, and Ep. 86, ad Eustach.—Campi Mageddo Josiæ necis conscii. He was endeavouring to repel Pharaoh-Necho, who was marching towards the river Euphrates to besiege Babylon, and so Josiah was then an ally of Babylon.

Thus the name Megiddo or Mageddo had been prepared for St. John as a word denoting the scene of a defeat and slaughter of God's foes, and allies of the city of the Beast.

Megiddo itself was in a Valley (2 Chron. xxxv. 22. Zech. xii. 11), and Harmagedon is a Mountain; but this circumstance does not present any difficulty; on the contrary, it may serve to remind the reader that the word is not to be understood literally, but to be regarded as a symbolical word; and the characteristic significance of the Mountain of destruction is, that the defeat will be conspicuous to the world.

This gathering together of the Kings of the Earth to Armageddon, or Har-magedon, at the instance of unclean spirits going forth from out of the mouth of the Dragon, the Beast, and False Prophet, intimates (as has been observed by ancient Expositors, Primasius, Haymo, and others), that there will be a muster of earthly powers, combined together in an unholy confederacy and league of godless Policy and corrupt Religion, like that of Pilate with the Chief Priests against the Lord and His Anointed: and it pre-announces the signal discomfiture and manifest cutting off of those powers, as on a lofty Mountain, visible to all, by the might of Him Who is the Conqueror on the White Horse, and Who will slay His enemies with the Sword that goeth forth out of His mouth (xix. 15).

But it is only the gathering together of these forces which is described here. The description of the conflict of Har-magedon, and the issue of it, is reserved for a later period in the prophecy. See xix. 19—21, where it is said, "I saw the Beast, and the Kings of the Earth, and their Armies having been gathered together (συνηγμένα) to fight the battle (ποιῆσαι τὸν πόλεμον), with Him that sitteth upon the Horse, and with His armies. And the Beast was taken, and the False Prophet that is with him, and they were cast into the lake of fire, and the rest were killed with the sword of Him that sitteth on the Horse."

This conflict does not take place yet. See below, p. 258.

The SEVENTH VIAL.

In the mean time the SEVENTH VIAL brings with it a judgment on the mystical Babylon, which is the capital city of the Empire of the Beast.

17—21.] And the Seventh Angel poured out his vial upon the air; and there came a great voice from the temple, from the throne, saying, It is done.

And there were lightnings, and voices, and thunders, and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, so great.

And the great City was made into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell; and Babylon the Great came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fury of his wrath.

And every island fled away, and mountains were not found.

And there cometh down upon the men great hail out of heaven, about the weight of a talent: and the men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof is great exceedingly.

The Air (ἀὴρ) here (v. 17) is the region of darkness, in which the powers of evil abide. See Eph. ii. 2.

The great city Babylon is divided into three parts, and the cities of the Nations or Gentiles (τῶν ἐθνῶν) fall. These cities are those which are opposed to Christ, and to the Christian Sion (see xi. 2, and cp. ii. 26; xi. 18; xix. 15; xx. 8); they are contrasted with the true Israelites, the true Jews, those who are Jews inwardly, whose circumcision is of the heart in the spirit (see Rom. ii. 29; above, ii. 9; iii. 9).

Babylon the Great comes into remembrance in the sight of God to give to her the cup of the wine of the fury of His wrath (cp. above, xiv. 8).

The fuller description of Babylon the Great, her site, her wealth, her magnificence, her sins, and her fall, is contained in the two following chapters, the xviith and xviiith.

In the mean time, it is to be observed that although in this Vial Babylon, the Great City, the capital of the Empire of the Beast, comes into remembrance before God, and is now about to fall; yet, as appears from the Prophecy, the Beast itself, and its ally the False Prophet, will not be destroyed with the Fall of Babylon, but will survive that fall; and will appear afterwards in hostile array against Christ, in the conflict of Armageddon (see xix. 19).

Yet further, even after their defeat and doom, described in xix. 20, Satan, or the Dragon, will still remain to wage war against Christ (xx. 8); but finally he also will be defeated and cast into the lake of Fire (xx. 10).

Thus, then, the following chronological series is presented in the Prophecy.

(1) The drying up of the spiritual Euphrates, the river of the mystical Babylon, to prepare the way for Christ's people, the Kings of the East, coming against the mystical Babylon (xvi. 12).

(2) The mustering of the Kings of the Earth, or Powers opposed to the Kingdom of Heaven, at the instance of the emissaries of the Dragon, the Beast, and False Prophet, against Christ and His armies (xvi. 14).

(3) God's Judgments upon Babylon, the capital City of the Beast. The Fall of Babylon.

(4) The great conflict of the Powers of the Earth, which had been leagued together and mustered under the Dragon, the Beast, and the False Prophet, against Christ.

Their signal rout and discomfiture in the battle of Armageddon, the great day of the Almighty.

(5) The defeat and doom of the Beast and of the False Prophet (xix. 20).

(6) The gathering together of the forces of the Dragon, or Satan, against Christ (xx. 8).

(7) The defeat and doom of the Dragon (xx. 10).

(8) The full and final triumph of Christ. Cp. xi. 15—17.

(9) The General Resurrection (xx. 13).

(10) The Universal Judgment (xx. 11—13. Cp. xi. 18).

(11) The Lake of Fire (xx. 14; xxi. 8).

(12) The Heavenly City (xxi. xxii. Cp. vii. 4—17).

ETERNITY.

Further enlargement concerning the great City, the Mystical BABYLON; and concerning the BEAST, upon which she sits; and concerning her splendour, her sins, and her fall.

CH. XVII. 1. καὶ ἦλθεν] And there came one of the seven angels who had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will show unto thee the Judgment of the great Harlot that sitteth on the many waters: with whom the kings of the earth committed fornication, and they who are dwellers in the earth were made drunk with the wine of her fornication.

And he carried me away in the Spirit into a wilderness: and I saw a Woman sitting upon a scarlet-coloured Beast, full of the names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns.

And the Woman was arrayed in purple, and scarlet, and gilded over with gold, and precious stones, and pearls: having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and the uncleanness of her fornication: and upon her forehead a name written, Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of the Harlots, and the abominations of the Earth.

And I saw the Woman drunken with the blood of the Saints, and with the blood of the Martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her I wondered with great wonder.

And the Angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou wonder? I will tell thee the Mystery of the Woman and of the Beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and the ten horns.

καὶ ἐλάλησε μετ' ἐμοῦ, λέγων, Δεῦρο δείξω σοι τὸ κρῖμα τῆς πόρνης τῆς
b Jer. 51. 7. ch. 14. 8. & 18. 3. μεγάλης, τῆς καθημένης ἐπὶ τῶν ὑδάτων τῶν πολλῶν, 2 b μεθ' ἧς ἐπόρνευσαν οἱ

The Beast that thou sawest, was, and is not, and is about to ascend out of the bottomless pit, and to go into perdition, and they who are dwellers on the earth, whose names are not written in the book of life, will wonder when they see the Beast, that it was, and is not, and will appear.

Here is the understanding which hath wisdom; the Seven Heads are Seven Mountains, upon which the Woman sitteth.

And they are Seven Kings; the five are fallen, the one is, the other is not yet come: and when he is come, he must continue a little while.

And the Beast that was, and is not, even he is an eighth (King) and is from the seven, and goeth into perdition.

And the Ten Horns which thou sawest are Ten Kings, who have not received a kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the Beast. These have one mind, and give their power and strength unto the Beast. These will make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb will overcome them, for He is Lord of Lords, and King of Kings, and they that are with Him called, and chosen, and faithful (will overcome them).

And he saith unto me, The Waters which thou sawest where the Harlot sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.

And the Ten Horns which thou sawest and the Beast, these will hate the Harlot, and will make her desolate and naked, and will devour her flesh, and will burn her utterly with fire. For God put in their hearts to perform His mind, and to perform one mind, and give their kingdom unto the Beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled.

And the Woman which thou sawest is that great City, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

Preliminary Note on this Chapter.

In order to understand this prophecy, it is requisite to ascertain clearly the subject of it. Some preliminary remarks on this question are, therefore, necessary.

What is the City of which St. John here speaks?

Certain criteria are supplied by him for the determination of this question.

(1) He says, "Here is the understanding which hath wisdom; the Seven Heads (of the beast) are (that is, they signify, or represent, see i. 19, 20) the Seven Mountains on which the woman sitteth" (v. 9).

(2) He also calls it "the great City," and it is a city which was in existence in his age (see v. 18).

At that time there was one City, a Great City, built on Seven Mountains, Rome. The name of each of its Seven Mountains is well known: they were the Palatine, Quirinal, Aventine, Cœlian, Viminal, Esquiline, Janiculan. In St. John's time Rome was usually called "the Seven-hilled City" (ἡ πόλις ἡ ἑπτάλοφος, urbs septicollis). She was celebrated as such in an annual national festival, the Septimontium. And there is scarcely a Roman Poet of any note, who has not spoken of Rome as a City seated on Seven Mountains,—Virgil, Horace, Tibullus, Propertius, Ovid, Silius Italicus, Statius, Martial, Claudian, Prudentius; in short, the unanimous voice of Roman Poetry, during more than five hundred years, beginning with the age of St. John, proclaimed Rome as "the Seven-hilled City."

The passages referred to from these writers are as follows;

Virgil, Georg. ii. 535. Æn. vi. 784, "Septemque una sibi muro circumdabit arces." Horace, Carmen Sæc. 7, "Dîs, quibus septem placuere colles." Tibullus, ii. 5, 55, "Carpite nunc tauri de septem montibus herbas." Propertius, iii. 10, 57, "Septem urbs alta jugis toti quæ præsidet orbi." Ovidius, Trist. i. 4, 69, "Sed quæ de septem totum circumspicit orbem Montibus imperii Roma deûmque locus." Silius Italicus, xii. 606, "Defendere tecta Dardana, et in septem discurrere jusserat arces." See also x. 587; xvi. 620. Statius, Silv. iv. 3, 26, "Septem montibus admovere Baias." Martial, iv. 64, 11, "Hinc septem dominos videre montes, Et totam licet æstimare Romam." Claudian, xii. 19 (ed. Gesner), "Aurea septem-geminas Roma coronet arces." See also xv. 194. Prudentius, de Romano Martyre, 411, "Divûm favore cum puer Mavortius Fundaret arcem septicollem Romulus."

This prophecy of St. John is also illustrated in this respect from another source, equally open to the eyes of the world—Coins.

On the Imperial Coinage of that age, Rome is displayed as a Woman sitting on Seven Hills, as she is represented in the Apocalypse. See the coin of Vespasian, described by Capt. Smyth, Roman Coins, p. 310. Ackerman, i. p. 87, "Rome seated on seven hills; at the base Romulus and Remus suckled by the wolf; before, the Tiber personified." It is figured in Gessneri Numismata, Tab. lvii. Cp. Vaillant, p. 30.

(3) St. John gives another criterion by which the Woman is to be identified. He says that she is the reigning city of his age. "The woman which thou sawest (he says) is that great city which reigneth (literally, "which hath royal sovereignty"—ἡ ἔχουσα βασιλείαν) over the kings of the earth" (v. 18). The reigning city of that age was Rome.

If we refer to the Latin Poets of that time, we find that the epithets commonly applied to Rome are The great; The mighty; The royal Rome; The Queen of Nations; The Eternal City; The Mistress of the World; as, see for example, "Maxima rerum Roma," Virg. Æn. v. 600. 660. Manil. iv. 773. Propert. iv. 1. Hor. l Sat. v. 1. 1 Ep. vii. 44. Ovid, Met. xv. 445.

If, again, we contemplate the public feelings of the World as expressed on the Coins of that period, we there see Rome, as the great City, deified, crowned with a mural diadem, holding in her palm a winged figure of Victory, which bears in its hand a Globe, the symbol of Rome's Conquests and Universal Sway. See the figures described, and the citations collected, in Spence's Polymetis, p. 243, and Vaillant, Numismata Ærea Imperatorum, Paris, 1695, p. 205, "Dea Roma; Roma Æterna . . . dextrâ Victoriam tenens." See also 191, and Gessner, Tab. lviii. and lxii.

The City on Seven Hills is Rome; the great City which reigned over the kings of the earth was Rome. Therefore the City here described is Rome.

(4) Next, the City here described by St. John is also called by him "Babylon;" "Babylon the Great" (v. 5). He cannot be speaking of the literal Babylon in Assyria; for that was not built on seven Mountains; nor did it then reign over the Kings of the earth.

What he means to say is, that the City of which he is here speaking, resembles Babylon; and it may, therefore, in the figurative language, commonly used in the Apocalypse, be called Babylon.

Rome was in many respects a second Babylon. Babylon had been the Queen of the East, in the age of the Hebrew Prophets; and Rome was the Queen of the West, when St. John wrote. Babylon had been called in the Old Testament "the Golden City," "the glory of kingdoms," "the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency." Babylon boasted herself to be Eternal. She said in her heart, "I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God. I shall be a Lady for ever. I am, and none else beside me: I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children." (Isa. xiii. 19; xiv. 4. 13; xlvii. 7, 8.)

In these respects Babylon was imitated by Rome. She also called herself the Golden City, the Eternal City.

The words Romae Aeternae are found on the imperial coins of Rome, e. g. on those of Gallienus, Tacitus, Probus, Gordian, and others. The Bishop of Rome is called Urbis Æternæ Episcopus, by Ammian. Marcellin. xv. 7. Cf. xiv. 6; xvi. 10; xix. 10. The Jupiter of Virgil speaks the national language when he says (Æn. i. 278), "His ego nec metas rerum nec tempora pono; Imperium sine fine dedi."

Again: the King of Babylon "was the rod of God's anger, and the staff of His indignation" (Isa. x. 5) against Jerusalem for its rebellion. Babylon was employed by God to punish the sins of Sion, and to lay her walls in the dust.

So, in St. John's age, the Imperial legions of Rome had been sent by God to chastise Jerusalem for her sin in rejecting His Holy Word, and crucifying His beloved Son.

Again: the sacred Vessels of God's Temple at Jerusalem had been carried from Sion to Babylon, and were displayed on the table at the royal banquet in that night, when the fingers of a man's hand came forth from the wall and terrified the Chaldæan King. (Dan. v. 5, 6.)

So, the sacred Vessels of the Jewish Temple, which were restored by Cyrus, and the Book of the Law, and the Golden Candlestick (Joseph. B. J. vii. 5), and the Table of Shewbread, were carried captive in triumphal procession from Sion to Rome: and even now their effigies may be seen at Rome, near the site of the Roman Forum, carved in sculpture on the marble sides of the triumphal Arch of Titus, the Imperial Conqueror of Jerusalem.

And the Jewish Candlestick is figured on a coin of Vespasian, with the legend "Hierosolyma capta." Gessner, Tab. lviii.

The Jews commonly gave to Rome the name of Babylon. See the authorities in Mede's Works, p. 902. Winer, R. W. B. ii. p. 335, art. Rom.

So did the Christians. See S. Hippolytus, de Christo, § 35, who quotes this and the following chapter. Tertullian, adv. Jud. c. 9; c. Marcion. iii. 13. Euseb. ii. 15. S. Hieron. in Esa. xlvii.

βασιλεῖς τῆς γῆς, καὶ ἐμεθύσθησαν οἱ κατοικοῦντες τὴν γῆν ἐκ τοῦ οἴνου τῆς πορνείας αὐτῆς.

1; and Victorinus, Primasius, and Cassiodorus on this chapter. We may sum up all in the words of S. Augustine, "Rome is a second Babylon" (de Civ. Dei xvi. 17; xviii. 2. 23).

Let us now review the evidence before us; we see that the Woman here described is designated by St. John—

(1) As a great City, seated on seven Mountains.

(2) As that great City, which in the time of St. John reigned over the Kings of the Earth. And

(3) It is called Babylon.

What City corresponds to this description?

It cannot be the literal Babylon, for she was not built on seven hills, nor was she the Queen of the Earth in St. John's age. It is some great City which then existed and reigned over the Kings of the Earth. Among the great Cities, which then were, one was seated on Seven Hills. She was universally recognized in St. John's age as the Seven-hilled City. She is described as such by the general voice of her own most celebrated writers for five centuries; and she has ever since continued to be so characterized. She is represented as such on her own coinage, the coinage of the World. That City then reigned over the Kings of the Earth. She exercised Universal Sovereignty, and boasted herself Eternal. That same City resembled Babylon in many striking respects: in dominion, in wealth, and in historical acts, especially with regard to the ancient Church and People of God. This same City was commonly called Babylon by St. John's own countrymen, and by his disciples. And, finally, the voice of the Christian Church, in the age of St. John himself, and for many centuries after it, has given an almost unanimous verdict on this subject;—that the Seven-hilled City, the Great City, the Queen of the Earth, Babylon the Great of the Apocalypse, is the City of Rome.

This conclusion is so clear and certain, that it is admitted even by the Divines of Papal Rome.

Thus, for example, Cardinal Bellarmine says, "that Rome is signified in the Apocalypse by the name of Babylon" (de Rom. Pont. ii. c. 2, § Præterea, tom. i. p. 232, ed. Colon. 1615). And Cardinal Baronius (Annal. ad A.D. 45, Num. xvi.) owns "that all persons confess that Rome is denoted by the name of Babylon, in the Apocalypse of St. John." "In Apocalypsi Joannis Romam Babylonis notatam esse nomine in confesso est apud omnes." And the celebrated French Prelate Bossuet, in his Exposition of the Book of Revelation, observes, that "the features (in the Apocalypse) are so marked, that it is easy to decipher Rome under the figure of Babylon." Bossuet, Préf. sur l'Apocalypse, § vii., "C'est une tradition de tous les Pères que la Babylone de l'Apocalypse c'est l'ancienne Rome. Tous les Pères ont tenu le même langage. Avec des traits si marqués c'est une énigme aisée à déchiffrer, que Rome sous la figure de Babylone."

Here then we see the question is brought into a narrow compass. It is affirmed by Romish writers, as well as by others, that Babylon in the Apocalypse is the City of Rome.

But here a separation takes place.

The Divines of Papal Rome assert that St. John in this prophecy is speaking of Rome as a City, and not as a Church.

Many of those Divines say, that St. John's prophecy concerned Rome as heathen, but does not concern it as Christian; and they affirm that the prophecies in this chapter, and in the next, predicting the fall of Babylon, have been already fulfilled. They allege, that these prophecies were fulfilled when Rome was taken by the Goths in the fifth century of the Christian era. See Bellarmin. de Pontif. ii. c. 11. Baronius, Annales ad A.D. 45, Num. xviii.; and Bossuet, who says, "La Babylone, dont Saint Jean prédit la chûte, étoit Rome conquérante et son empire: et la chûte de Rome, arrivée sous Alaric, est un dénouement de la prophétie de Saint Jean." Bossuet, Préf. sur l'Apoc. § viii. x., vol. xxiv. of his works, ed. Paris, 1827.

Let us examine this hypothesis.

(1) The destruction of the great City, the Mystical Babylon, is represented in the Apocalypse as a punishment for her sins when brought to a head. "Her sins, it is said, had reached to heaven, and God remembered her iniquities," which had become full. (Rev. xviii. 5.)

But, when Rome was taken by Alaric and the Goths, she had become Christian. As one of the ancient Fathers, S. Jerome, says (c. Jovinian. lib. ii. ad finem), "she had wiped off the blasphemy on her forehead by the confession of the Christian faith." Rome had then ceased to persecute the Christians; and, as we learn from S. Augustine (de Civ. Dei, ad init.), the invasion of the Goths was represented by her heathen writers as a consequence of the anger of the heathen Deities against the City for its neglect of the old religion, and for the favour shown by it to Christianity.

Therefore, the capture of Rome by Alaric cannot have been the destruction which is here foretold in the Apocalypse.

(2) Again: the destruction of Rome, as foretold in the Apocalypse, is to be total and final. It is here prophesied that she will be burnt up with fire (xvii. 16; xviii. 9), and the smoke of her burning shall ascend for ever (xviii. 9. 18; xix. 3); and that she shall be plunged into perdition like a great millstone into the sea, and that she shall be found no more at all (xviii. 21); and that the voice of harpers and musicians shall be no more heard in her, and that no craftsmen shall be found in her, and the light of a candle shall no more shine in her (xviii. 22, 23); in a word, that the city described in the prophecy shall be utterly destroyed.

But this cannot be said to have taken place when Rome was captured by the Goths, or to have ever taken place—as yet. Rome has not been burnt with fire, and the smoke of her burning does not ascend to heaven. The voice of harpers has not ceased within her. She has not been taken up like a great millstone and plunged into the sea. The sound of music is yet heard in her palaces: they are still adorned with pictures and statues. The riches of her purple, and silk, and scarlet, and pearls, and jewels, are still displayed in the attire of her Pontiff and her Cardinals in their conclaves. Cavalcades of horses and chariots, and trains of religious processions move along her streets; clouds of frankincense arise in her temples, which on high festivals are hung with tapestry, and brocade, and embroidery; her precious vessels glitter on her altars; her rich merchandise of gold and silver is still purchased; her dainty and goodly things are not yet departed from her. She still sits as a Queen and glorifies herself and says, "I am no widow" (xviii. 17). She still claims divine titles, and calls herself 'Eternal.'

Therefore we are brought again to the conclusion, that the prophecies of the Apocalypse concerning the fall of Rome, were not fulfilled in the destruction of Rome in the fifth century, but concern the Rome of a later age.

(3) These Prophecies also declare, that Rome, after her destruction, will become a desolate wilderness, and the habitation of unclean creatures. St. John's words are, "Babylon the Great fell, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird" (xviii. 2). Will it be allowed by Romish Divines that this is now fulfilled? Will they allow that after its capture by the Goths Rome became, and is still, "the habitation of devils, the hold of every foul spirit, the cage of every unclean and hateful bird?" Do we describe her in such dark colours as these?

Certainly not. After the taking of Rome by Alaric, Rome had many holy men within her. She was still a source of blessings to other nations. She had a Gregory the Great, Bishop of Rome, who sent an Augustine to England, at the end of the sixth century, and whose writings will ever be read, and whose memory will ever be revered, with grateful regard by the faithful.

Even now, we are fully persuaded, Almighty God has some people in Rome. He Himself says, on the very eve of her fall, "Come out of her, My People" (see below, xviii. 4). And in the language of Romish Divines, Rome is still the "Capital of Christendom," the "Holy City," the "spiritual Sion." They call her Sovereign "the Supreme Pontiff," "Holy Father;" his States are "the States of the Church;" and his throne, "the Holy See."

Therefore these Apocalyptic prophecies were not fulfilled in Heathen Rome.

But it is allowed by Romish Divines, as well as by other writers, that they concern Rome. Therefore they concern Rome, not as she was when Pagan, but they concern her such as she became, after she had ceased to be Pagan, and after long-continued sin, which at length will reach to heaven, and bring down God's judgments upon her, and involve her, as the prophecy reveals, in utter destruction, total desolation, and irreparable ruin.

When Rome had ceased to be Heathen, and when her Imperial Power was extinct, and when also the Imperial Power of her German Masters was broken (see below on v. 10), Rome became subject to the Bishop of that city; and after the lapse of some centuries, the Bishop of Rome acquired a spiritual and temporal sway, under the titles which he then assumed of Sovereign Pontiff and Supreme Head of the Universal Church, and Vicar of Christ upon Earth, and "Ruler of the World" (see above on xiii. pp. 224, 225, and on v. 10, p. 250). He stood in a more lofty eminence than had ever been attained by the Cæsars. That position has now been occupied by him for eight hundred years.

Here then we already see reason to believe that these proc ch. 13. 1. & vv. 7, 8.

3 c Καὶ ἀπήνεγκέ με εἰς ἔρημον ἐν πνεύματι, καὶ εἶδον γυναῖκα καθημένην ἐπὶ θηρίον κόκκινον, γέμον ὀνόματα βλασφημίας, ἔχον κεφαλὰς ἑπτὰ καὶ κέρατα δέκα.

phecies, which are generally acknowledged to concern Rome, and which were not fulfilled in Heathen Rome, refer to that City in which the Bishop of Rome now lives and reigns, and in which he has reigned for many centuries.

In order to escape this conclusion, some other Romish Divines allege, that although—as they candidly confess—these Prophecies cannot fairly be said to have been fulfilled in ancient Heathen Rome, yet it is possible that Rome may again become Heathen, and that these Prophecies may then be fulfilled in her.

This is the hypothesis of some learned Romish Theologians. It is maintained by Suarez, Viegas, Ribera, Lessius, Menochius, Cornelius à Lapide, and others. This hypothesis is important to be noticed, as an avowal on their part that the other theory above stated of their co-religionists—Bellarmine, Baronius, and Bossuet, and many more—who say that these prophecies were fulfilled in ancient Heathen Rome—is untenable.

Here then is a remarkable phenomenon. Here are two discordant schools of Romish Theologians. The one school says that these Apocalyptic Prophecies concern the Rome that was destroyed more than a thousand years ago. The other school affirms, that they relate to the Rome of some future time. They differ widely from each other in the interpretation of these Prophecies, which, as they all agree, concern their own City. And yet they say that they have an Infallible Interpreter of Scripture resident at Rome. And they boast much of their own unity.

There is something ominous in this discord. But it makes their agreement more striking. It confirms the proof that these Apocalyptic prophecies concern Rome.

The hypothesis that these prophecies concern some future heathen Rome is irreconcileable with the language of St. John.

St. John refers to Rome reigning over the Kings of the Earth in his own day. He then proceeds to reveal her future history. No intimation is given of any break in the thread of his prophecy. But if Babylon is some heathen Rome, in ages yet to come, as well as the Rome of St. John's age, there must be a chasm in that history of nearly two thousand years.

It is also said that the Beast on which the Woman sitteth is an eighth King or Kingdom; and that five heads, or Kingdoms, had already fallen in St. John's age; that the sixth was then in being; that the seventh would continue only for a short time, and then the Beast with the woman sitting upon it, would be revealed; and the Beast, in that phase, is declared to be of the seven and to be an eighth. See below on v. 11, pp. 250, 251.

It is clear that an uninterrupted succession of Powers is here represented, and that consequently the Beast must have appeared long since with the Woman sitting upon it.

Therefore, since it is generally agreed that these prophecies concern Rome, and since they were not fulfilled in Heathen Rome; and since they concern Rome as she was to become after she had ceased to be Heathen; and since, after she had ceased to be Heathen, she became in course of time subject to the Bishop of Rome, and has continued to be subject to him for many hundred years, therefore, our conclusion is, that they concern Rome as the capital City of the Bishop of Rome, and of the Papal World.

After a careful meditation, for many years, upon these prophecies concerning the Apocalyptic Babylon, the present writer here solemnly, in the presence of the Omniscient Searcher of hearts, Who dictated these awful predictions, records this as his deliberate judgment upon them, probably for the last time. He has endeavoured seriously to examine all the objections which have been urged against this interpretation. He has found that these objections, as far as they have any validity, affect some minor incidents and subordinate details in the mode in which that interpretation is sometimes stated; but do not in the least affect the principle, or in any way impair the soundness of that interpretation itself. And when he has proceeded to examine other different interpretations of these Prophecies—such, for instance, as that interpretation which applies these Prophecies to Heathen Rome, or to some Infidel Power—he has found all those other interpretations to be so vain and futile, and so inconsistent and irreconcileable with the general scope and language of these Prophecies themselves, that even on this account he has been confirmed in the conviction that the Interpretation adopted in these notes, is the true, and only true Interpretation.

We may now proceed to consider this chapter in detail, and see whether this conclusion is confirmed by such an examination of the prophecy.

1. δεῦρο δείξω σοι] Come, I will show thee the judgment of the great Harlot.

The city of Rome is here called a Harlot. Is this word applicable to a Church? Is it applicable to the Church of Rome?

Such is Christ's love for His faithful people, that He is pleased to speak of His own relation to them under the term of marriage. The Church is His Spouse (John iii. 29. Eph. v. 23—32). "I have espoused you, as a chaste Virgin, to Christ," says St. Paul to the Corinthians (2 Cor. xi. 2). Hence spiritual unfaithfulness to Christ is represented in Scripture as adultery.

This idea runs through the whole Book of Revelation. In the Church of Pergamus there are said to be some who hold the doctrines of Balaam, and cause others to commit fornication (ii. 20). At Thyatira there is a Jezebel, who, by her false teaching, seduces Christ's servants; and they who commit adultery with her are threatened with tribulation (ii. 20. 22).

On the other hand, the faithful, who follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth, are said to be Virgins, and not to have been defiled with women; that is, not sullied with the stain of spiritual harlotry (xiv. 4).

The name Harlot, therefore, describes a Church, which has fallen from her first love, and has gone after other Lords, and given to them the honour due to CHRIST alone.

But, here it is objected by some Romish Divines—If a faithless Church had been here intended by St. John, he would not have called her a Harlot, but an Adulteress, and he would not have designated her by the name of a heathen city, Babylon, which never owned the true God, but by the name of some City, such as Samaria, which once knew Him, and afterwards fell away from Him. (Bossuet, Préface sur l'Apocalypse, vii.—ix.)

But to this allegation it may be replied, that a faithless Church may be, and often is, called in Scripture a Harlot, when she mixes false doctrine and worship with the true faith. Thus Isaiah says concerning Jerusalem, the ancient Church of God, "How is the faithful city become a harlot!" (Isa. i. 21.) And Jeremiah, "Thou hast played the harlot with many lovers." (Jer. iii. 1.) And Hosea, "Though Israel play the harlot, let not Judah offend." (Hosea iv. 15.)

The original word which is uniformly used for harlot by St. John in the Apocalypse is πόρνη, Porné. And this same word (πόρνη), or its derivatives, is used in the passages just quoted, and is employed in the Greek Septuagint Version of the Prophets of the Old Testament, at least fifty times, to describe the spiritual fornication, that is, the corrupt doctrine and practice of the Churches of Israel and Judah; e. g. Ezek. xvi. 15. 22. 33. 35; xxiii. 7, 8. 11. 14. 17—19. 29. 35. 43. 45; xliii. 7. 9. Jer. ii. 20; iii. 1, 2. 6. 9; xiii. 27. Hosea ii. 2. 4, 5. 10; iv. 12. 15. 18; v. 4; vi. 10; ix. 1. Isa. i. 21. Micah i. 7. Nahum iii. 4. So ἐκπορνεύω very frequently.

Therefore the word Harlot does designate a Church: and if the Church of Rome is described by that name in the Apocalypse, then the word harlot, as applied to her, indicates the multitude of her sins.

The question therefore is—

Has the Church of Rome been unfaithful to Christ? Does she teach new doctrines, and draw any of His servants from their allegiance to Him, their only Lord, to other objects of veneration and love? Is she thus guilty of harlotry?

This question receives a sufficient answer from the Twelve new articles of the Trent Creed, which is imposed on all by the Church of Rome; and from her worship of Saints, and especially of the Blessed Virgin Mary. See above on the xiiith chapter. The Harlot is also described as sitting as a Queen "on the many waters;" and these are explained in the prophecy to signify peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues (v. 15).

The Bishop of Rome, when he is crowned, is saluted as Rector Orbis, Ruler of the World (see above, p. 225). His Coins declare his claims to Universal Supremacy. "The nation and Kingdom which will not serve thee shall perish." "All Kings shall serve him;" such are the inscriptions upon them. (See Numismata Pontificum, pp. 50. 58, ed. Paris, 1679.) The reigning Pontiff, on the 10th Feb. 1848, used the following words in an address to the people of Rome, "It is a great gift of heaven that our three millions of subjects have two hundred millions of brethren of every tongue and every nation. It is this which in other times, and in the midst of the confusion of the Roman world, has ensured the safety of Rome."

Thus in the claim of the Church of Rome to exercise sway over all Kings and Nations of the earth, and in that amplitude of dominion and plenitude of felicity, to which she has appealed for so many generations as an evidence that she is favoured by Heaven, we recognize another proof that the Babylon of the Apocalypse, the Woman which "sitteth upon the many waters," which are "peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues," is the City of Papal Rome, the capital of the Papal Empire.

4 [d] Καὶ ἡ γυνὴ ἦν περιβεβλημένη πορφυροῦν καὶ κόκκινον, καὶ κεχρυσωμένη χρυσίῳ καὶ λίθῳ τιμίῳ καὶ μαργαρίταις, ἔχουσα ποτήριον χρυσοῦν ἐν τῇ χειρὶ

This interpretation is no new one. It dates from the time in which Papal Rome displayed herself to the world in those colours which characterize the Harlot City of this chapter. It may be traced in the writings of Peter of Blois, and in the expositions of Joachim, Abbot of Calabria, at the end of the twelfth century; of Lubertinus di Casali, Peter Olivi, and others in the thirteenth century (which may be seen in the Appendix to the Editor's Greek Text of the Apocalypse, ed. 1849, pp. 121—146); Marsilius of Padua, and those of the illustrious Dante and Petrarch. See the authorities in Wolfii Lectiones Memorabiles, ii. pp. 839—841; also in i. 376. 384. 408. 418. 429. 438. 443. 488. 597. 600. 610; and in Gerhard, Confessio Catholica, p. 583, sqq. ed. Francofurti, 1679; and in Abp. Ussher, de Christ. Eccl. Success. c. ii. p. 36; c. v. p. 109; c. vii. p. 196. Illyric. Catal. Test. p. 1558. Grostête, Bp. of Lincoln, ap. M. Paris, ad A.D. 1253. The Bishop's dying words on this subject are very striking. See also Alliæ, Hist. of the Churches of Piedmont, p. 207; and the numerous passages collected from Dante by Wolf, pp. 610—613; from Petrarch, ibid. pp. 677—684; and from Dante and Petrarch in Rossetti's Spirito Antipapale, Lond. 1832.

To omit the names of a multitude of English Divines, who have approved this interpretation, it may suffice to mention those of Hooker, Bp. Andrewes, Bp. Sanderson, and Bp. Wilson, of Sodor and Man. A learned and pious writer of the present age, the Rev. Isaac Williams, in his Notes on the Apocalypse, says, "That which has the horns of a Lamb (see above, xiii. 13) must be a false Christ; and a Harlot is a false Church," p. 243; "the Prophecy does in some awful manner hover as with boding raven wing over Rome" (p. 337).

This opinion derives also additional force from the fact, that, although the capture of Rome by the Goths, in the fifth century, was a very striking event, yet they who lived then, did not suppose that these prophecies were accomplished in that capture, but looked forward to some future time for their accomplishment.

Some Christian writers, such as Primasius, Bede, and others, who lived after the capture of Heathen Rome, and before the manifestation of the errors, usurpations, and corruptions of Papal Rome, and to use Hooker's words "her gross and grievous abominations" (iii. 1. 10), do not, indeed, apply them to Rome Christian. For how could they foresee that such gross and grievous abominations would show themselves in a Christian Church? But they did not imagine that these prophecies had been fulfilled in the capture of Heathen Rome by the Goths. The opinion which connects these prophecies with that Fall, was first propounded by Papal Theologians, many centuries after that event.

The present seems to be a suitable place for resuming the consideration of objections that have been urged against the exposition now adopted. Compare above, p. 226.

(1) Why, it has been asked, should so large a portion of the Apocalyptic prophecies be directed against Romanism? Are there not other forms of error equally noxious? especially Scepticism and Infidelity? To this it may be replied that the Apocalypse does speak in unequivocal terms against other errors in faith or practice. It declares that "the fearful, and unbelievers, and sinners, and abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death" (xxi. 8. See also xxii. 15).

But it must be remembered, that certain errors are more insidious and subtle than others; and therefore need to be more clearly pointed out, and more minutely described, that they may be shunned. Such are the errors of Rome. They present themselves in a specious form, with many alluring fascinations. They are therefore more dangerous.

In another respect, also, they are more injurious. They have been a main cause of the prevalence of schism and unbelief in the world. The Church of Rome has the three orders of the Christian Ministry, and the Sacrament of Holy Baptism, and yet is chargeable with many grievous errors and sins; and has thus brought discredit on the name and offices of the Christian Church, and even on Christianity itself; see above, p. 240.

Looking, then, at the declarations of Scripture concerning Infidelity, and at the true ends of Christian Prophecy, and at the perils of the World from Heresy, Schism, and Infidelity, and at the countenance and advantage given to them by Popery; and looking, also, carefully at the language of these Apocalyptic prophecies, we see reason to believe even on this account, that the form of Antichristianism contemplated in these Prophecies is a religious one; and we recognize the wisdom of God in providing such clear cautions against the errors, frauds, usurpations, and corruptions of Papal Rome.

(2) Another objection is, also, sometimes urged.

If the Church of Rome is the Apocalyptic Babylon, then the Ministers of the Church of England, who derive their Holy Orders from Rome, are infected with the taint of Babylon: their ministerial commission, therefore, is liable to grave suspicions: the validity of their ministrations is questionable; in a word, by fixing a stigma on Rome, they brand themselves.

Such is the objection.

But, assuredly, the fear of it is as groundless, as the allegation of it is illogical.

The Ministers of the Anglican Priesthood do not derive their Holy orders from Rome—but from CHRIST. He is the only source of all the grace which they dispense in their ministry. And suppose that we admit that this virtue flows from Him through some who were in communion with the Church of Rome, and that no charitable allowance is to be made for those who held some of her doctrines in a darker age—what then? The Channel is not the Source. The human Officer is not the Divine Office. The validity of the commission is not impaired by the unworthiness of those through whom it was conveyed. The Vessels of the Temple of God were holy even at Babylon: and, after they had been on Belshazzar's table, they were restored to God's altar (Ezra i. 7). The Scribes and Pharisees, against whom Christ denounces woe, were to be obeyed, because they sat in Moses' seat (Matt. xxiii. 2), and as far as they taught agreeably to his Law. The Word and ordinances of Christ, preached and administered even by a Judas, were efficacious to salvation. The Old Testament is not the less the Word of God because it has come to us by the hands of Jews, who rejected Him of whom Moses and the Prophets did write (John i. 45). And so, the sacred commission, which the ministers of the Church of England have received from Christ, is not in any way impaired by transmission through some who were infected with Romish corruptions; but rather, in this preservation of the sacred deposit even in their hands, and in its conveyance to us, and in its subsequent purification from corrupt admixtures, and in its restoration to its ancient use, we may recognize another proof of God's ever-watchful providence over His Church, and of His mercy to ourselves.

(3) We ought to be on our guard against two opposite errors. On the one hand, it is alleged by some, that if Rome be a Church, she cannot be Babylon. On the other hand, it is said by others, that, if Rome be Babylon, she cannot be a Church. Both these conclusions are false. Rome may be a Church, and yet Babylon: and she may be Babylon, and yet a Church. This will appear from considering the case of the Ancient Church of God.

The Israelites in the Wilderness were guilty of abominable idolatry. Yet they are called a Church in Holy Writ (Acts vii. 38. 41. 43). And why? Because they still retained the Law of God and the Priesthood (Hooker, iii: c. 1 and 2). So, also, Jerusalem—even when it had crucified Christ—is called in Scripture the Holy City (Matt. xxvii. 53). And why? By reason of the truths and graces which she had received from God, and which had not yet been wholly taken away from her.

A distinction, we see, is to be made between what is due to God's goodness on the one side, and to man's depravity on the other.

As far as the divine mercy was concerned, God's Ancient People were a Church: but by reason of their own wickedness, they were even a Synagogue of Satan (Rev. ii. 9; iii. 9), and, as such, they were finally destroyed.

Hence, their ancient Prophets, looking at God's mercy to Jerusalem, speak of her as Sion, the beloved City (Ps. lxxxvii. 2): but regarding her iniquities, they call her Sodom, the bloody city (Isa. i. 9, 10; iii. 9. Ezek. xxiv. 6).

In like manner, by reason of God's goodness to her, Rome received at the beginning His Word and Sacraments, and through His long-suffering they are not yet utterly taken away from her: and by virtue of the remnants of divine truth and grace, which are yet spared to her, she is still a Church. But she has miserably marred and corrupted the gifts of God. She has been favoured by Him like Jerusalem, and like Jerusalem she has rebelled against Him. He would have healed her, but she is not healed (Jer. li. 9). And, therefore, though on the one hand, by e 2 Thess. 2. 7. ch. 11. 8. & 14. 8.

αὐτῆς γέμον βδελυγμάτων, καὶ τὰ ἀκάθαρτα τῆς πορνείας αὐτῆς, 5 e καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ μέτωπον αὐτῆς ὄνομα γεγραμμένον, ΜΥΣΤΗΡΙΟΝ ΒΑΒΥΛΩΝ Ἡ ΜΕΓΑΛΗ, Ἡ ΜΗΤΗΡ ΤΩΝ ΠΟΡΝΩΝ ΚΑΙ ΤΩΝ ΒΔΕΛΥΓΜΑΤΩΝ ΤΗΣ ΓΗΣ.

His love, she was, and has not yet wholly ceased to be, a Christian Sion—on the other hand, through her own sins, she is an Antichristian Babylon.

v. 1. The Harlot is described as sitting on the many waters: that is, as the Angel explains it below (v. 15), as having dominion over many nations and languages.

v. 2. The Kings of the earth committed fornication with her, and they that are dwellers on the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.

v. 4. She holds in her hand a golden cup full of abominations and of the uncleanness of her fornication (as to the accusative after γέμον cp. v. 3. Phil. i. 11. Col. i. 9. Winer, p. 205), and has on her forehead a name written, "Mystery: Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots."

Heathen. Rome received the Gods of other Nations into her Pantheon. Even the deities of Syria and Egypt found a place there. Therefore again we see that the Apocalyptic Babylon is not Heathen Rome.

But this prophecy is very descriptive of Papal Rome.

Almighty God has distinguished man from the rest of the creation by the endowments of Reason and of Conscience; which He commands them to use, and not to give away. But the Church of Rome requires men to sacrifice them to her own will. And then she pours into their minds a delirious draught of strange doctrines. She requires all to drink of her cup. "This (says she of her Trent Creed) is the Catholic Faith, out of which there is no salvation" (Oath in the Creed of Pope Pius IV.).

She has trafficked and tampered with all the Kings and Nations of the Earth.

In the words of Hooker (Serm. v. 15), "she hath fawned upon Kings and Princes, and by spiritual cozenage hath made them sell their lawful authority for empty titles." She has caressed and cajoled them with amatory gifts of flowers, pictures, and trinkets, beads and relics, crucifixes and Agnus Deis, and consecrated plumes and banners. She has drenched and drugged their senses with love potions of bewitching smiles and fascinating words; and has thus beguiled them of their faith, their courage, and their power. Like another Delilah she has made the Samsons of this world to sleep softly in her lap, and then she has shorn them of their strength. (Judges xvi. 19.) She has captivated, and still captivates, the affections of their Prelates and Clergy, by entangling them in the strong and subtle meshes of Oaths of vassalage to herself, and has thus stolen the hearts of subjects from their Sovereigns, and has made Kingdoms to hang upon her lips for the loyalty of their People; and so in her dream of universal dominion she had made the world a fief of Rome.

v. 3. St. John says that he is taken into a wilderness, and there sees the Woman enthroned. This is a remarkable characteristic. She is a Great City, and yet in a wilderness. These words may be understood either literally with some, or figuratively with other, Expositors. If literally, they are very descriptive of the desolate region in which Papal Rome is now situated. The Roman Campagna, which was formerly peopled with towns and cities, and alive with the busy stir of men, has now been reduced to a desolate wilderness by the inundations of the Pomptine marshes, and by the inveterate malaria of centuries; and from the fetid miasma brooding over its sulphureous springs and brooks, is now no longer habitable, and by its wild and lonely aspect presents a sad prognostic of its future destiny, and seems to forebode that the likeness will one day be more striking than it is now between Rome and Babylon. In many spiritual respects also Rome is not like a fruitful field of the Lord, but may be compared to a wilderness.

The Woman is described as sitting on a scarlet-coloured Beast. This is her colour, she is called the great City clothed in scarlet (see xviii. 12. 16).

This colour is reserved by Papal Rome for the use of her Prelates and Cardinals. She says in her "Cæremoniale" (iii. Sect. 5, c.), that "it specially belongs to the Pope." And Pope Paul II. forbade any one to wear hats of scarlet, but Cardinals. See Platina, p. 312. Vitringa, p. 758. Heidegger, i. p. 432.

The "Cæremoniale Romanum," or order of Roman Ceremonies, was written 350 years ago, by a Papal Archbishop; and is dedicated to a Pope, Leo X., and was printed at Rome, A.D. 1516, and has often been reprinted as the official Directory of Papal Ceremonies; see above, p. 228.

If we turn to that portion of this Volume which describes the first public appearance of the Pope, on his Election to the Pontificate, we find the following order of proceeding,—"The Pontiff elect is conducted to the Sacrarium, and divested of his ordinary attire, and is clad in the Papal robes." The colour of these is then minutely described: five different articles of dress, in which he is then arrayed, are scarlet. Another vest is specified, and this is covered with pearls. His mitre is then mentioned; and this is adorned with gold and precious stones.

Such, then, is the attire in which the Pope is arrayed, and in which he first appears to the World as Pope. Refer now to the Apocalypse. We there see that scarlet, pearls, gold, and precious stones are thrice specified by St. John, as characterizing the Mysterious Power pourtrayed by himself (Rev. xvii. 4; xviii. 12. 16).

The Beast also is of scarlet colour, that is, it wears the livery of the Woman, as her servant and subject; she sits upon it; it carries her (see v. 7); it is like a Throne on which she is placed.

The Beast is described as having seven Heads and Ten Horns.

This designation of Ten Horns marks the Beast as the same in substance as that already described in the xiiith chapter (xiii. 1). Its duration is the same (cp. xi. 9, and xiii. 5). In the xiiith chapter we have mention of the Mark of the Beast (vv. 16, 17), and after the description of this Beast in the xviith chapter we see mention again made of the Beast and his Mark (xix. 20, and xx. 4). See Bp. Andrewes, contra Bellarmin. cap. x. ad init. pp. 232, 233; and p. 288, where he says, "eadem est Bestia in cap. xvii. et xiii."

That Beast, as we have seen, represents the fourth great Monarchy passing through successive phases, first Heathen, and afterwards subject to the Papacy;

It has first been displayed as the Pagan Empire of Rome (xiii. 1).

Secondly. It was displayed as killed, as to its Pagan Imperial power; and as reviving and living again in more than its former energy under the Papacy (see xiii. 3—10. 12—17).

Thirdly. It is represented here (xvii. 3—7) wearing the scarlet livery of the Harlot City, and as carrying her on its back: that is, as subservient to Papal Rome.

Fourthly. The Prophecy foretells, that its Ten Horns will hereafter turn their power against the Harlot City. See on v. 16.

All that has been said before, in the xiiith to the xvith chapters inclusive, confirms the present proof that the Woman which is arrayed in scarlet, and sits on the scarlet-coloured Beast, is Papal Rome.

Here we may observe some striking contrasts which serve farther to strengthen this conclusion.

The colour of the Harlot and of the Beast is Scarlet.

The colour of the Bride and of Christ is White (see above, vi. 2, and below, xix. 14).

This contrast seems to be marked even by the word chosen in the Apocalypse to designate the Lamb. As was observed before, that word is not Ἀμνός, as in the Gospel; but Ἀρνίον, which occurs twenty-nine times in the Apocalypse, where Ἀμνός never occurs. And thus we have a striking contrast, which is aided by an exact correspondence of syllables and accents. On one side are,

The Harlot and the Beast,
Ἡ ΠΟΡΝΗ ΚΑΙ ΤΟ ΘΗΡΙΟΝ.
On the other side are, The Bride and the Lamb,
Ἡ ΝΥΜΦΗ ΚΑΙ ΤΟ ΑΡΝΙΟΝ.

See Rev. xxi. 2. 9; xxii. 17.

If any one can have any doubt of St. John's intention to identify the Woman on the Beast with a faithless Church, let him read the following description:—Καὶ ἦλθεν εἷς ἐκ τῶν ἑπτὰ ἀγγέλων τῶν ἐχόντων τὰς ἑπτὰ φιάλας, καὶ ἐλάλησε μετ' ἐμοῦ λέγων, Δεῦρο, δείξω σοι τὸ κρῖμα τῆς πόρνης τῆς μεγάλης . . . Καὶ ἀπήνεγκέ με εἰς ἔρημον ἐν πνεύματι· καὶ εἶδον γυναῖκα καθημένην ἐπὶ θηρίον κόκκινον (Rev. xvii. 1. 3).

And then let him compare it with the words which describe the faithful Church in glory:—Καὶ ἦλθεν εἷς ἐκ τῶν ἑπτὰ ἀγγέλων τῶν ἐχόντων τὰς ἑπτὰ φιάλας . . . καὶ ἐλάλησε μετ' ἐμοῦ, λέγων, Δεῦρο, δείξω σοι τὴν νύμφην τοῦ ἀρνίου τὴν γυναῖκα. Καὶ ἀπήνεγκέ με ἐν πνεύματι ἐπ' ὄρος μέγα καὶ ὑψηλόν, καὶ ἔδειξέ μοι τὴν πόλιν τὴν ἁγίαν Ἱερουσαλήμ (Rev. xxi. 9, 10).

The Lamb (Ἀρνίον) is contrasted with the Beast (θηρίον);

6 [f] Καὶ εἶδον τὴν γυναῖκα μεθύουσαν ἐκ τοῦ αἵματος τῶν ἁγίων, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ αἵματος τῶν μαρτύρων Ἰησοῦ· καὶ ἐθαύμασα ἰδὼν αὐτὴν θαῦμα μέγα. [f] ch. 18. 24.

7 Καὶ εἶπέ μοι ὁ ἄγγελος, Διατί ἐθαύμασας; ἐγώ σοι ἐρῶ τὸ μυστήριον τῆς γυναικὸς, καὶ τοῦ θηρίου τοῦ βαστάζοντος αὐτὴν, τοῦ ἔχοντος τὰς ἑπτὰ κεφαλὰς καὶ τὰ δέκα κέρατα.

8 [g] Τὸ θηρίον ὃ εἶδες ἦν, καὶ οὐκ ἔστι· καὶ μέλλει ἀναβαίνειν ἐκ τῆς ἀβύσσου, καὶ εἰς ἀπώλειαν ὑπάγει· καὶ θαυμάσονται οἱ κατοικοῦντες ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ὧν οὐ γέγραπται τὰ ὀνόματα ἐπὶ τὸ βιβλίον τῆς ζωῆς ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, βλεπόντων τὸ θηρίον ὅτι ἦν, καὶ οὐκ ἔστι, καὶ πάρεσται. [g] ch. 11. 7. & 13. 1, 3, 8, 10.

so is the Bride (νύμφη) of the Lamb contrasted with the Harlot (πόρνη) who sits upon the Beast.

Thus, on one side we see the faithful woman (xii. 1), clothed with the Sun, Which is Christ, and treading on the Moon, that is, surviving all the changes and chances of this world; and having her brows encircled with Twelve stars—the diadem of Apostolic faith. She is a Mother: and her child is caught up to Heaven.

On the other side we see a faithless woman, arrayed in worldly splendour, and having on her forehead the name Mystery; and called Mother of Abominations of the Earth.

Again; on the one side, we see the faithful woman persecuted, and driven into the wilderness.

On the other side, we see the faithless Woman in the wilderness, enthroned on seven hills, and on the many waters which are peoples and nations; persecuting, and sitting on the Beast.

The former Woman is the faithful Church, which is truly Catholic or Universal.

The latter Woman, who is contrasted with her, and is called the Harlot, is a faithless Church, which claims to be Catholic, but is not.

Let us pursue the contrast.

The faithful Woman appears again, after her pilgrimage in the Wilderness of this world is over. Her sufferings have ceased. Look upward. Her glory is revealed at the close of the Apocalypse. The Woman is the Bride in Heaven. She is Christ's Church glorified, His Spouse purified. She is arrayed in fine linen, pure and white. She is called the Holy City, the new Jerusalem (Rev. xix. 7, 8; xxi. 2. 9, 10).

Now look below at the faithless Woman or Harlot sitting on the Beast. She is arrayed in scarlet, and pearls, and jewels, and gold. She is called Babylon, the Great City (Rev. xvii. 4, 5; xi. 8).

What is the conclusion from all this?

As the former Woman, the Bride, the Holy City, the new Jerusalem, represents the faithful Church, so the other Woman, the Harlot, the great City, the City on Seven Hills, which reigned in St. John's age, the mystical Babylon, represents a faithless Church, the Church on the Seven Hills, the Church of Rome.

3. θηρίον—γέμον ὀνόματα] B has τὰ ὀνόματα, and so Tisch., "full of the names of blasphemy." Observe the article, and see above, xiii. 1—5.

5. μυστηριον] Mystery. See below, v. 7.

— Βαβυλών] "Babylon the Great." See above, Preliminary Note on this chapter, p. 244.

6. εἶδον] I saw the Woman drunken with the blood of Saints. And when I saw her, says St. John, I wondered with great wonder.

If the Woman had been Heathen Rome, past or to come, why should St. John wonder? It is not wonderful that a heathen city should persecute the Saints of God. St. John had seen the blood of Christians spilt by imperial Rome. She had beheaded St. Paul, and had crucified St. Peter. He himself had been a Martyr in will, and was now an exile by her cruelty. Therefore he could not have wondered with great admiration if the Harlot was heathen Rome.

But it was a fit subject for surprise, that a Christian Church—a Church calling herself the "Mother of Christendom," "the spiritual Sion," "the Catholic Church"—should be drunken with the blood of the Saints: and at such a spectacle as that St. John might well have wondered with great admiration.

The Church of Rome has stained herself with the blood of Christians. She has erected the prisons, and prepared the rack, and lighted the fires, of "the Holy Office of the Inquisition" in Italy, Spain, America, and India. At this day she lauds one of her Popes, whom she has canonized, Pius the Fifth, in her Breviary, for being an Inflexible Inquisitor (Breviar. Roman. v. Maii, ed. Ratisbon, 1840, and p. 662, ed. Paris, 1842). As has been already stated, she has engraven the massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day on her coins, and represents it there as a work done by an Angel from heaven (Numismata Pontif. p. 87, ed. Paris, 1679). Strange to say, Rome has recently recast this medal, viz. in the year 1839, 19th Dec., and again in 1840 (see Irish Eccles. Journal, No. 13). Thus she has proclaimed her desire to identify herself with that massacre. She has inserted an Oath in her Pontifical, which requires her Bishops to "persecute and wage war against all whom she calls heretics" (Pontificale Romanum, p. 63, ed. Rom. 1818).

St. John might justly wonder with great admiration that such acts should be done by any who profess Christianity.

7. διατί ἐθαύμασας] Why didst thou wonder? I will tell thee the Mystery of the Woman, and of the Beast that carrieth her.

I will tell thee the Mystery: a Mystery is something secret and sacred. See above, 2 Thess. ii. 7, where St. Paul describes the "Mystery of Iniquity, or Lawlessness," and compare St. Paul's words there, in that remarkable prophecy, with the words of this prophecy of St. John. The one is like an inspired comment on the other. See above, on Rev. xiii., p. 244.

St. John, when he calls us to see the Harlot City, the seven-hilled City, displays her name on her forehead—Mystery.

Her title is Mystery, a secret spell, bearing a semblance of sanctity: a solemn rite which promises bliss to those who are initiated in it: a prodigy inspiring wonder and awe into the mind of St. John: an intricate enigma requiring for its solution the aid of the Spirit of God.

Heathen Rome doing the work of heathenism, and persecuting the Church, was no Mystery. Infidelity, blaspheming Christ, is no Mystery, therefore the Woman is not Heathen Rome; and she is not an Infidel power.

But a Christian Church, calling herself the Mother of Christendom, and yet "drunken with the blood of saints"—this is a Mystery. A Christian Church boasting herself to be the Bride, and yet being "the Harlot;" styling herself Sion, and being "Babylon"—this is a Mystery. A Mystery indeed it is, that, when she says to all "Come unto me," the voice from heaven should cry, "Come out of her, My People" (xviii. 4). A Mystery indeed it is, that she who boasts herself the city of Saints, should become "an habitation of devils:" that she who claims to be Infallible, should be said to "corrupt the earth:" that a self-named "Mother of Churches," should be called by the Holy Spirit the "Mother of Abominations:" that she who boasts to be Indefectible, should in one day be destroyed, and that Apostles should rejoice at her fall. Rev. xviii. 20.

Nearly Eighteen Centuries have passed away, since the Holy Spirit prophesied by the mouth of St. John, that this Mystery would be revealed in that City which was then the Queen of the Earth, the City on Seven Hills,—the City of Rome.

The Mystery was then dark, dark as midnight. Man's eye could not pierce the gloom. The fulfilment of the prophecy seemed improbable,—almost impossible. Age after age passed away. By degrees, the mist which hung over it became less thick. The clouds began to break. Some features of the dark Mystery began to appear, dimly at first, then more clearly, like Mountains at daybreak. Then the form of the Mystery became more and more distinct. The Seven Hills, and the Woman sitting upon them, became visible. Her voice was heard. Strange sounds of blasphemy were muttered by her. Then they became louder and louder. And the golden chalice in her hand, her scarlet attire, her pearls and jewels, glittered in the sun. Kings and Nations were seen prostrate at her feet, and drinking her cup. Saints were slain by her sword. And now the Prophecy has become clear, clear as noon-day; and we tremble at the sight, while we read the inscription, emblazoned in large letters, "Mystery, Babylon the Great," written by the hand of St. John, guided by the Spirit of God, on the forehead of the Church of Rome.

8. τὸ θηρίον] The Beast which thou sawest, was, and is not, and is about to ascend out of the bottomless pit or abyss. See xi. 7, and cp. ix. 1, 2. 11, concerning the meaning of the word abyss.

h ch. 13. 1, 18.

9 h Ὧδε ὁ νοῦς ὁ ἔχων σοφίαν· αἱ ἑπτὰ κεφαλαὶ ὄρη εἰσὶν ἑπτά, ὅπου ἡ γυνὴ κάθηται ἐπ' αὐτῶν.

10 Καὶ βασιλεῖς ἑπτά εἰσιν· οἱ πέντε ἔπεσαν, ὁ εἷς ἐστὶν, ὁ ἄλλος οὔπω ἦλθε,

---

The Beast was, in its Imperial form, and exists no longer in that shape; having received a deadly wound, and being killed in that respect (see above on xiii. 3. 12, and below on vv. 10, 11), and is about to ascend out of the abyss; that is, in this new form in which it will be described; and it goeth to destruction or perdition (ἀπώλειαν). Here again are other points of resemblance to St. Paul's Prophecy concerning the son of perdition (2 Thess. ii 3, ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀπωλείας): and this parallel is further traceable in the words at the end of the verse, καὶ πάρεσται, and he will appear—(which is the true reading, and received by almost all recent editors, instead of that of Elz. καίπερ ἔστι)—he will appear, or, literally, he will be present, πάρεσται. This word is to be compared with St. Paul's word παρουσία, Advent, a word also applied by him there to describe the Advent of Christ (2 Thess. ii. 1. 8; cp. Matt. xxiv. 3. 37. 39. 1 Cor. xv. 23. 1 Thess. ii. 19; iii. 13; iv. 15), and used by the Apostle to describe the Advent or Appearing of the Man of Sin (see on 2 Thess. ii. 9), and the word παρουσία signifies that the Coming of the Beast here described will manifest itself with a display of might and magnificence, imitating that of Christ. See the prophetic parallel above, p. 244, and cp. on v. 11.

The dwellers on the earth will wonder—seeing the Beast, that it was, and is not, and will appear.

Some interpreters render ὅτι, which, as if it were the neuter of ὅστις; but though ὅστις, and ἥτις, and οἵτινες are used as relative pronouns by St. John and other writers of the New Testament, yet the neuter is not so used, except when followed by ἄν.

9. Ὧδε ὁ νοῦς] Here is the mind or understanding that hath wisdom (cp. xiii. 18); that is, the mind that hath wisdom shows itself in the following explanation of the Mystery, which the Angel proceeds to reveal.

— αἱ ἑπτὰ κεφαλαί] The Seven Heads of the Beast are Seven Mountains where the Woman sitteth upon them: that is, they signify or represent those Seven Mountains; they are emblematic of them. On this sense of εἰσί, see above, i. 20.

Hence it is clear that the Seven Mountains are Seven real Mountains; for they are typified by something else, i. e. by the Seven Heads: and whatever is typified by something else, is not typical, but real; whatever is symbolized by a type is not a type.

Therefore we cannot agree with those who imagine that the City on the Seven Hills is only an ideal representation of some abstract quality, such as Worldliness or Superstition, without any special local existence. It has its seat on seven hills: and it is "the great city which reigned in St. John's age." See v. 18.

There is a great difference between the "Seven Hills" on which the Woman sitteth, and the "Many Waters" on which she sitteth, and "the Beast" on which she sitteth. The Hills are real: but the Beast and the Waters are symbolical. This is evident from the fact that the Angel interprets the meaning of the "Many Waters" (see v. 15), and of "the Beast" (see vv. 8—15), on which the Woman sitteth. But "the Seven Hills" are themselves the interpretation of the symbolic imagery of the seven Heads. These seven Mountains are the Seven Mountains of Rome. See above, preliminary note on this chapter. In the words of Bp. Andrewes here (Bellarmin. p. 287), "Septem Montes sunt, quibus insidet urbs, orbi notissimi."

10, 11. καὶ βασιλεῖς] and they (that is, the seven Heads) are, i. e. they represent, seven kings; the five are fallen; the one is, the other is not yet come; and when he is come, he must continue a little while, and the Beast who was, and is not, even he is an Eighth (King—not Head) and he is from out of the seven, and goeth unto perdition, or destruction (ἀπώλειαν).

The seven Heads are explained to represent seven Kings; these Kings are represented as successive and not as contemporaneous, like the Ten Horns;

What, then, are these Seven Kings?

Some recent Expositors (e. g. Ewald, Lücke) suppose them to be the first Seven Roman Emperors, beginning with Augustus.

But this opinion is untenable.

(1) It was unknown to Christian Antiquity. Ancient Expositors must have known whether this Vision had been fulfilled in the Emperors who had then lived; but none of the early Interpreters give this interpretation of it.

(2) It is grounded on the supposition that Augustus was the first Roman Emperor, not Julius, and that the Apocalypse was written in the time of the sixth Roman Emperor from Augustus (viz.), Galba: whereas, as Christian Antiquity testifies, it was not written till the age of the last of the Cæsars, Domitian. See p. 152.

(3) It is also founded on a notion, imputed to St. John, that Nero was again to come to life, and persecute the Church.

This strange supposition contravenes the belief of the Christian Church, which receives the Apocalypse as a divinely-inspired writing,—"the Revelation of Jesus Christ" (i. 1).

St. John's Prophecy is a sequel to that of Daniel (vii. 3—24), as is evident from the similarity of language, and particularly as to the Ten horns of the Beast; and it is to be interpreted from that Prophecy. The word βασιλεῖς, Kings, is used in the sense of kingdoms in this chapter (v. 12), and interchangeably with kingdoms in Daniel vii. 17. 23; cp. Isa. xxiii. 15.

The successive kingdoms typified by the Seven Heads seem to be the Kingdoms which were successively absorbed within the circle of the Roman Empire; in like manner as the Seven Hills, which are also here typified by the Seven Heads, were successively enclosed and embraced within the walls of the Roman City.

These kingdoms described in the Hebrew Scriptures by the Prophet Daniel, whose predictions are repeated and continued in the Apocalypse, are, (1) the Babylonian, (2) the Medo-Persian, (3) the Macedonian or Greek, (4) the Syrian, (5) the Egyptian, (6) the Roman Heathen Imperial.

The Roman City was like a microcosmic epitome of the Roman Empire. The Royal Capital of the Mistress of the World was a Mirror of that Universal Empire, of which she was the Queen.

Hence we may recognize the propriety of the imagery of the seven Heads, as emblematic of the Seven Mountains received within the Roman City, and also of the Seven Kingdoms to be absorbed in her universal rule.

At first sight it might seem surprising, that the seven Heads should be made to serve a double purpose, and to typify two things which did not appear to have any connexion with each other (viz. the seven Mountains of Rome, and the seven Kings, or Kingdoms of Rome); but the strangeness of this twofold application is removed by the above consideration, and the imagery is seen to be as appropriate as it is beautiful. The drawing together of the seven Mountains into the circle of the Roman city is combined in like manner by Roman Poets with the drawing together of the world's Kingdoms into the domain of the Roman Empire. Thus the great national Poet, Virgil, unites the two acts of contraction and absorption, in consecutive lines;

> "Scilicet et rerum facta est pulcherrima Roma, > Septemque una sibi muro circumdedit arces."
> (Georg. ii. 534.)

And again he says,

> "En hujus, nate, auspiciis illa inclita Roma
> Imperium terris, animos æquabit Olympo,
> Septemque una sibi muro circumdabit arces."
> (Æn. vi. 782.)

This exposition, as to its main principle, is to be found in the ancient commentaries of Andreas and others, Catena, p. 434, and it is well illustrated in Archdeacon Harrison's Lectures, pp. 376. 449, and it seems preferable to that view which regards the heads as emblems of the successive forms of Government of Rome itself.

This process of absorption had been predicted by Daniel in vii. 4—19, and xi. 5—30, and both these prophecies of Daniel extend also to a description of that other power which is the subject of St. John's prophecy in the thirteenth and fourteenth chapters; and thus Daniel's prophecies had prepared the way for the Apocalypse, and are continued and completed by it.

The Angel says to St. John, "The one (King) now is, or exists;" i. e. the Roman Imperial Heathen Power, which was the Sixth, is now in existence.

This Imperial Power might well be called "the one," for it was the central principle of the whole. It was to the Roman world, what the Capitoline Hill was to the other hills of Rome.

The Angel adds, "The other" (i. e. the Seventh King or Kingdom) "is not yet come, and when he comes, he must continue (only) a little while."

The Seventh King can hardly represent, as some have supposed, the kingdom of Odoacer, A.D. 476, for this was a kingdom of Italy, and in Italy; and added nothing to the Power of Rome. Nor can it be the Gothic kingdom of Theodoric in Italy, A.D. 493—526; nor the Eastern Christian Emperor, or his Deputy, the Exarch, at Ravenna, A.D. 566; for these were not augmentations of the Roman sovereignty, but were rather like a continuation of the Roman Imperial Power in another form.

The Seventh King represents some Power which was first extrinsic to Rome, and was afterwards added to Rome; so as to be absorbed within the precincts of her Empire, like another or Seventh Mountain enclosed within the circuit of her walls.

There was a Power which rose upon the ruins of the Italian Kingdom above mentioned, and which endured only for a short time. This was the Imperial Power of Germany.

The following historical summary from C. W. Koch's Revolutions of Europe, Periods iii. iv. and v. pp. 29–37. 62, ed. Lond. 1839, illustrates this statement;

"In the eleventh century, Germany was the ruling Power of Europe. Its greatness gave rise to a system of polity which the Popes took care to support with all their credit and authority. According to this system, the whole of Christendom composed a single Republic, of which the Pope was the Spiritual head, and the Emperors of Germany the Secular. The Emperors had the election of the Pope.... But however vast their power seemed to be, it was far from being a solid and durable fabric .... and in course of time a new powerful Monarchy arose on that of the German Empire: that of the Roman Pontiffs, which monopolized both spiritual and temporal dominion, and extended its influence over all the kingdoms of Christendom."

Here is a striking commentary on St. John's description of the Woman "sitting on the Many Waters" (vv. 1. 15), and on the Beast with its Ten Heads or Kingdoms, into which the Roman Empire was to be split at its dissolution, according to the Prophecy of Daniel, vii. 7. 20. 24; cp. Dan. ii. 41, 42.

"This supremacy, whose mechanism is an object of astonishment to the most subtle politicians, was the work of Gregory VII. (Hildebrand, A.D. 1073—1085) .... who had scarcely obtained the Imperial confirmation of his election, when he put in execution the project he had so long been concerting and preparing, viz. the creation of a spiritual despotism, extending to Priests as well as Kings, making the Supreme Pontiff the Arbiter in all affairs, both civil and ecclesiastical."

"At that time, the City of Rome, and the whole ecclesiastical States, as well as the greater part of Italy, were subject to the Kings of Germany, who nominated or confirmed the Popes ... the Popes had used to date their acts from the years of the Emperor's reign, and to stamp their coin with his name."

The writer proceeds to show how the Imperial power was supplanted by the Papal. The Popes forbade sovereigns, under pain of Excommunication, to exercise the right of Investiture: and the Papal Power was aggrandized by the enforcement of Celibacy on the clergy, and by the forgery of the false Decretals, received into the Canon Law, and supplanting the Civil Law and the Common Law; and by imposing Oaths of allegiance on all Ecclesiastics; and by means of the Pallium, which all Archbishops were required to sue for and obtain from Rome.

"The custom of dating their acts from the years of the Emperor's reign, and coining their money with the name of the Emperor, disappeared after the time of Pope Gregory VII.

"The Empire thus fell into gradual decay, while the Pontifical Power, rising on its ruins, gained new accessions of strength; particularly under Pope Innocent III. (A.D. 1198–1216), by the multiplication of religious orders for the aggrandizement of the Papacy" (cp. note above, xiii. 11. 13); and by the Crusades, which were turned eventually even against Christians, such as the Greeks and the Waldenses, on the plea that they were schismatics and heretics (p. 43); and by the institution of the Inquisition: and by Interdicts. "God," said Pope Innocent, "made two great Lights, the Sun and the Moon (Gen. i. 16); that is, the Pontifical and the Royal Power: and the Pontifical is as much greater than the Royal, as the Sun is greater than the Moon; and as the Moon derives her power from the Sun, so does the Imperial Power from the Pope" (in Decret. Greg. I. Tit. 33, cap. 6).

"The efforts made by the Emperors Frederick I. and II. to establish the tottering Throne of the Empire ended in nothing, the House of Hohenstaufen was deprived of all its crowns, and persecuted to the scaffold."

At the end of the thirteenth century "the Pontifical Power was in its zenith, and the Popes assumed the title of Masters of the World. Boniface VIII. went even further than his predecessors had done, and declared that God had given two swords, spiritual and temporal, to the successors of St. Peter (see on Luke xxii. 32. 38), the former to be exercised by the Church alone, the other by the Secular Powers, in submission to the Pope: all temporal power was made to depend on the spiritual, which is judged by no man (1 Cor. ii. 15); and 'we affirm,' said Boniface VIII., 'that it is absolutely necessary to salvation to every human creature to be subject to the Pope of Rome'" (Pope Boniface VIII., A.D. 1294, Extrav. Com. lib. i. tit. 8, cap. 1).

With these statements the reader may compare the masterly summary of Guicciardini (lib. iv.), expunged by the Roman Censors from many editions of his history, but reprinted in Heidegger's Historia Papatûs, p. 585, Amst. 1684.

See also Gibbon, chap. lxix.. and Hallam's Middle Ages, chap. vii., and the valuable collection of original authorities in Gieseler, Church History, Third Period, Division Third, § 47 to § 66.

11. καὶ τὸ θηρίον] And the Beast—even he is an Eighth (King); he is ὄγδοος, not ὀγδόη (κεφαλή). It is not said that the Beast is an eighth head, as some have interpreted the words; but that he is an eighth, and that he is out of the seven, that is, he rises after, and from out of the seven.

This is descriptive of the Roman power as it rose to supremacy under the Papacy, and carried the Harlot as on a Throne. It was an eighth kingdom, it rose after the Seven and from them. It rose after the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Greek, Syrian, Egyptian, Roman Imperial, German Imperial; and, as represented in this chapter, it was diffused through the whole body of the θηρίον, and animated the whole.

It was like the Little Horn which grew out of the Beast of Daniel, and absorbed the Power of the Beast, so that it became the Beast. See above on xiii., p. 224.

The Beast as here displayed to St. John is called an eighth King, or Kingdom; and in Holy Scripture the number eight is the number of Resurrection (see on Luke xxiv. 1). Rome is the Western Babylon; and the Western Babylonian Power is, as it were, the octave of the Eastern. The Eastern Babylonian Power is the first in the Prophecies of Daniel. The Western Babylonian Power is the eighth in those of St. John.

And, if we may venture to use the expression, it is, as it were, like a Parody of the Power of Christ.

Observe the antithesis between Christ's power and this Antichristian power. Christ has His παρουσία or Advent. This Power has its Advent also. See on v. 8, and on 2 Thess. ii. 8, compared with 2 Thess. ii. 9, where the two παρουσίαι, or Advents, of the two adverse Powers are contrasted.

Christ died on the Sixth day; so the Beast was killed in its Sixth Head. See above, xiii. 3.

The Lamb (Ἀρνίον) received a deadly wound, and was slain (ἐσφαγμένον, see above, v. 6); the Beast (θηρίον) received a deadly wound, and was slain (ἐσφαγμένον, also xiii. 3).

The Lamb was, and is not, and will appear again. He was hidden for a "little while" on the seventh day, when He was in the grave; and then reappeared on the eighth Day, the day of His Resurrection (see John xvi. 16—24). So the Antichristian Power was; and then he was not for a time; and then he reappeared—in more than his former power and glory—in the Eighth Kingdom—that of the Papacy.

But now observe the end.

Christ has two Advents. He died, and rose again, and ascended into heaven to live for evermore. "I am He that liveth, and was dead, and lo! I am alive for evermore" (i. 18; ii. 8). And His second Advent will destroy him "whose Advent is with all power and signs and lying wonders" (2 Thess. ii. 9, 10).

The Lamb died, and liveth for evermore to give salvation unto all His faithful followers; but the Beast died and lives again, and goeth on to destruction (ἀπώλειαν: cp. 2 Thess. ii. 3. 8. 10).

12. καὶ τὰ δέκα κέρατα] and the Ten Horns which thou sawest are Ten Kings, which have not yet received a kingdom; but receive authority as kings one hour with the Beast.

They are Kings or Kingdoms growing out of the Roman Empire at its dismemberment. See Irenæus, v. 26. S. Hippolytus (pp. 14–16. 153, ed. Lagarde), and above on xiii. 1.

By saying that the Horns will receive power as kings, St. John intimates (says Andreas, Caten. p. 435; cp. Irenæus, p. 787, Stieren; p. 440, Grabe) the precariousness of their power, and by saying that they receive it one hour, he marks the shortness of its duration in a state of coalition and union with one another and with the Beast. Especially it marks the shortness of its duration, compared with the power of its contrast, the LAMB, which is not for an hour,—but for ever. 13. οὗτοι μίαν γνώμην ἔχουσι] These have one mind, or purpose, and give their power and their authority to the Beast; these will make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb will conquer them (for He is lord of Lords and king of Kings): and they with Him who are called and elect,—will conquer them.

15. τὰ ὕδατα] The Waters which thou sawest, where the Harlot sitteth, are Peoples, and Multitudes, and Nations, and Tongues. An expressive picture of the vast spiritual dominion of Papal Rome. See above, preliminary note, p. 246; and here is another resemblance to Babylon. Cp. Jer. li. 13.

16. καὶ τὰ δέκα κέρατα ἃ εἶδες καὶ τὸ θηρίον] and the ten Horns which thou sawest and the Beast, they (οὗτοι, masculine, i. e. the Kings, v. 12) will hate the harlot, and will make her desolate and naked, and will tear her flesh. Elz. has ἐπὶ τὸ θηρίον, i. e. the ten horns which thou sawest upon the Beast. And so the majority of Cursive MSS., and some early MSS. of the Vulgate. But καὶ, and, is found in A, B, and in twelve Cursive MSS. cited by Scrivener, p. 553; and the best MSS. of the Vulgate, and in the Syriac Version, and Arabic and Æthiopic, and in Hippolytus, p. 18, ed. Lagarde; and Irenæus seems to have so read the passage (v. 26), and this reading is received by Griesb., Scholz, Bengel, and Winer, p. 123, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles, and there seems little doubt that this is the true reading.

Here is another proof that the Harlot cannot be Heathen Rome; for it is certain that the Heathen City of Rome was not destroyed by any powers that grew out of the Empire of Rome.

The Harlot sitting on the Beast is the City of Rome. This is allowed by all. See the preliminary note above, p. 245. The Beast has been represented by St. John, in the successive stages of his existence, first as the heathen Roman Empire; and next, as subordinate to the Papacy, and doing its pleasure, and, as it were, incorporated in it, and animated by it. And now this prophetic sentence reveals the wonderful result, that the Horns of the Beast, that is, some Powers that have grown out of the Roman Empire, will one day be alienated from the Papacy, and will hate the Harlot and devour her flesh. As Tertullian says (de Resur. carnis, § 25), "The Harlot City is to receive its deserved retribution from the Ten Kings, which will grow out of the dismemberment of the Roman Empire,—'abcessione Romani statûs.'"

The Horns or Kingdoms growing out of the Empire of Rome will turn against the City of Papal Rome. The Horns are here put first, as the prime movers in the work of retribution on the Harlot City. And it is added that the Beast, which was once Heathen (see above on v. 3), and afterwards became subject to the Papacy, and identified with it, and is described as such in the xiiith chapter, and which is represented even in this Chapter as bearing the Harlot on its back (vv. 3. 7), and as wearing the scarlet livery of the Harlot (see above on v. 3), will eventually hate her and will devour her flesh, that is, they will invade and seize her territory, and will spoil and destroy her temporal power, and will burn her up with fire. Time will show whether this fire portends a literal conflagration of the City by those Powers, or whether this word is used to signify signal destruction, because burning was the punishment inflicted on Priests' daughters who were guilty of harlotry. (Lev. xxi. 9.)

This work of hostile devastation is not displayed in this Vision, in which the Harlot is exhibited as still dominant; but it is pre-announced by the Angel as a prophecy.

It is said, that the Horns and the Beast will do this under the sovereign control of the mysterious and inscrutable purpose of Almighty God, employing some former vassals of the Papacy to execute His Almighty will in punishing it for its sins. The ruin of Papal Rome will not be effected by Protestant Kings or Nations, but by Papal Princes and People rising against her. They will suppose that they are following their own devices, and working out their own purpose; but they will be executing the decree, and accomplishing the purpose, of God. And therefore, with a repetition of words, making this truth more striking and emphatic, it is said, "God hath put it into their hearts to perform His mind, and perform one mind;" though differing in other respects, they will be united in this; and "give their kingdom to the Beast until the words of God shall have been fulfilled."

Here is another parallel to the history of the literal Babylon. She fell by the arms of some who had been lately subject to her. God gave a commission against her to Elam (Isa. xxi 2), in which Susa was (Dan. viii. 2), and which was subject to Babylon; and He "raised up the spirit of the Kings of the Medes, for His device was against Babylon to destroy it" (Jer. li. 11); and thus He executed His purpose upon her. So will it one day be with the mystical Babylon—Rome.

How and when this will come to pass is hidden in the counsels of God. See further on xviii. 9, 10, p. 254.

18. καὶ ἡ γυνή] And the Woman which thou sawest is the great City which reigneth over the Kings of the earth. See the preliminary note on this chapter, p. 244.

CH. XVIII.] Fuller description of the future FALL of the MYSTICAL BABYLON.

It is to be carefully observed, that though Babylon falls, the Beast still remains. The fall of Papal Rome will not be the destruction of the Papacy. See below, xix. 19.

1. μετὰ ταῦτα εἶδον] After this I saw. The language of this chapter, concerning the Fall of Papal Rome, is derived from that of Hebrew Prophecy, describing the Fall of Babylon. It is here foretold, that Rome will become, what Babylon is, utterly reduced to a state of desolation.

Here then is another proof that these Apocalyptic prophecies do not concern ancient heathen Rome; and that they were not fulfilled when Rome was captured by the Goths. That event took place 1450 years ago; and even if Rome had then been made desolate, which was not the case, it could not be said that her capture at that time was the fulfilment of these prophecies; for the desolation which these prophecies describe is final and for ever (see vv. 2. 8. 20—23; xix. 3). They therefore concern Rome as she is now, and their fulfilment is still future. See above, preliminary note to chap. xvii., p. 245.

This chapter is quoted by S. Hippolytus, de Christo et Antichristo, § 40, p. 18, Lagarde.

2. ἔπεσεν, ἔπεσε] Fell, fell Babylon the Great! The aorist here used, and in xiv. 8, describes the suddenness of the fall of so great a city: the words which follow describe her state after the fall. See above, on xiv. 8, p. 233.

3. στρήνους] riotous luxury. The idea contained in this word στρῆνος is further expressed in v. 7, by ἐστρηνίασε, and v. 10. The radical meaning of the word is seen in the words στρηνὴς, streng (Germ.), strong, strenuus, strain, struggle, conveying an idea of power showing itself in strong emotions, like the neighings of an untamed steed, exulting in its strength; or like the heavings of an Earthquake, or the burstings forth of a Volcano. Hence it is applied to describe insolence and voluptuousness breaking out into boastful vauntings of pride, and dissolute riot and revelry; like those of Babylon on the eve of her fall. Cp. Lobeck, ad Phrynich. p. 381, and the use of the word by the LXX in 2 Kings xix. 28, where God says of Sennacherib, τὸ στρῆνός σου ἀνέβη ἐν τοῖς ὠσί μου, "thy rage and thy tumult is come up into mine ears—therefore will I put My hook in thy nose, and My bridle in thy lips, and will turn thee back."

Elz. has ἐξέλθατε here; A has ἐξέλθατε, and so Tisch.; Lach. has ἔξελθε, which is in B, C.

This passage supplies an answer to the allegations of those who say, that the identification of the Apocalyptic Babylon with Papal Rome involves the supposition that the promise of Christ's presence with His Church had failed (Matt. xvi. 18; xxviii. 20), and that the Church of Christ had ceased to be visible, and had become utterly apostate. Such a supposition as that must, indeed, be disclaimed and reprobated; and the interpretation in question gives no countenance to it. The Babylon of the Apocalypse is Papal Rome; but the Church of Papal Rome never was the whole Catholic Church; there were Greek Churches, and African Churches, and Asiatic Churches, which never accepted the main errors and corruptions of Papal Rome, enforcing the doctrine of the Pope's Supremacy and Infallibility,—which are the essential characteristics of Popery as distinguished from, and opposed to Christianity. Those Churches did not accept the doctrine of the indispensable necessity of Obedience to his decrees, on pain of eternal condemnation; nor do they accept it to this day. Besides, many there were in the Communion of Rome, who did not drink all the ingredients of her cup. Nor did she enforce her novel doctrines on the faith of her Members, until the Council of Trent in the sixteenth century; and at that time, Churches in the West, such as the Churches of England and Ireland, wearied with her usurpations, and illumined by God's Holy Word lighted up anew with fresh radiance by the gracious influences of the Holy Spirit, reformed themselves. And even now, at this present time,—as this prophecy reveals,—when the cup of false doctrine in the hand of the mystical Babylon seems to have received its final infusion, in the addition of that last new article to her creed, the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception, and when that infusion seems to be making the cup of her guilt to overflow (below, v. 6), and also to be making God's cup of indignation to overflow upon her (cp. Ps. lxxv. 8; and above, xvi. 19); yet still, even now, the Holy Spirit, Who reads the heart, and who wrote the Apocalypse, sees some People of God in Rome. Now, on the eve of her fall, He cries aloud by the voice of this heavenly Angel, "Come out of her, My People!"

5. ὅτι ἐκολλήθησαν] because her sins clave even to Heaven. Observe this remarkable word ἐκολλήθησαν, were glued; a reading restored from A, B, C by recent Editors, instead of the weaker word ἠκολούθησαν in Elz. On the signification and usage of the word in the N. T., see Matt. xix. 5. Luke xv. 15. Acts v. 13; viii. 29. 1 Cor. vi. 16, 17. Cp. Pindar, Olymp. v. 29, where the metaphor is applied to describe a continued series of buildings, joined on to one another.

There seems to be a reference to the building up of the tower of Babel, with slime for mortar, that its top might reach to heaven. Gen. xi. 3, 4.

The sense is this: Rome was designed by God to be a holy Church, building up the spiritual fabric of sound doctrine and discipline; and building up her people into a living temple, holy and acceptable to the Lord. But instead of this, she has built up a spiritual Babel; she has built up a tower of pride. Her sins, like planks of wood, have been attached, and soldered, and stuck fast together to each other in succession, as it were by glue, or pitch, or some other tenacious cement, till at length they have reached to heaven. Cp. Jer. li. 9, concerning Babylon, ἤγγικεν εἰς οὐρανὸν τὸ κρῖμα αὐτῆς, ἐξῆρεν ἕως τῶν ἄστρων, and the confession of Ezra, ix. 6, "our iniquities are increased over our heads, and our trespass is grown up into the heavens," and Baruch i. 20, ἐκολλήθη εἰς ἡμᾶς τὰ κακὰ, and Ps. lxiii. 8, ἐκολλήθη ἡ ψυχή μου ὀπίσω σου.

The Babel-tower of sin is a tower which man builds in pride, and when its top reaches to heaven, then it is suddenly thrown down (v. 19).

6. ἀπόδοτε] Render ye. Cp. Ps. cxxxvii. 8. Jer. l. 15. 29.

7, 8. κάθημαι βασίλισσα] I sit a Queen, and shall never see sorrow. See Isa. xlvii. 7—9, concerning Babylon. It is remarkable, that the Church of Rome acknowledges the divine inspiration of the Apocalypse, and yet lays claim to those very qualities and attributes, which are assigned in the Apocalypse to the Harlot, and are there specified as the distinguishing traits and characteristics of Babylon. This appears as follows:—

1. The Church of Rome arrogates Indefectibility.

And the Harlot says here, that she is a Queen for ever.

2. The Church of Rome boasts of Universality.

And the Harlot is seated on many waters, which are Nations, and Peoples, and Tongues, xvii. 15.

3. The Church of Rome vaunts temporal felicity, and claims supremacy over all.

And the Harlot has kings at her feet.

4. The Church of Rome points to the Unity of all her members in one creed, and to their subjection under one supreme visible Head.

And the Harlot requires all to drink of her cup, v. 3.

Hence it appears that Rome's "notes of the Church" are marks of the Harlot: her trophies of triumph are stigmas of shame; the claims which she makes to be Sion, confirm the proof that she is Babylon.

Therefore, let no one be confounded by the wide extent, the temporal prosperity, the alleged Unity and Universality, and the long impunity, of Rome. It was prophesied by St. John that the mystical Babylon would have a wide and enduring sway, that God, in His long-suffering to her, would give her time to repent, if haply she would repent; that He would heal her, if she would be healed; but that she would not repent, and that her sins would at length cleave to heaven, and that she would come in remembrance before God. And when that hour arrives, then, woe will betide the Preachers of the Gospel, if they have not taken up the warning of St. John, and sounded the trumpet of alarm, "Come out of her, My people, and be not partakers of her sins, lest ye receive also of her plagues" (v. 4). See Ezek. iii. 18—20.

9. οἱ βασιλεῖς τῆς γῆς] The Kings of the earth who committed fornication with her, and lived delicately, will wail over her. A marvellous Prophecy. Some of those very Powers, who were once vassals of Rome, will one day rise against her: they will be instruments in God's hands of His retributive justice upon her; and in a mysterious transport of indignation and wild ecstasy of revenge, they will tear her flesh (see above on xvii. 16, 17); and yet when they have done the deed, they will weep over her.

The reason of this seems to be, that the Fall of Rome may perhaps be followed by a triumph of Anarchy and an outbreak of Infidelity. It will be followed by those disastrous consequences, unless the Rulers of the World, especially in States formerly subject to the Papacy, endeavour to restore and maintain true Religion, which is the only safeguard of Thrones. Unless they do this, her fall will be *their*s.

10. μιᾷ ὥρᾳ] in one hour; that is, suddenly, in a very short time. See above, xvii. 12, and below, vv. 16. 19, the authorities in Wetstein, p. 827, and the parallel in Jer. li. 8, describing the suddenness of the capture of Babylon, ἄφνω ἔπεσε Βαβυλών.

11—14. καὶ οἱ ἔμποροι τῆς γῆς] the Merchants of the Earth weep. The mystical Babylon is here compared to her great Assyrian prototype, the Merchant City of the Chaldees. The Church of Rome, "the general Mart of Christendom," has endeavoured to extend her spiritual traffic into all parts of the World. She affirms that her own Communion is a spiritual harbour of peace, and a haven of salvation to all; and that no one can be saved, who does not ply his vessel in the waters of her spiritual Euphrates, and have commerce with her, and bring his goodly merchandise to her spiritual emporium. See above on xiii. 16, 17, and the words of Hooker, quoted above, p. 248.

12. ξύλον θύϊνον] thyine-wood, "arbor vitæ;" an aromatic wood, used for incense, and for building of temples. See Theophrast. Hist. Plant. v. 5. Plin. N. H. xiii. 16. Wetstein, p. 826. Billerbeck, Flora, p. 234. It is supposed by some to be the same wood as was called citrus by the Romans, and to be the white-cedar. See Winer, R. W. B. ii. p. 612, art. "Thinenholz."

13. κινάμωμον καὶ ἄμωμον] cinnamon and amomum; both were used as unguents for the hair. Lucan. x. 166—168. Martial, viii. 77. Wetstein, p. 829. Billerbeck, pp. 2. 105. Winer, R. W. B. art. "Zimmt," ii. p. 734. Elz. omits καὶ ἄμωμον. On this figurative imagery, concerning the use of perfumes and unguents, as expressive of the lures and fascinations of spiritual harlotry, see Isa. lvii. 9. Compare also Ezek. xxiii.

— σεμίδαλιν] fine flour. Gen. xviii. 6. Levit. ii. 1, 2. Plin. xviii. 20.

— ῥεδῶν] rhedarum; a word of Gallic origin for a chariot of four wheels. Quintil. i. 5. Isidor. xx. 17. Wetstein.

— σωμάτων, καὶ ψυχὰς ἀνθρώπων] of bodies, and souls of men. The reservation of these words for the close of this long catalogue of articles of commerce, appears to be designed to remind the reader that it is a spiritual commerce which is here described: a commerce in bodies and souls of men; a Spiritual Slave Trade. Such is the commerce of Rome.

The Apostles declare that we are bought with the blood of Christ, that we have been redeemed from bondage into freedom by that inestimable price (1 Cor. vi. 20. 1 Pet. i. 18, 19), and that we must stand fast in that liberty with which Christ has made us free, and not be entangled with the yoke of bondage (Gal. v. 1), and not become the servants of men (1 Cor. vii. 23), and to know no other Master but Christ, and no other service but that of God, which is perfect freedom.

But the Church of Rome has encroached on this Christian liberty. As Bp. Sanderson says (iii. p. 282), "the usurpations of the Bishops of Rome upon the consciences of men, show them to be the true successors of the Scribes and Pharisees, in laying heavy burdens upon men's shoulders, which they ought not (Matt. xxiii. 4. Mark vii. 9), and in rejecting the Word of God to establish their own traditions, rather than to be the successors of St. Peter, who forbiddeth dominatum in Cleris." See above on 1 Pet. v. 3.

17. πᾶς ὁ ἐπὶ τόπον πλέων] every one who saileth to the place. So A, C, and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles. B has τὸν τόπον. But the article is often omitted after prepositions, when the substantive itself sufficiently declares its own meaning without the aid of the article. See Bp. Middleton on the Article, part i. ch. vi., and cp. the examples in Winer, § 18. Elz. has πᾶς ἐπὶ τῶν πλοίων ὁ ὅμιλος.

19. καὶ ἔβαλον χοῦν ἐπὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς αὐτῶν] and they cast dust on their heads. Cp. Josh. vii. 6. Job ii. 12.

20. καὶ οἱ ἀπόστολοι] and ye Apostles. Rejoice over her, O heaven, and ye Saints, and ye Apostles, and ye Prophets, for God judged your cause from out of her: that is, He has taken your cause out of her hands into His own. See above, vi. 10, and below, xix. 2. Cp. Ps. ix. 4; lxxiv. 23; cxl. 12, and v. 24, and xix. 2. It has been alleged by some that this city cannot be Papal Rome, but is Heathen Rome, because Apostles have not been put to death by Papal Rome, but were martyred by Heathen Rome.

But it is not said here, that Apostles and Prophets were martyred by this Apocalyptic City,—though even this might be said in a certain sense; see xi. 7, 8,—but that they were wronged by her, and that God will avenge those wrongs. Papal Rome has done grievous wrong to Apostles and Prophets in many ways, especially by placing her own unwritten Traditions, and the Apocryphal Books, on a par with their divinely-inspired writings (see her own words in the IVth Session of the Council of Trent, April 8th, 1546), and by withholding the Holy Scriptures from the people (see above on xi. 9); thus doing much to hinder and frustrate their work, and to make "the Word of God of none effect." Cp. below, xix. 4.

21. καὶ ἦρεν εἷς ἄγγελος] And one Angel threw a huge stone like a millstone down into the sea, and said, So shall Babylon be cast down, and never more be found. On this use of εἷς see above, viii. 13. They who say that the Apocalyptic Babylon fell, when Rome was taken by the Goths, contradict this voice of the Angel; and the stones of the Roman City, still standing in stately magnificence, cry out against that exposition. But those stones will one day be cast down for ever. Cp. Jer. li. 63, 64, where Jeremiah's roll, with a stone tied to it, is made to sink into the Euphrates, as an emblem of the fall of the literal Babylon. The fall of the mystical Babylon is here represented as equally complete.

22. φωνὴ μύλου] the sound of the millstone. Cp. Jer. xxv. 10, in the original Hebrew, which St. John here follows. Some MSS. of the LXX do not mention the sound of the millstone.

Retrospect of the Foregoing Chapters XI.—XVII.

The awful words of the divine prophecy contained in this and the foregoing chapters, demand some practical application.

The delivery of the Little Roll to St. John, by the Mighty Angel, Christ Himself, in the Tenth Chapter, was accompanied with a commission to prophesy "upon many Peoples, and Nations, and Languages, and Kings" (x. 11).

That commission has been executed in the foregoing chapters, from the eleventh to the seventeenth inclusive: and we have now seen the vision of the future downfall of the Great City, the capital seat of the Power which is the subject of these chapters.

The Book of Revelation delivers a warning from Almighty God to the World. It proclaims the peril and unhappiness of those who are enthralled by Rome. And its prophetic and comminatory uses ought to be pointed out by Christian Ministers, and to be acknowledged by Christian Congregations. They forfeit a great blessing and incur great danger, if they neglect these divinely-appointed uses of the Apocalypse, particularly in the present age, when the Church of Rome is busily employed in spreading her snares around them, to make them victims of her deceits, prisoners of her power, slaves of her will, and partners of her doom.

Many excellent works have been composed by English Divines, in Vindication of the Church of England from the charge of Schism, preferred against her by Romish Controversialists, for her conduct at the Reformation in the sixteenth century; when she cleared herself from Romish errors, novelties, and corruptions.

It has been shown in those Vindications, that it is the duty of all Churches to shun schisms and strifes, and to seek peace, and ensue it (Ps. xxxiv. 14. 1 Pet. iii. 11). But it has also been shown, that Unity in error is not true Unity, but is rather to be called a Conspiracy against the God of Unity and Truth.

Doubtless there is Unity, when every thing in Nature is wrapped in the gloom of Night, and bound with the chains of Sleep. There is Unity, when the Earth is congealed by frost, and mantled in snow. There is Unity, when the human voice is still, the hand motionless, the breath suspended, and the frame locked in the grasp of Death. And doubtless there is Unity, when men surrender their Reason, and sacrifice their Liberty, and stifle their Conscience, and seal up Scripture, and deliver themselves captives to the Church of Rome. But this is not the Unity of vigilance and light; it is the Unity of sleep and darkness. It is not the Unity of warmth and life; it is the Unity of cold and death. It is not true Unity, for it is not Unity in the Truth.

Therefore, since it has been proved by Appeals to Reason, Scripture, and Antiquity, that the Church of Rome has built hay and stubble on the one foundation laid by Christ (1 Cor. iii. 12): that she has added to the Catholic Faith many errors and corruptions which mar and vitiate it; and since, as the Holy Spirit teaches us in the Apocalypse, it is the duty of every Church, which has fallen into error, to repent (Rev. iii. 3); and since Jesus Christ Himself, our Great High Priest, walks in the midst of the Golden Candlesticks and says, that when a Church has left her first love, He will remove her Candlestick out of its place, except she repent (Rev. ii. 5), and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die (Rev. iii. 2); and since the corruptions of one Church afford no palliation or excuse for those of another, for, as the Prophet says, though Israel play the Harlot, let not Judah sin (Hos. iv. 15); and, as Christ Himself teaches, though the Church of Sardis be dead (Rev. iii. 1), and Laodicea be neither hot nor cold (Rev. iii. 15), yet their sister Ephesus must remember whence she has fallen, and do her first works (Rev. ii. 5), and Pergamos must repent, or He will come quickly, and fight against her with the sword of His mouth (Rev. ii. 16), therefore, it was justly concluded by the best English Divines, that no desire of Unity on our part, nor reluctance on the part of Rome to cast off her errors, could exempt England from the duty of Reformation; and if Rome, instead of removing her corruptions, refused to communicate with England, unless England consented to communicate with Rome in those corruptions, then no love of Unity could justify England in complying with this requisition of Rome; for Unity in error is not Christian Unity; but, by imposing the necessity of erring as a term of Union, Rome became guilty of a breach of Unity, and the sin of Schism lies at her door.

This has been clearly demonstrated by our best English Divines; especially by Richard Hooker, Bishop Andrewes, and Archbishop Bramhall; and a careful study of that proof is requisite for all those whose duty it is to teach others.

But there are many persons who have not the opportunity of perusing their works; and they who have, will not forget that those works are the works of men.

Therefore, God be thanked that there is another work on this subject; a Work not dictated by man, but by the Holy Spirit of God; a Work, accessible to all,—the Apocalypse.

The Holy Spirit, Who foresees all things, and is the Ever-blessed Teacher, Guide, and Comforter of the Church, was graciously pleased to provide a heavenly antidote for dangerous, wide-spread, and long-enduring evils, by dictating the Apocalypse to St. John nearly 1800 years ago. He foresaw that the Church of Rome would fall away from the truth, and would adulterate it by many "gross and grievous abominations," and that she would anathematize all who would not communicate with her, and denounce them as cut off from the body of Christ and from hope of everlasting salvation. He foresaw, that she would exercise a wide and dominant sway for many generations, by boldly iterated assertions of Unity, Antiquity, Sanctity, and Universality. He foresaw also, that these pretensions would be supported by the civil sword of many secular Governments, among which the Roman Empire would be divided at its dissolution; and that Rome would thus be enabled to display herself to the world in an august attitude of Imperial power, and with the dazzling splendour of temporal felicity. He foresaw also, that the Church of Rome would captivate the Imaginations of men by the fascinations of Art allied with Religion; and would ravish their senses, and rivet their admiration, by gaudy colours, and stately pomp, and prodigal magnificence. He foresaw, that she would beguile their credulity by Miracles and Mysteries, Apparitions and Dreams, Trances and Ecstasies, and would appeal to such evidence in support of her strange doctrines. He foresaw likewise, that she would enslave men, and much more women, by practising on their affections, and by accommodating herself, with dexterous pliancy, to their weaknesses, relieving them from the burden of thought, and from the perplexity of doubt, by proffering the aid of Infallibility; soothing the sorrows of the mourner by dispensing pardon and promising peace to the departed; removing the load of guilt from the oppressed conscience by the ministries of the Confessional, and by nicely-poised compensations for sin; and that she would flourish for many centuries in proud and prosperous impunity, before her sins would cleave to heaven, and come in remembrance before God (Rev. xvi. 19; xviii. 5). He foresaw, that many generations of men would thus be tempted to fall from the faith, and become victims of deadly error; and that they who clung to the truth would be exposed to cozening flatteries, and fierce assaults, and savage tortures from her.

He foresaw these things, and wrote the Apocalypse.

In this Divine Book, the Spirit of God has pourtrayed the Church of Rome, such as none but He could have foreseen she would become, and such as, alas! she has become. He has thus broken her magic spells; He has taken the wand of enchantment from her hand; He has lifted the mask from her face; and with His Divine Hand He has written her true character in large letters, and has planted her title on her forehead, to be seen and read by all,—"MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF THE ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH" (Rev. xvii. 5).

Thus the Almighty and All-wise God Himself has vouchsafed to be the Arbiter between Babylon and Sion, between the Harlot and the Bride, between Rome and the Church. And therefore, with the Apocalypse in our hands, we need not fear the anathemas, which Rome now hurls against us. The Thunders of the Roman Pontiff are not so powerful and dreadful as the Thunders of St. John, the divine Boanerges of Patmos, which are winged by the Spirit of God.

We see also in the Apocalypse a strong appeal to Charity. Christian love longs, above all things, for the salvation of souls. It prays and labours that they who are now enthralled by Babylon may escape God's judgments, and may be saved from the fearful woes which are denounced by God upon her (xiv. 10, 11; xix. 20). Greatly, therefore, is it to be desired, that these prophecies of the divine Apocalypse were now duly pondered by all members of the Church of Rome. May God in His infinite mercy grant that the words of St. John, who was miraculously rescued from the fiery furnace at Rome (Tertullian, de Præscr. Hæret. c. 36), to behold and describe these Visions, may have power, by God's grace, to pluck them as brands from the fire (Zech. iii. 2).

Especially too, as years pass on, and as the judgments reserved for Rome draw nearer and nearer, and as, it may be, in the events of our own days we feel the tremblings of the earthquake which will engulf her, and behold the flashings forth of the fire which will consume her, Christian Charity will put on Angels' wings, and hasten with a Seraph's step; and will be like the heavenly Messengers despatched by God to Lot in Sodom; and will lay hold on the hands of those who linger, and will urge them forth from the door, and will chide their delay, and will exclaim,—"Arise! what dost thou here? Take all that thou hast, lest thou be consumed in the iniquity of this city" (Gen. xix. 12—16).

Especially may we here appeal to some dear friends, brothers and sisters in Christ, who have been nurtured with the same milk of the Gospel at the breast of the same spiritual Mother with ourselves; who have joined with us in the same prayers; knelt before the same altars, and walked with us side by side in the courts of our own Jerusalem; and have been carried away captive—alas! willingly captive—to Babylon.

What shall we say of them? It may be that some of us might have prevented their fall, if we had exhorted them to hear what the Spirit saith by the mouth of St. John. Let us, even with tears, implore them to listen—not to us, but—to our Everlasting Saviour, King, and Judge, speaking in the Apocalypse. Let us point to the cup of wrath in God's right hand, ready to be poured out upon Babylon. Let us say, in the words of the Prophet,—"Arise ye and depart, for this is not your rest; because it is polluted, it shall destroy you, even with a sore destruction" (Micah ii. 10).

SONG of VICTORY after the FALL of the Mystical BABYLON.

CH. XIX. 1. ἀλληλούϊα] הַלְלוּיָהּ (praise ye the Lord), one of the Hebrew words in the Apocalypse proving that whatever appertained to the devotion and glory of the Ancient People of God, is now become the privilege of the Christian Church. See above, Introduction, p. 145; vii. 4—13.

2. ἐξεδίκησε τὸ αἷμα τ. δ. α. ἐκ χειρὸς αὐτῆς] He avenged the blood of His servants out of her hand. On this use of ἐκ see vi. 10, and above, xviii. 20, and compare 2 Kings ix. 7, ἐκδικήσεις τὰ αἵματα τῶν δούλων μου ἐκ χειρὸς Ἰεσαβὲλ, and Ps. lxxviii. 11.

3. καὶ ὁ καπνὸς αὐτῆς] and her smoke ascendeth for ever and ever. Another proof that the destruction of the Mystical Babylon will be final, and that therefore Babylon cannot be Heathen Rome. See above, xviii. 21, and preliminary note to chapter xvii., p. 245.

4. καὶ ἔπεσαν] and the Twenty-four Elders, and the Four Living Creatures fell down and worshipped God Who sitteth on the throne, saying Amen, Hallelujah. The voice of the Two Testaments (see above, iv. 4—8) will be lifted up in praise to God for the Judgments executed by Him on the Harlot City, which has corrupted the Faith delivered to the Church in Holy Scripture, and has done wrong to Holy Scripture by placing her unwritten Traditions on a par with it, and by exalting the Apocrypha to a level with the Canonical Books, and by withholding the Scriptures from the people, and by elevating her own Latin Version to a position of not less, even if not greater, authority, than the inspired Originals themselves. Cp. above, xviii. 20.

5. αἰνεῖτε τῷ Θεῷ] give ye praise to God. On the dative see Winer, § 31, pp. 187, 188.

6. ὅτι ἐβασίλευσε ὁ Θεός] because God the Omnipotent reigned, i.e. showed Himself to be King, by subduing His Enemies. See above, xi. 17.

6, 7.] The Marriage Feast of the Lamb and of the Bride. Ὁ Γάμος is the Marriage Feast. See John ii. 1—3.

The destruction of the faithless Harlot having been described, now follows the Vision of the bliss and glory of the faithful Woman, the Church, that had been persecuted by the Dragon, who gave his power to the Beast on which the Harlot sat (xii. 1—17; xiii. 2. 4; xvii. 3). The faithful Woman is now revealed as the Bride.

8. καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῇ] And it was given to her. Justification is a free gift. Cp. Rom. v. 20, 21.

— τὸ γὰρ βύσσινον] for the fine linen is the righteousnesses of the Saints.

The word δικαίωμα declares the state of men made righteous and declared righteous by God (see on Rom. v. 18); and this condition is due to their baptismal incorporation in Christ, Who is "Jehovah Justitia nostra," the Lord our Righteousness (see on 1 Cor. i. 30. Rom. iii. 24. 26; v. 21), and to the sanctifying influences of the Holy Ghost, received by those who abide as living and healthful members in His body, and as fruitful branches in Him Who is the true Vine (John xv. 1—4).

The plural δικαιώματα intimates the large freeness of the righteousness bestowed by the infinite merits of Christ's obedience and sufferings, for man's justification; and the copious abundance of the outpouring of the graces of the Holy Spirit procured thereby for men.

This use of the plural, the "pluralis excellentiæ et majestatis" adopted from the Hebrew (cp. Isa. lxiv. 6. Ezek. xxxiii. 13. Dan. ix. 18, and Schroeder, Inst. Hebr. Reg. 100), is frequent in the Apocalypse. Cp. σάρκας, xvii. 16; xix. 18. 21. αἰῶνες, i. 6. 18, and in nine other places. In xviii. 24 B has αἵματα.

9. καὶ λέγει μοι, Γράψον] and he saith to me, Write: blessed are they that have been called to the Marriage Feast of the Lamb. Compare the declaration above, xiv. 13, Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. The state of blessedness here described is consequent on that other state of blessedness which had been announced there. That was the bliss of Paradise; this is the bliss of Heaven.

Warning against Creature-worship.

10. ἔπεσα—προσκυνῆσαι] I fell down to worship him, but he saith to me, See thou do it not. See below, xxii. 8, 9, and above on Acts x. 25, 26. Matt. iv. 10.

Here is a strong contrast to the claim made by the Antichristian Power above described, exacting adoration from all. See above on xiii. 4. 8. 12. 15.

The action of paying homage to superiors is not condemned here; but only such an action of homage as might be interpreted to be one of worship paid to them independently of God, or in opposition to God, under circumstances when worship ought to be directed to God.

It is said here, that he fell down before the feet of the Angel in order to worship him; and it is said, in xxii. 8, that he "fell down in order to worship before the feet of the Angel." Observe the difference of those two acts; but both are condemned. We are not to imagine that the Apostle and Evangelist, St. John, designed to pay to the Angel such honour as he must have known to be due to God alone; but yet he is reproved by the Angel, "See thou do it not." Therefore these two passages of Scripture, and that in Acts x. 25, 26, contain a warning, not only against all such acts of worship as are directed by the worshipper himself to any Being beside God, but also against such acts of adoration as might be construed by others into acts paid to some other Being besides Him.

Here is a refutation of those who seek to exculpate the Image-worship of the Church of Rome, on the plea that she does not teach that Images are to be worshipped with the same adoration as is due to God. What her doctrine may be on this matter, is of little consequence. Her practice leads away her people from the worship of God, the only true Object of adoration, to the worship of the creature.

This warning is aptly introduced here, inasmuch as Creature-worship is one of the sins which causes the Fall of Babylon just described.

— σύνδουλός σου] I am a fellow-servant with thee and with those who hold fast (see xii. 17) the witness of Jesus, the testimony which He witnessed, "Who is the True and Faithful Witness" (i. 5; iii. 14. See 1 Tim. vi. 13), and the testimony which He has delivered to be witnessed by all men concerning Himself. See i. 2. 9; xii. 17; xx. 4. 2 Tim. i. 8. 1 John v. 10.

— τῷ Θεῷ προσκύνησον] Worship thou God, for the witness of Jesus is the spirit of Prophecy. Do not worship me, for I am a fellow-servant with thee and with those who hold fast the witness of Jesus, the Son of God, Whom all the Angels worship (Heb. i. 6). Worship thou God. Let thy worship be paid to the Son Co-equal with the Father, and to the Father in Him, as the worship in heaven is paid, as thou hast seen (see above, v. 13); for the witness of Jesus is the spirit of Prophecy. This saying is to be understood both subjectively and objectively. The witness which God gives of Jesus, and the witness which Angels and men must give of Him, is the spirit of Prophecy; it animates the whole; to Him give all the Prophets witness (Acts x. 43); to Him the Holy Spirit bears witness, Who speaks in them (2 Pet. i. 21. 1 John v. 6). The Spirit also, Who speaks in the Prophets, is the Spirit of Jesus Christ; see on 1 Pet. i. 11. He is the Divine Logos, the Author of all Prophecy. The Apocalypse is from Him; see above, i. 1, and xxii. 16. This saying, it will be seen, aptly illustrates the next Vision.

The Army of Christ, riding, as King of Kings, on the White Horse.

11—16. καὶ εἶδον τὸν οὐρανὸν ἀνεῳγμένον] And I saw heaven opened, and behold a White Horse; and He that sitteth upon him called Faithful and True, and in righteousness He doth judge and make war. His eyes as a flame of fire, and on His head many crowns; and He hath a name written, that no man knoweth but He Himself. And clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and His name is called The WORD of GOD. And the armies in heaven were following Him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean. And out of His mouth goeth forth a sharp two-edged sword, that with it He should smite the Nations: and He shall rule them with a rod of iron: and He treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of God Omnipotent. And He hath on His vesture and on His thigh a Name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.

Christ, the Rider on the White Horse, who had been revealed in the First Seal, at the beginning of the Christian era, going forth conquering and to conquer (see above, vi. 2, and Ps. xlv. 3—7), is now seen at the end. He is the Alpha and Omega of the Apocalypse (i. 8; xxi. 6; xxii. 13). The witness of Jesus is the spirit of Prophecy, v. 10.

This passage, vv. 11—16, is quoted by S. Irenæus (iv. 20. 11, p. 632, Stieren; p. 336, Grabe), who refers to this book, as written by "John, the Disciple of the Lord." See above, Introduction, p. 154.

It is also cited in part (vv. 11—13) by the Scholar of Irenæus, S. Hippolytus, in Noët. § 15, p. 53, ed. Lagarde.

The old Latin Version of Irenæus (the original Greek is not preserved there) has on v. 13, aspersum for βεβαμμένον, and S. Hippolytus has ἐῤῥαντισμένον, sprinkled, and he explains it as referring to Christ's own blood, by which the Incarnate Word cleansed the world.

12. διαδήματα πολλά] many diadems; or, royal crowns. In the First Seal Christ had been revealed as wearing a crown of Victory (στέφανος), for, He is ever conquering. Here He has many diadems of royalty (cp. xii. 3), for He is King of Kings (xvii. 14; xix. 16); and the kingdom of the World will become the Kingdom of Christ (xi. 15). Both the attributes of Christ, as the Everlasting Conqueror, and Universal King, are combined in the prophecy of David, Ps. xlv. 3—7, "The people shall be subdued unto Thee. Thy seat, O God, endureth for ever; the sceptre of Thy Kingdom is a right sceptre."

— ὄνομα—ὃ οὐδεὶς οἶδεν] a Name written which no one knoweth but Himself; no man can comprehend its depth and height and breadth. Compare ii. 17, and Matt. xi. 27, and Judges xiii. 18.

13. ὁ Λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ] the WORD of GOD. See on John i. 1, and on Tit. i. 3.

15. πατεῖ τὴν ληνόν] He is treading the winepress of the wine of the fury of the wrath of God. When He comes forth as the Rider on the White Horse, He is doing a work of God's retributive justice. When riding forth in His Majesty, and trampling His enemies beneath the feet of His War-horse and of those who follow Him, He is treading the winepress of the wine of the fury of the wrath of God. Hence we may explain the combination of the two metaphors in xiv. 19, 20, where it is said that the "winepress (of the wrath of God) was trodden without the city; and the blood of the winepress came up to the bridles of the Horses:" see note there. On the difference between θυμὸς and ὀργή, see Rom. ii. 8.

Invitation to the fowls of heaven to come and feast on the carcases of God's enemies, lying on the battle-field of His Victory.

And I saw an Angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in mid-heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the great supper of God, that ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all, both free and bond, both small and great.

17. εἰς τὸ δεῖπνον τὸ μέγα τοῦ Θεοῦ] to the great supper of God. So A, B.—Elz. has τοῦ μεγάλου for τὸ μέγα τοῦ. Christ is He Who is here designated as God. See Dr. Waterland, Moyer Lectures, vi. vol. ii. p. 129, who, adopting the reading, "of the great God," says, "If it be considered that our blessed Saviour is styled King of Kings and Lord of Lords (v. 16), a very little before the mention of the supper of the great God, and that the Apostle goes on speaking of Christ described as sitting on the Horse (v. 19; cp. 11), and as slaying those whose flesh was to be given to the fowls (v. 21), that is, as providing that very supper which is called (v. 17) the supper of the great God, because the great God provides or makes it: if we lay these things together, we shall be inclined to think that this Text of the Revelation is another evidence of the Son's being styled 'the great God:' and so helps to confirm our interpretation of the text in Titus ii. 13."

The supper here described is that of a feast after a sacrifice. God is glorified in, and over, His enemies, who rebel against Him. See Rom. ix. 17. Religious Kings and Nations which offer themselves a willing sacrifice to God for His honour and service, are blessed, for they are called to the Marriage Supper of the Lamb (v. 9). But, if Kings and Nations do not honour Christ, if they do not obey Christ, but rebel against Him, then they will be like slain carcases, on which the fowls of the air will feast, as on a battle-field. They will be slain as sacrifices to His wrath and indignation.

This imagery is derived from Hebrew Prophecy. See Isa. xxxiv. 6, "The Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah;" and Jer. xlvi. 10, "The Lord hath a sacrifice in the north-country, by the river Euphrates;" and Ezek. xxxix. 17, 18, "Speak unto every feathered fowl . . . Gather yourselves unto My sacrifice . . . that ye may eat flesh and drink blood; ye shall eat the flesh of the mighty, and drink the blood of the Princes of the earth." Zeph. i. 7, "The Lord hath prepared a sacrifice, He hath bidden His guests." Cp. Rom. ix. 17, and 2 Cor. ii. 14—16.

18. σάρκας] flesh. Observe the word repeated five times and in the plural, to denote the completeness and universality of God's retribution, and the destruction of His foes. See above, v. 8.

Christ's Victory over the Beast and the False Prophet, and their Associates.

19—21. καὶ εἶδον τὸ θηρίον] And I saw the Beast, and the Kings of the Earth, and their armies gathered together to make war against Him that sitteth on the Horse and against His army.

And the Beast was seized, and his Ally the False Prophet (ὁ μετ' αὐτοῦ ψευδοπροφήτης, his False Prophet that was with him. So B and other authorities, and Tisch.) that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the Beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into the lake of fire that burneth with brimstone. And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sitteth upon the horse, which (sword) went forth out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their flesh.

Here is an ampler description of the Battle pre-announced in the Sixth Vial (xvi. 13—16), when preparations were made for it. Cp. xvii. 13, 14. The Battle itself does not take place till now. Hence the article τὸν πόλεμον, the battle of Armageddon, there mentioned by anticipation. See xvi. 16.

Thus we are now brought again to the eve of the end.

XX. 1 [a] Καὶ εἶδον ἄγγελον καταβαίνοντα ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἔχοντα τὴν κλεῖν a ch. 1. 18.

Observe the sequence of events.

The Mystical Babylon is now fallen (xviii. 2; xix. 2).

After her fall, the Beast and False Prophet still survive, and they muster their forces against Christ, and rise up against Him in a great rebellion, called the conflict of ARMAGEDDON, or HARMAGEDON. See xvi. 16. They are there routed by Christ, and His army; and the Beast and False Prophet are seized and cast into the Lake of Fire (xix. 20).

And now there remains one great Enemy, the Dragon, the old Serpent, who is the Devil and Satan, who had formerly used the Beast as his agent (xiii. 2), but now, being deprived of his instrumentality, will break forth in a spirit of reckless desperation, and rage with open fury and bold blasphemy against Christ and the Church.

This will be the final struggle; which is now to be described.

But, before this description, the Prophecy re-ascends once more to the first age of Christianity, by a process of recapitulation characteristic of the Apocalypse, and indeed of all sacred Prophecy, especially of the prophecies of Daniel and Zechariah, which are the groundwork of those of the Apocalypse; and St. John now proceeds to give a summary view of what had been done by Christ for His people ever since the Incarnation.

Thus the gracious purposes of His FIRST ADVENT are harmoniously and beautifully connected and blended together with the glorious triumphs of His SECOND ADVENT, and with the everlasting joys of the Heavenly Jerusalem.

CH. XX.] Summary and Final RECAPITULATION.

Prophetic view of Christ's dealings with His faithful servants from His FIRST ADVENT, even to the last age of the World.

[1] 1—7. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw an Angel coming down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit (or abyss) and a great chain upon his hand. And He laid hold on the Dragon, that old Serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and He bound him a thousand years, and He cast him into the bottomless pit (or abyss), and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, in order that he might not deceive the nations any more, till the thousand years shall have been fulfilled; after that he must be loosed a little season.

And I saw thrones, and some sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and the souls of them that had been beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the Word of God, and of them who worshipped not the Beast, nor his image, nor received his mark upon their forehead, and upon their hand; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

But the rest of the dead lived not until the thousand years should have been finished.

This is the First Resurrection.

Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the First Resurrection: on these the Second Death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and they shall reign with him a thousand years.

In order to understand the scope of this Vision, some previous considerations are requisite;

In the first Seal, St. John had seen a Vision of Christ coming forth at His First Advent, conquering, and in order that He might conquer (vi. 2).

But in the following Seals, it had been revealed that Christ would have many powerful enemies to encounter; and that the servants of Christ would have many severe sufferings to endure, even to the end of the World (vii. 14).

The Vision also of the Trumpets has displayed the working of many worldly Powers rebelling against Christ, and persecuting His servants (viii. 7; ix. 21).

Further, the Little Roll introduced a Prophecy concerning a spiritual form of Antichristianism, corrupting the true Faith, and waging war with the Saints of God, chaps. x.—xvii.

It might therefore be objected, that Christ had not conquered; that on the contrary He had been overcome by the Evil One, and had been unable to defend His Church.

In order to remove this objection, and to justify God's ways to man, St. John re-ascends in the present Vision to the first age of the Gospel. He reverts to the Incarnation and Passion of Christ, and reveals what He did at His First Advent, and would ever continue to do.

He beholds an Angel coming down from out of heaven, who holds the key of the bottomless pit, or abyss. This Angel is CHRIST. He, and He alone, holds the key of the abyss. That key may be sometimes given to others (see ix. 1), but Christ alone holds it as His own (see i. 18). The Angel binds Satan: Christ, and He only, can bind the strong man, and cast him into the abyss.

On such grounds as these, all the ancient Expositors were agreed, that this Vision is a recapitulation, and is not a continuation of the Visions which had preceded in the nineteenth chapter.

The Angel here is Christ. This is generally allowed. But Christ in the preceding chapter was revealed as the WORD of GOD, riding on the White Horse, at the head of the Armies of Heaven (xix. 11—21). The scene has been changed. Christ is here called an Angel. He comes as a Messenger from Heaven. He comes down on a gracious embassy. He is displayed in a new character, binding Satan. Therefore this Vision in the twentieth chapter is not a continuation of that in the nineteenth.

Christ bound Satan, at His First Advent from heaven. Christ was the Woman's promised Seed, who bruised the Serpent's head (Gen. iii. 15). He is the Stronger One, as He Himself says, who entered into the strong man's house and bound him (Matt. xii. 29). He overcame Satan by dying on the Cross, and by raising Himself, and took from him his armour wherein he trusted, and spoiled his goods (Luke xi. 22). He was manifested at His Incarnation for this purpose, "that He might destroy the works of the Devil" (1 John iii. 18). He gave authority over Devils to His Apostles and His Disciples (Matt. x. 7. Mark iii. 15). He said, "Behold, I give you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the Enemy" (Luke x. 19).

Therefore the Apostles declare to all Christians, that He will "bruise Satan under their feet shortly" (Rom. xvi. 20), and that even the weakest among them is by Christ's power stronger than Satan, and can "quench all the fiery darts of the Evil One" (Eph. vi. 16). "Resist the Devil," they say, "and he will flee from you" (James iv. 7).

Such was Christ's act and deed at His First Advent.

Having such testimonies of Holy Scripture to that effect, we cannot admit, with some, that the Devil has not now been bound, although we see that many persons are taken captive by him. Cp. 2 Tim. ii. 26. 1 Pet. v. 8.

Holy Scripture represents Satan as vanquished and bound by Christ. Christ has done this work for the benefit of all Christians. Nothing can harm those who are followers of that which is good (1 Pet. iii. 13). The Evil One toucheth them not (1 John v. 18). No one can pluck them out of Christ's hand (John x. 28). Satan is vanquished and is bound to all, who do not recklessly loose him by their sins, and arm him against themselves.

The present prevalence of evil, and the exercise of Satan's power in this world, affords therefore no objection to this interpretation of this passage. This Interpretation was adopted by ancient Expositors, after careful examination of the meaning of this chapter; and it was received by the universal consent of the Christian Church, both Eastern and Western, from the fifth to the fifteenth century.

Therefore we may safely conclude, that the binding of Satan, here mentioned by St. John, has been already effected by Christ; that it was effected by Him at His First Advent, by His Death, Resurrection, Ascension, and sending of the Holy Ghost from heaven, and by the Preaching of the Gospel of His Kingdom, and of the gracious tidings of Salvation to the World.

The commencement of the Thousand Years here mentioned, —whatever that period may signify,—is to be dated from the First Coming of Christ.

St. John himself authorizes this interpretation by another similar phrase in the Apocalypse. He has said in the first Seal, that Christ went forth at His first Advent, "conquering, and in order that He might conquer" (ἵνα νικήσῃ), vi. 2. And he says here, that Christ "bound Satan, in order that he might not any more deceive the Nations" (ἵνα μὴ πλανήσῃ). Both phrases are alike. Both declare Christ's will and deed: though, alas! in too many cases His gracious purposes are frustrated by man's sin. It cannot rightly be alleged, that Christ has not bound Satan, because some unloose him against themselves. It might as well be argued, that Christ has not gone forth on the White Horse, in order to conquer Satan; because some allow themselves to be conquered by him.

Man's sin is not to be alleged in contravention to Christ's power and love. Christ has done His part. St. Paul says, that God by His mercy "saved us" (Titus iii. 5; cp. Rom. viii. 24. 30); and yet many destroy themselves. God does His part to save us, but He does not take away our free-will. We may still choose evil, and reject good. We may choose death, and reject life. We may choose the shame and misery of being slaves to Satan, and reject the perfect freedom of serving God.

2. ἔδησεν αὐτόν] He bound him a thousand years.

How, it may be asked, can this act of binding be past? A thousand years have now elapsed from the first Advent of Christ, and Satan was not loosed at their expiration.

To this it may be replied, that the numbers in the Apocalypse are to be understood figuratively. See note above on chap. xi. at end.

There is no instance in the Apocalypse where the number a thousand is to be understood literally.

This number—the cube of ten—represents a quality. It has a prophetical value and spiritual significance. It is generally combined with expressions significant of completeness. Thus the total number of the sealed are 144 thousand; 12 thousand from each of the 12 Tribes (see above, vii. 4—9). The men slain by the earthquake in the sixth Trumpet are 7 thousand (xi. 13). The breadth of the heavenly city is 12 thousand furlongs (xxi. 16).

What, then, is the meaning of the term a Thousand Years?

Among the Jews the term three years and a half was a chronological expression significant of a time of suffering (see above on chap. xi. at the end). And the term a thousand years was a chronological expression which designated the Day of the Messiah, or the time of the dispensation of Christ. See the Rabbinical authorities in Wetstein, ii. p. 836. "Dies Messiæ Mille Anni." The former of these chronological symbols—three years and a half—has been adopted in the Apocalypse, so also has the latter.

To Christianize Jewish language and ideas was one of the main purposes of the Apocalypse (see above, Introduction, pp. 144, 145); and this phrase, "a thousand years," may have been employed to teach the Jews that their long-expected Messiah, the Prince, was now come: that "the Day" had now dawned which their ancient Prophets and Kings had desired to see. Luke x. 24. John viii. 56.

S. Augustine has examined this question with great diligence in his treatise de Civitate Dei, xx. 7—9, and his opinion is of more value, because he himself had been once inclined to adopt millenarian opinions, but afterwards saw cause to reject them (xx. 7).

He, and all the ancient Expositors of the Apocalypse after his age, were unanimously of opinion, that the thousand years during which Satan is bound by Christ, represent the whole time of the Gospel Dispensation from the First Advent of Christ until the time of the last Persecution, when Satan will be loosed, and rage with impious fury against God and His Saints.

This opinion, which assigns a figurative meaning to the thousand years, is more entitled to respect, because it was held by Expositors who lived before the expiration of a literal period of a thousand years from the first Coming of Christ: and therefore it cannot be said that this exposition was devised in order to meet any supposed difficulties arising from their exposition, which assigns the binding of Satan by Christ to the time of His first Advent.

3. ἔβαλεν αὐτόν] He cast him into the abyss. The abyss is not the lake of fire: into which Satan will not be cast till the end of the world (see on Matt. viii. 29; xxv. 41; and below, v. 10); but it is the present abode of evil spirits. It is the place into which they were sent by Christ after His Incarnation and Passion. See note above on Luke viii. 31, and Eph. ii. 2; and above, ix. 1.

— ἐσφράγισεν] He set a seal upon him, in order that he might no more deceive the nations. Elz. has πλανήσῃ here, and this reading is retained in the text, it being authorized by A, and many Cursive MSS., and so Lachmann. But it is observable that B, and very many Cursive MSS. (see Scrivener, p. 557, and the present Editor's Collection of Collations of MSS. of the Apocalypse) have ἵνα μὴ πλανᾷ, in order that he may not deceive; and this latter reading has been received by Tischendorf, Tregelles, and Bloomf., and it confirms the interpretation now given of this Text. The Angel, who is Christ, bound Satan in order that he may not deceive the Nations at this present time—even when the Apocalypse was written. Whichever reading is adopted, this verse refutes the theory of Millenarians, who suppose that St. John is here describing a personal reign of Christ and His Saints upon earth for a thousand years in perfect holiness and bliss.

It cannot be imagined, that after such a blessed state of things, there would be a multitude of godless nations, such as are here described, suddenly rising up in rebellion against Christ, "in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, in countless multitudes, like the sand of the sea." See v. 8.

Observe the striking contrast. Christ has done to Satan, for the whole time of the Gospel, what Satan did to Christ for three days. Satan, by the hands of his own agents, arrested Jesus, bound Him, cast Him into 'the lowest pit' (Ps. lxxxviii. 5), set a seal upon His sepulchre, and set a watch over Him, in order that "the deceiver," as they called Him (Matt. xxvii. 63), might no more trouble them.

But Christ by His Death "overcame him that had the power of death, even the Devil" (Heb. ii. 14). He entered "the house of the strong man" (Matt. xii. 29), and bound him, and cast him into the abyss, and set a seal upon him, in order that he might no more deceive the Nations; and when He raised Himself from the dead, He gave command to His Disciples to go into all the world, and baptize all Nations. Matt. xxviii. 19.

Observe also the contrast which follows.

4. εἶδον θρόνους] I saw thrones, and some sat (literally, took their seats) upon them, and judgment was given to them, and I saw the souls of them who had been beheaded (observe this remarkable word beheaded, πεπελεκισμένων) for the witness of Jesus, and for the Word of God, and of those who did not worship the Beast . . . . and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

"I saw the souls"—he does not say, "bodies:" here is a refutation of the millenarian interpretation. See below, p. 262.

St. John is here speaking of the first age of Christianity. We are brought back to that first age of the Gospel by the remarkable word πεπελεκισμένων, those who had been beheaded with an axe. The πέλεκυς, securis, or axe,—the fasces,—was the badge of Roman power. See Virgil, Æn. vi. 820. This word takes the reader back to the time of those who suffered as Martyrs by the hands of the Beast in its imperial form in heathen Rome, who executed judicial punishment by the πέλεκυς, or securis, which, as Wetstein justly observes, was a "supplicium Romanum." And from that time the reader is carried forward to those other Martyrs who suffered under the power of the Beast in its Papal form.

τὰς ψυχὰς τῶν πεπελεκισμένων διὰ τὴν μαρτυρίαν Ἰησοῦ καὶ διὰ τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ οἵτινες οὐ προσεκύνησαν τὸ θηρίον, οὐδὲ τὴν εἰκόνα αὐτοῦ, καὶ οὐκ ἔλαβον τὸ χάραγμα ἐπὶ τὸ μέτωπον καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν χεῖρα αὐτῶν· καὶ ἔζησαν καὶ ἐβασίλευσαν μετὰ τοῦ Χριστοῦ χίλια ἔτη.

Αὕτη ἡ ἀνάστασις ἡ πρώτη. 6 e Μακάριος καὶ ἅγιος ὁ ἔχων μέρος ἐν τῇ

The Pagan and Papal Persecutors of these Martyrs sat upon thrones executing judgment, and condemned them to death.

But let no one be deceived by such a spectacle as that;

I saw thrones (says St. John), and they took their seats upon them, and judgment was given to them; that is, judicial authority and dignity was bestowed upon them; and I saw the souls of them that had been beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

"In the sight of the unwise they had seemed to die; but their hope was full of immortality" (Wisd. iii. 4). As to their bodies they did indeed die; but St. John says, "I saw their souls," I was enabled to see what man could not see—their souls; I saw the state of their souls after death. I, who had seen those souls under the altar (see vi. 9), on which their blood had been poured out as a sacrifice, saw them again now; I saw that they lived. The deathday of the Martyrs was their birthday. Life on earth was to them like death, compared to that life which they now live, and which alone deserves to be called Life. For their Lord had said, He that findeth his life (ψυχὴν) shall lose it, and he that loseth his life (ψυχὴν) for My sake shall find it (Matt. x. 39), he shall generate it alive, ζωογονήσει (Luke xvii. 33), he shall preserve it unto eternal life, ζωὴν (John xii. 25. See above, xii. 11).

Their Persecutors therefore, who sate on thrones and executed judgment in this world, and condemned the Martyrs to death, did, in fact, send them forth from death into life; and they sent them upward to sit on thrones with Christ, and to pronounce judgment on the World which condemned them; see note on 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3. And therefore it is said of the saints, "they shall judge the Nations, and have dominion over the people, and their Lord shall reign for ever" (Wisd. iii. 8).

One of the noble army of Martyrs, a disciple of St. John, S. Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, longing for the death to which he had been condemned, thus speaks to the Christians of Rome, where he was about to suffer martyrdom, "My birthday is now at hand; suffer me to live, do not desire me to die, permit me to be an imitator of the passion of my God. Suffer me to see the pure light of day:" Ignatius ad Rom. c. 6 (see above on John xvi. 21. Acts ii. 24). And St. Paul said, "I long to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better:" see on Phil i. 23. And, S. Augustine says (Serm. 299), "Was not the mother of the Maccabees a true mother, when she persuaded her sons to die as Martyrs (2 Mac. vii.)?"—"Planè filiis meis vitam persuadeo, ad mortem cohortando," "I persuade them to live when I exhort them to die," for the Martyr's death is the gate of endless life.

This Vision therefore was designed to justify God's ways to man, and to afford a cheering assurance to Christians under all the persecutions which might rage against them, from the age of St. John to the end of time, that in every age of the Gospel Christ had kept, and would keep, Satan bound; that He had preserved, and would preserve, His own; that He had conquered, and would continue to conquer; and that He would enable all His faithful to be more than conquerors (Rom. viii. 37), even as He had conquered; and to live by dying, and to reign by suffering. To them all the promise is, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life," Rev. ii. 10.

This Scripture reveals the happiness of the disembodied soul in the interval between Death and Resurrection.

They lived a thousand years. The souls of the Martyrs lived after their death, before the resurrection of their bodies. The souls of holy men are not separated from communion with the Church, after their dissolution from the body. The faithful are members of Christ's mystical body, after their death. They gain a new life by death: therefore we read, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, even from that time, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours" (Rev. xiv. 13). Therefore even now they reign with Christ, and are "made to sit in heavenly places with Him," Eph. i. 20; ii. 6.

St. John here mentions the souls of the Martyrs only, because they especially reign when they die, in that they have fought for the truth even unto death. S. Augustine (de Civ. Dei, xx. 9). But, as the ancient Expositors observe, this Scripture is consolatory to all. "I am the Resurrection and the Life (saith Christ); he that believeth in Me, though he die (κἂν ἀποθάνῃ), yet shall he live: and he that liveth and believeth on Me shall never die" (John xi. 25, 26). "If a man keep My saying he shall never taste of death (John viii. 51), he has passed from death unto life," John v. 24. Cp. John iii. 16; vi. 40. 47.

Every faithful Christian is a Martyr, or Witness, of Christ.

In the Sacrament of Baptism we, who before were dead in sin, became dead to sin (Eph. ii. 1. Rom. vi. 2); and we renounced the Devil, and began our Martyrdom to Christ by professing our belief in Him; and we died to the old Adam, and were born into Christ, and were made sons of God by adoption in Him. Therefore Baptism is called in Scripture a Resurrection. "Buried with Him in Baptism, wherein ye are risen with Him through faith in the operation of God" (Col. ii. 12. Rom. vi. 4). "Reckon ye yourselves to be dead unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord," Rom. vi. 11. Cp. Gal. ii. 19. 1 Thess. v. 10. See further below, v. 6. "This is the first Resurrection."

5. οἱ λοιποὶ τῶν νεκρῶν] The rest of the dead lived not—that is, they remained dead—till the thousand years should have been finished. On the sense of τελεσθῇ, see Winer, § 41, p. 266.

Elz. has δὲ after οἱ here, but this is not in the best MSS. and Editions.

After the crisis of the last struggle, they will revive "to shame and contempt" (Dan. xii. 2) at the General Resurrection. See Andreas here, in Catenâ, p. 472. Elz. has ἀνέζησαν ἄχρι, and so Griesb., Scholz: but A, B, and many Cursives and Versions, have ἔζησαν, and so Lac m., Tisch.

The transition here from the Spiritual Resurrection of the soul, which is the first Resurrection, to that of the General Resurrection of the body, which is the second Resurrection, is precisely similar to that in our Blessed Lord's Discourse, John v. 24—29, which affords the best commentary on this text. See the note there.

— αὕτη ἡ ἀνάστασις ἡ πρώτη] This is the first Resurrection. He is speaking of the soul (see v. 4). Every soul which is united to Christ, Who is the Resurrection and the Life, rises from death and lives.

This first Resurrection is begun in Baptism, and it is continued through life, by the operation of the Holy Ghost, and by the daily exercise of Repentance, by which the soul rises more and more "from the death of sin unto the life of righteousness" (Office for the Burial of the Dead). Thus, while "the outer man perisheth, the inner man is renewed day by day" (2 Cor. iv. 16).

It is well called the first Resurrection, because it is prior and preparatory to the second Resurrection—that of the body, from the grave to glory. The first Resurrection is the Resurrection of the soul from death, into a life of grace on Earth, and of bliss in Paradise.

The second Resurrection is the Resurrection of the Body, and its reunion with the Soul, for a glorious immortality in Heaven.

6. μακάριος] Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first Resurrection.

Observe the combination here of Blessedness with Holiness. Blessed and holy is he who hath part in holy Baptism—that is, who duly estimates, and rightly uses, the spiritual graces therein bestowed. Blessed he is, because he is holy. Blessed he is, because he has been made a member of Him Who is the Holy One of God. Blessed he is, because he has risen from the death of sin; he is risen with Christ, and seeks those things which are above (Col. iii. 1). "He that hath this hope in Christ, purifieth himself even as He is pure" (1 John iii. 3). For He says to all His Members, "Be ye holy, as I am holy" (1 Pet. i. 16). Therefore blessed and holy is he who hath part in the first Resurrection; but he who is unholy and accursed hath his part in the second death. Cp. v. 14.

On this verse, see the remarks of Bp. Andrewes (on John xx. 23, Serm. iv. p. 83). "The Scripture maketh mention of a first and second death, and, from them two, of a first and second Resurrection. Both expressly set down in one verse; 'Happy is he that hath his part in the first resurrection. for over such the second death hath no power' (Rev. xx. 6); understanding by the first, the death of the soul to sin, and the rising thence to the ἀναστάσει τῇ πρώτῃ· ἐπὶ τούτων ὁ θάνατος ὁ δεύτερος οὐκ ἔχει ἐξουσίαν· ἀλλὰ ἔσονται ἱερεῖς τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ βασιλεύσουσι μετ' αὐτοῦ χίλια ἔτη.

life of grace; by the second, the death of the body by corruption, and the rising thence to the life of glory. Christ truly is the Saviour of the whole man, both soul and body, from the first and second death; but beginning first with the first, that is with sin, the death of the soul, and the rising from it. So is the method of Divinity prescribed by Himself (Matt. xxiii. 26); first, to cleanse that which is within—the soul; then that which is without—the body. 'He that hath his part in the first resurrection' shall not fail of it 'in the second.'

"The 'first resurrection' then from sin is it which our Saviour Christ here goeth about (in John xx. 23), whereto there is no less power required than a Divine power. For look, what power is necessary to raise the dead body out of the dust, the very same every way is requisite to raise the dead soul out of sin. For which cause the Remission of sins is an article of faith, no less than the Resurrection of the body. For in very deed, a resurrection it is, and so it is termed no less than that" (Bp. Andrewes).

"We are passed from death unto life," says St. John (1 John iii. 14), speaking of those who are born again; and this new birth is the same that he calls the first Resurrection (Rev. xx. 6. Abp. Leighton in 1 Pet. ii. 1, 2).

— ἐπὶ τούτων] upon these the second death hath no power. It has power therefore on the others, concerning whom he had just said that they live not till the thousand years shall be finished; inasmuch as in all that interval of time, which is thus designated, whatsoever life any of these may have in the body, he never lived in the soul, being dead in sin; and so never had any part in the first resurrection, and therefore will have a part in the second death. S. Augustine (de Civ. Dei, xx. 9).

— ἔσονται ἱερεῖς] They will be priests of God and Christ. This is not said only of Bishops and Presbyters, who are properly called Priests in the Church; but as we are all called Christians, on account of the mystical unction (chrisma) that we have from Christ, the Anointed of God, so, in a certain sense, all are Priests, because we are all members of the One Great High Priest. Wherefore the Apostle says, "Ye are a holy people, a royal priesthood" (1 Pet. ii. 9). And thus St. John briefly intimates that Christ is God: for he says that they are priests of God and of Christ, that is, of the Father and of the Son. S. Augustine, (de C. D. xx. 10).

A just observation certainly; for no one can be a priest to a man; and the Apostle would not have thus joined Christ with God, if Christ were not God.

— βασιλεύσουσιν] they shall reign with Christ a thousand years. The Alexandrine MS. has the present tense here, βασιλεύουσιν, they are reigning: this is observable, and confirms the opinion that St. John is speaking of a period which had commenced when he was writing.

Dr. Lightfoot, Harmony on Rev. xx. and Sermons, vol. ii. p. 1055, and p. 117, and p. 1233, says (on Rev. xx.), "This Twentieth Chapter containeth a brief view of all the times from the rising of the Gospel to the end of the world."

On the doctrine of a MILLENNIUM.

The foregoing verses of this chapter have been understood by some to intimate, that Christ will come from heaven, at His next appearance, in order to raise the Saints from their graves, and in order to reign with them upon earth for a Thousand years.

This is commonly called the doctrine of a MILLENNIUM; and they who hold it are called Chiliasts, from the χίλια ἔτη here mentioned, or Millenarians.

But this doctrine of a personal appearance of Christ, for a reign with His Saints upon earth, for a period of a thousand years, appears to be inconsistent with the language of the APOCALYPSE in particular, and with the general doctrine of HOLY SCRIPTURE.

(1) The Millenarians suppose, that the Saints will be raised with their bodies to reign with Christ upon earth, and they ground that notion on this passage of the Apocalypse.

But the Resurrection, of which the Apocalypse here speaks, is not a Resurrection of bodies, but of souls (see v. 4, "I saw the souls").

(2) The Millenarians suppose that the Saints,—and only the Saints,—will be raised in a bodily Resurrection to live and reign with Christ on earth for a thousand years; and that Christ's kingdom will be established in a state of great glory and felicity upon earth for that time.

But the Apocalypse reveals a state of great impiety on earth, at the end of the millennial period; and it displays a general insurrection and open rebellion against Christ in the four quarters of the world at that time (v. 8). Such a state of things would be unaccountable, if Christ's dominion had been established upon earth for a thousand years; and if the Saints—and the Saints only—had been living and reigning upon earth for that time.

(3) The Millenarians suppose the absence of pain and sorrow during the millennial period; but the Apocalypse declares the continuance of pain and sorrow even to the end (see xxi. 4).

(4) They suppose that Christ will come down from heaven to raise the bodies of His Saints, in order that He may reign here with them where they are; but the Apocalypse declares that the souls of His Saints are raised, that they may reign with Him where He is. The Millenarians bring down Christ to men; the Apocalypse raises men to Christ.

Their opinion is also at variance with the doctrine taught in other parts of HOLY SCRIPTURE.

(5) They suppose that the bodies of Saints will be raised a thousand years before the Last Day.

But Christ Himself affirms in HOLY SCRIPTURE that they who believe in Him will be raised at the LAST DAY (John vi. 39).

(6) They suppose that when Christ next appears, He will not come for the purpose of judging the world, but of reigning upon earth.

But Christ Himself has declared in Holy Scripture, that when He next comes, it will be in order to raise all men, and to judge them all. See John v. 28, 29. Matt. xvi. 27. Cp. 1 Thess. iv. 16. 2 Thess. i. 7. 2 Tim. iv. 1. And the Apocalypse declares, that when Christ cometh with the clouds, "every eye shall see Him" (i. 7).

(7) They suppose that a thousand years will pass away after Christ's next appearing; and that Satan will be loosed after those thousand years, and that after a general wicked rebellion against Christ, then the Wicked will rise from the grave, and the Universal Judgment will take place.

But, if the Righteous had been already raised visibly in their bodies, and had already reigned with Christ in person for a thousand years upon earth, the Day of Resurrection and of Judgment would be of little concern to them; their condition would have been already declared; and the future Resurrection and Judgment would have lost in great measure the character of universality ascribed to it in Holy Writ. And if the Wicked are not to live till after the loosing of Satan, and the impious insurrection of godless multitudes against Christ (v. 8), we must suppose that many of the risen Saints of Christ, who have reigned with Him during the Millennium, will rise up in rebellion against Him.

(8) They presume that the Day of Judgment cannot come till after a thousand years from the binding of Satan, which they suppose to be still future; and that it will come in a short time after the expiration of those thousand years. But Christ Himself declares in the Apocalypse that He comes quickly, as a thief (Rev. iii. 11; xvi. 15), and the whole tenour of Holy Scripture teaches that the Day of Judgment will be sudden and unexpected, and that it is our duty to be ever watching, for "we know not the day nor the hour when our Lord will come" (Matt. xxiv. 42. Cp. Acts i. 7).

(9) They disparage the blessed work which Christ has already performed in His Death, Passion, Resurrection, and sending the Holy Ghost; and they depreciate the efficacy of Christ's Mission at His first Advent, by which He bound Satan, and has enabled every faithful Christian to overcome him; see above, p. 259.

(10) Lastly, they suppose that Christ will leave His heavenly Throne of Glory, in order to come and reign for a thousand years with men upon this low and little earth.

But, after the sublime Visions of the Apocalypse, where Christ is revealed as adored by Myriads of Angels in heaven, such a notion as this seems to be inconsistent with the revelations of this sublime book, and to be derogatory to the dignity of Christ, as displayed therein, and in other parts of Holy Scripture. Christ has ascended into heaven, and He there sitteth in glory till He makes all His foes His footstool (see Ps. cx. 1. Matt. xxii. 44. 1 Cor. xv. 25), and He has declared, that when He next appears, it will not be for the sake of reigning a thousand years upon earth, but for the sake of executing judgment on all His enemies, especially upon Satan, and of raising all men from their graves, and of rewarding His faithful servants with heavenly joys.

On such grounds as these we feel constrained to reject the doctrine of a Millennium; or of a personal reign of Christ upon earth with His Saints for a thousand years.

The interpretation given of these verses (1—6) in the foregoing notes is that which has been adopted by the best Expositors of the Western and Eastern Churches from the days of S. Augustine to those of Bp. Andrewes. See S. Augustine, de Civ. Dei xx. 7—9. Andreas, in Bibl. P. Max. v. p. 626. Cassiodorus in Apocalyp. p. 239. Primasius, B. P. M. x. 329. Haymo, ad loc. Ambrosius Ansbertus, B. P. M. p. 620. Bede, p. 429. Bp. Andrewes c. Bellarmine, c. 10, and Sermons; see vol. ii. pp. 199. 237. 402, and vol. iii. 48, on John xx. 17, and vol. v. 83, on John xx. 23, and vol. v. 298. Bp. Hall, on the Revelation, p. 921. Abp. Leighton, on 1 Pet. ii. 2.

It is observable that this Exposition was adopted after a careful scrutiny of the opinions of some who supposed that this chapter describes a personal reign of Christ on earth with the Saints for a thousand years before the general Resurrection.

That opinion undoubtedly was entertained by some pious and learned men in ancient times. It was held by Papias (see Euseb. iii. 39. Hieron. Scr. Eccl. c. 18), Irenæus (v. 33, 34), Tertullian (c. Marcion. iii. 24), Justin Martyr (c. Tryphon. c. 80), and some few more.

But it was afterwards sifted by others, especially by Origen (de Princip. ii. 11. 2, and 6, and Prolog. in Cantica), Dionysius of Alexandria (Euseb. vii. 24, 25), S. Ephraim (iii. p. 449), S. Gregory Nazianzen (Orat. li. and lii.), S. Jerome (in Esaiam, xxx. and liv. lxv. and in Ezek. xxxviii. Epist. 150), and S. Augustine (de Civ. Dei xx. 7).

The language of Andreas, Bishop of Cappadocia, in the sixth century, stating the opinion of the Millenarians, and declaratory of the doctrine of the Church, in this respect, is very clear and explicit. Bibl. Patrum Max. tom. v. p. 627. Primam ex mortuis Resurrectionem solis sanctis propriam futuram dixerunt (Millenarii): quo nimirum in hâc crassâ et caliginosâ terrâ, in quâ illustria fortitudinis et patientiæ specimina ediderant, Mille annis gloriâ et honore potiantur; post hoc autem tempus elapsum universalem omnium, hoc est non justorum tantum, verum etiam peccatorum, Resurrectionem fore. Sed Ecclesia neutrum horum recipit: ὅτι οὐδὲν τούτων ἡ Ἐκκλησία δέδεκται, περιττόν ἐστι καὶ λέγειν, says Arethas, p. 816. Cp. Catena, ed. Cramer, pp. 469—472. 566—569.

The result of the examination of the opinion of the Millenarians was, that after the fifth century hardly any writer of credit can be cited as holding the notion of a personal reign of Christ on earth for a thousand years, or as supposing that such an opinion could be deduced from the Apocalypse.

The opinion of the Millenarians, or Chiliasts, as they were called, was censured in ancient times as erroneous. See S. Augustine de Hæres. c. 8. Philastr. de Hæres. 59, who says, "Hæresis est Chilionetitarum, id est Millenariorum, quæ docet ita, cùm venerit Christus de cœlo, mille anni erunt iterum nobis ad carnaliter vivendum," &c. It is condemned by the Church in the Athanasian Creed, where it is said, that at "Christ's Coming all men will rise with their bodies." The evidence on this subject may be seen in Tillemont, art. Millénaires, ii. p. 140. Hist. Eccles. liv. iii. c. 15. "Ecclesiæ sensus" (says Cornelius à Lapide ad Apoc. xx.) "Millenariorum sententiam reprobat; unde jam evanuisse videtur." Cf. Baron. Annal. ad An. 303, n. 127. "Je ne scay point" (says Tillemont, Hist. Eccl. art. Papias, ii. p. 140) "qu'on trouve qu'il y ait eu des Millénaires depuis S. Jerome et S. Augustin, de sorte que si quelques uns en ont conservé les sentiments, cela n'a fait aucun éclat considérable." And Dr. Isaac Barrow (Sermon xxviii. vol. v. p. 27, ed. Oxf. 1818) classes the doctrine of the Millennium among "notions not certain or not true, in which they who entertained them followed some conceits once passable among divers, but not built on any sure foundation, and which were anciently in great vogue, but are now discarded." See also Hammond ad Rev. xx. 7. "Though some were otherwise minded, yet was this doctrine of the Chiliasts condemned by the Church, and since that time all were accounted hereticks who maintained it."

The opinion of the Millenarians was also condemned both by the Lutherans and Calvinists of the sixteenth century. See the Augsburgh Confession (A.D. 1530), pars i. art. xvii. p. 14, ed. Hase. Lips. 1837. The original words are, "damnant alios, qui nunc spargunt Judaicas opiniones, quòd ante resurrectionem mortuorum pii regnum mundi occupaturi sint." Melanchthon (de furoribus et deliriis Anabaptistarum), tom. i. "Anabaptistæ affirmant oportere ante novissimum diem in terris regnum Christi tale existere in quo pii dominentur."

The two most learned Lutherans, Martin Chemnitzius and John Gerhard, speak in similar terms of Millenarianism. See Chemnitz, de Lect. Patrum, Loc. Com. ed. 1690, p. 2, where he calls "opinio Chiliastica" an "error in fundamento." The words of Gerhard may be seen in his Loci Theolog. ix. p. 322. Chiliasm was also confuted by Osiander contra Puccium, Tubing. 1593, and by Cramer de Regno Christi, p. ii. c. 4. Calvin (Inst. iii. xxv. 5, p. 177, ed. Tholuck, 1835) says, "Chiliastarum commentum puerilius est, quàm ut refutatione vel indigeat vel dignum sit. Nec illis suffragatur Apocalypsis (xx. 1), ex quâ errori suo colorem induxisse certum est."

Millenarianism was also condemned in one of the Articles of the Church of England, A.D. 1552. See Dr. Cardwell, Synod. i. p. 17. The Church of England also rejects this opinion in the IVth of her XXXIX Articles, where she says that "Christ ascended into heaven and there sitteth until He return," not, for a personal reign during a Millennium on earth, but in order "to judge all men, at the Last Day." Similarly in her Collect for Advent she teaches her people to pray, "that at the Last Day, when Christ shall come again in His glorious Majesty to judge the quick and dead, we may rise to the life immortal." And, in the Order for the Burial of the Dead, she prays that Christ would "shortly accomplish the number of His elect, and hasten His kingdom; that we, with all those that are departed in the true faith of God's holy name, may have our perfect consummation and bliss in body and soul in His eternal and everlasting glory." The judgment of the Church of England in this matter is also further pronounced in the words of the Creed inserted in her Baptismal Office, as follows: "He (Christ) ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty, and from thence shall come again, at the end of the world, to judge the quick and the dead."

These expressions are irreconcileable with the opinion of the Millenarians, that the purpose of Christ's next appearance from Heaven will not be to raise the dead from their graves, and to judge the quick and dead, but to reign in person upon earth with His Saints for a thousand years before the General Resurrection and the Day of Judgment.

The history of Millenarian opinions has been written by Corodi, Geschichte des Chiliasmus, Zurich, 1781, 3 vols. See also Gieseler, Church History, §§ 52. 63. 66, and the Bampton Lectures of the Rt. Rev. S. Waldegrave, D.D. Bishop of Carlisle.

7—10. καὶ ὅταν τελεσθῇ] And when the thousand years shall have been finished, Satan will be loosed out of his prison. And shall go forth to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to the battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.

And they went upon the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. And the Devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where both the Beast and the False Prophet are, and they will be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

This Vision pre-announces that before the close of the Christian Dispensation, under which we now live, a great and final struggle between good and evil will ensue. Our Lord Himself had predicted this, by comparing the Days before His Coming to the Days of Noah (Matt. xxiv. 37), and of Lot (Luke xvii. 28), and to the Days before the destruction of Jerusalem (Matt. xxiv. 3—35); and by asking this question, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find the faith on earth?" (Luke xviii. 8.)

S. Augustine inquires whether it is to be supposed that the Saints will cease to reign when the Devil is loosed (de Civ. Dei, xx. 13). To which question he replies in the negative. It is indeed said that Satan will be bound for a thousand years, and it is added that he will afterwards be bound for a little while. And it is also said that the Saints will reign a thousand years, but it is not said that they will cease to reign, when the thousand years are past. The fact that they reign with Christ is a pledge of the endurance of their reign; for His "Kingdom is that which will never be destroyed" (Dan. ii. 44). Indeed, as Christ's promise to them that He would be with them until the end of the world (Matt. xxviii. 20), and that some who stood there would not taste of death until they saw the Son of Man coming in His Kingdom, did not imply that He would ever desert His Disciples, or that they who stood by Him would ever taste of death, but the reverse (see on Matt. xvi. 28); so the promise of a reign with Christ for a thousand years does not imply any cessation of that reign on the expiration of that period, but rather an increase of glory after it. And it is probable (as Augustine observes) that the final struggle will be as brief as it is fierce; and that it will suddenly be terminated by the appearance of Christ coming to Judgment. On those modes of expression, compare note above on Matt. i. 25.

v. 8. The words τέσσαρσι γωνίαις τῆς γῆς, literally, four corners of the earth, are rightly rendered "four quarters of the earth" in the English Authorized Version. This is the sense of the word γωνία in 1 Sam. xiv. 38; it signifies all within the four corners (cp. above, vii. 1), and corresponds to πλάτος, breadth, in v. 9. See Hengstenberg here. This phrase pre-announces a great gathering and general Insurrection against Christ, as indeed is declared by the additional assertion that their number will be as the sand of the sea.

The Nations called Gog and Magog are representatives of the enemies of God. Magog is the second son of Japheth (Gen. x. 2), the father of the Gentiles, as distinguished from the race of Shem; and Gog is called in Ezekiel the chief Prince of Meshech and Tubal, who are also of the race of Japheth (Gen. x. 2). In the prophecy of Ezekiel (xxxviii., xxxix.), which is continued and consummated in this Vision of the Apocalypse, other Nations are represented as allied with Gog against Israel (xxxviii. 5—23; xxxix. 1—5); and with Magog (xxxix. 6). The battle is then described, and the defeat and burial of Gog and his multitude (xxxix. 11—16), and the sacrifice of God's enemies (vv. 17, 18), and the full and final triumph of His cause, and the sanctification and glorification of His people.

It appears from that prophecy, that the names Gog and Magog are used here to signify generally the earthly powers leagued together under the banner of Satan, and opposed to God and the Christian Israel, and the heavenly Jerusalem. This is clear from the fact that they are described as existing in the four quarters of the earth, and as going over the breadth of the earth, and as being as the sand of the sea (vv. 8, 9).

The defeat and burial of Gog and his hosts in the Vision of Ezekiel, is explained by this Vision of the Apocalypse to be prophetical of the overthrow of Satan and all his Confederates, and of their condemnation to the Lake of fire.

Here then is a prophecy of the final Persecution, which will precede Christ's coming to Judgment. Then will be a general struggle between the City of God and the City of the Evil One.

10. ὁ Διάβολος] the Devil who deceiveth them was cast into the Lake of fire. Satan rises in rebellion against God, in order to fall to a lower depth, after each successive insurrection. He rose against God in heaven, and was cast down from heaven into earth (xii. 9). He rose against God in earth, and has been cast into the abyss (xx. 1—3). He will hereafter be loosed from the abyss (xx. 7; cp. Isa. li. 10), and will rise and excite many to a desperate rebellion against God. He will then be consigned to a lower gulf, even to the lake of fire, from which there will be no egress. The more fiercely Satan rages against Christ, the more fearful will be his ruin.

May all the enemies of Christ take warning from this revelation!

In reviewing the preceding portion of this chapter, we see a brief summary of what has been done by Christ for His Church, from His Incarnation to the End of Time. We see that Christ came from heaven to bind Satan; that He did bind him; and gave men power to overcome him; that He made them partners of His triumph and inheritors of His glory.

Here we see an answer to the objection that might otherwise have been raised, from a consideration of the afflictions of the Church, revealed in the Apocalypse. Her sufferings were her path to Glory. The Death of the faithful was their gate to Life. Nothing can harm them; they are enthroned with Christ.

We here recognize also the important truth, that the punishment of the wicked is not due to any want of love in Christ, but to their own sins, which loose Satan against them.

This is the moral to be derived from the first part of this chapter. Having taught us this lesson, St. John takes a step which he has not taken before. He passes from Time into Eternity. He sees the Throne of JUDGMENT set, and the Books opened, and the Dead raised and judged. He reveals the Heavenly City. Thus he displays the immensity of God's love to man, and the greatness of His power; and the severity of His justice; and awakens the fears, and excites the courage, and stimulates the faith, and quickens the hope of Christians in every age.

The GENERAL RESURRECTION and LAST JUDGMENT.

11—15. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat upon it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and no place was found for them.

And I saw the dead, the great and the small, stand before the throne; and books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.

And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and Hades delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works.

And Death and Hades were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death, the lake of fire.

And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

In v. 12 the article τοὺς has been restored by the recent editors; and μεγάλους has been placed before μικρούς. No one is so great or so small as to escape the Judgment to come.

Elz. has Θεοῦ, of God; but θρόνου has been rightly adopted by the most recent Editors from A, B, and most ancient Versions. The Son of Man is the Judge (John v. 22). It is before His Throne that all must appear (2 Cor. v. 10).

In vv. 13 and 14 the English Version has hell for ᾅδης. See above, i. 18; vi. 8; and compare 1 Cor. xv. 55.

"O Lord God most holy, O Lord most mighty, O holy and most merciful Saviour, deliver us not into the bitter pains of eternal death.

CH. XXI.] The heavenly bliss and GLORY of the RIGHTEOUS; The MISERY of the WICKED.

1—8. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth passed away; and the sea is no more.

And the holy city, new Jerusalem, I saw coming down out of heaven from God, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God with men, and He will tabernacle with them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself shall be with them, their God. And God shall wipe away every tear from their eyes; and death shall be no more, neither sorrow, nor crying, nor pain: for the former things passed away.

And He that sitteth upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And He saith, Write: for these sayings are faithful and true. And He said unto me, They are done. I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely. He that overcometh shall inherit these things; and I will be his God, and he shall be My son.

But the fearful, and unbelieving, and sinners, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all the liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death. S. Irenæus (v. 35. 2) quotes these verses from v. 1 to v. 6. In v. 3 he has peoples in the plural, and so A, and some Cursives.

In v. 1 Elz. has παρῆλθε; but ἀπῆλθον or ἀπῆλθαν, they passed away, is the reading of the best MSS.

Observe the aorist here (ἀπῆλθον), and in v. 4; it describes the suddenness with which all the pomp and power, all the grandeur and glory, and all the pain and sorrow, of this lower world, will disappear and glide away, like a dream when one awaketh. (Ps. lxxiii. 19.)

Compare the remarkable parallel in 2 Cor. v. 17, εἴ τις ἐν Χριστῷ, καινὴ κτίσις, τὰ ἀρχαῖα παρῆλθεν (observe the aorist, as here), ἰδοὺ γέγονε καινὰ τὰ πάντα. Regeneration began in the first resurrection, which is Baptism (xx. 5, p. 261), and will be consummated in the second Resurrection to heavenly and eternal glory, both in body and soul.

— ἡ θάλασσα] The sea exists no more; the restless, troubled element of worldly pride and tumultuous rebellion, and confusion, and anarchy, has no longer any being.

On this meaning of the word sea in the Apocalypse, see above, viii. 8, 9; xiii. 1; cp. Ps. lxv. 7, "the noise of the waves, and the madness of the people;" and Isa. lvii. 20, "The wicked are like the troubled sea;" and Luke xxi. 25, "on the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring." "He designates by the name of sea," says Bede, "the troublous life of this world, which will then be over."

2. Ἱερουσαλὴμ καινήν] new Jerusalem. Observe the Hebrew form of the name Jerusalem, a form never used by St. John in the narrative of his Gospel, where he always uses the Greek form Ἱεροσόλυμα, indicating that the literal City had been, as it were, then made like a Gentile City by its sins, especially by its rejection of Christ and His Apostles.

In a similar spirit he uses the word οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι, "the Jews," in his Gospel, as opponents of Christ. See above, Introduction to the Gospel of St. John, p. 268.

But in his Apocalypse he never uses the Greek form Ἱεροσόλυμα, but always the Hebrew form Ἱερουσαλὴμ, and by it he describes the Church glorified. His design is to Christianize Hebrew names and ideas, and to show that they have their consummation in the Gospel and Church of Christ.

On the same principle, he never applies the word Jew, in the Apocalypse, to designate the literal Israel, but he employs it to characterize the true worshippers of Jesus Christ. See ii. 9; iii. 9.

Thus the figurative style of St. John's Apocalypse is exhibited in striking contrast to the historical diction of his Gospel.

Thus also he ministers comfort to the true Israelites, by declaring to them, that though the literal Jerusalem is now trodden under foot by the Gentiles, yet they themselves have a Heavenly city; and that more than all the glories of the ancient Sion are perpetuated in the new Jerusalem. See above, Introduction, pp. 144, 145.

The most learned among the ancient Jews had some presentiments of this Apocalyptic Vision. They were familiar with the name "heavenly Jerusalem," and believed it to be the archetype of what they saw in the literal Sion, its Temple and its Ritual. They regarded them as the "shadow of heavenly things" (Heb. viii. 5). This opinion had been authorized by the Hebrew Scriptures. God said to Moses, "See thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the Mount." The sayings of the Hebrew doctors on this subject may be seen in the treatise of Schoettgen, de Hierosolyma Cœlesti, pp. 1205—1248, of his Horæ Hebraicæ, 1733.

— καταβαίνουσαν] coming down. The new Jerusalem descends from out of heaven; all her graces are from above. She is described here as a Bride adorned for her own husband, and is thus contrasted with Babylon, the Harlot Church, adorned for another, not her husband.

3. ἰδοὺ, ἡ σκηνή] Behold the Tabernacle of God is with men. The types of the itinerant Tabernacle in the Wilderness, the figurative ritual and festal joys of the Feast of Tabernacles, celebrated in the Literal Jerusalem, are consummated in the heavenly Jerusalem. This realization began, when the Son of God came down from heaven and tabernacled (ἐσκήνωσεν) in our flesh (John i. 14). They are consummated in the new Jerusalem, as had been pre-announced in the Sixth Seal; the language of which supplies the best exposition of the present Vision. See vii. 15—17, and the notes there.

encounter the battle for God, and therefore the fearful are contrasted with those who overcome.

— καὶ ἁμαρτωλοῖς] and sinners: not in Elz., but in B and in more than thirty Cursive MSS, and in the Syriac and Arabic Versions, and in Andreas and Catena. The word was not likely to be inserted by a Copyist; and it seems to have a special meaning, as intimating the important truth, that not only παράβασις, or transgression of written law, but ἁμαρτία also, or sin against any law—whether natural and unwritten law, or positive and written law—will be a subject for cognizance and condemnation at the Great Day. See Rom. ii. 14—16.

Further Description of the Bride, or the Holy City, the New, Heavenly, Jerusalem.

9—27.] And one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues came and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will show thee the Bride, the Lamb's wife.

And he carried me away in the Spirit to a mountain great and high, and showed me the Holy City, Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, like a jasper stone, clear as crystal; and having a wall great and high, and having twelve gates, and at the gates twelve Angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve Tribes of the children of Israel. On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates. And the wall of the city hath twelve foundations, and in them the names of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb.

And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof. And the city lieth foursquare, and the length as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, to twelve thousand furlongs; the length and the breadth and the height of it are equal. And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred forty-four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of an angel.

And the building of the wall of it is jasper: and the city pure gold, like unto clear glass.

And the foundations of the wall of the city are garnished with every precious stone. The first foundation, jasper: the second, sapphire; the third, chalcedony; the fourth, emerald; the fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, topaz; the tenth, chrysoprasus; the eleventh, jacinth; the twelfth, amethyst.

And the twelve gates are twelve pearls; every several gate of one pearl: and the street of the city pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

And temple saw I none in her: for the Lord God Almighty is her temple, and the Lamb (is her temple). And the city hath no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten her, and the Lamb is her lamp.

And the Gentiles shall walk through her light: and the kings of the earth bring their glory and honour unto her. And her gates shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there. And they shall bring the glory and honour of the Gentiles into her. And there shall in no wise enter into her any thing that defileth, and he that worketh abomination, or a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.

9. καὶ ἦλθεν εἷς] And one of the Seven Angels came: observe the contrast of this Vision with that above, xvii. 1. In that Vision, the faithless Church is displayed; in this Vision, the faithful Church. Let the two Visions be placed side by side, and no doubt can be entained of the writer's design to contrast the one with the other.

Καὶ ἦλθεν εἷς ἐκ τῶν ἑπτὰ ἀγγέλων τῶν ἐχόντων τὰς ἑπτὰ φιάλας, καὶ ἐλάλησε μετ' ἐμοῦ λέγων, Δεῦρο, δείξω σοι τὸ κρῖμα τῆς πόρνης τῆς μεγάλης . . . Καὶ ἀπήνεγκέ με εἰς ἔρημον ἐν πνεύματι· καὶ εἶδον γυναῖκα καθημένην ἐπὶ θηρίον κόκκινον. (Rev. xvii. 1. 3.)	Καὶ ἦλθεν εἷς ἐκ τῶν ἑπτὰ ἀγγέλων τῶν ἐχόντων τὰς ἑπτὰ φιάλας . . . καὶ ἐλάλησε μετ' ἐμοῦ, λέγων, Δεῦρο, δείξω σοι τὴν νύμφην τοῦ ἀρνίου τὴν γυναῖκα. Καὶ ἀπήνεγκέ με ἐν πνεύματι ἐπ' ὄρος μέγα καὶ ὑψηλὸν, καὶ ἔδειξέ μοι τὴν πόλιν τὴν ἁγίαν Ἱερουσαλήμ. (Rev. xxi. 9, 10.)

Here is the Νύμφη, or Bride, contrasted with the Πόρνη, or Harlot.

Here is the Holy City, contrasted with the Great City.

Here is Jerusalem, contrasted with Babylon.

Here is the great and lofty Mountain, on which the one sits in security for ever, contrasted with the Wilderness and the Waters (vv. 1 and 15), on which the other is enthroned.

Here is the Bride espoused to the Lamb, contrasted with the Harlot seated on the Beast.

The one is a Church; the other is a Church also. The one faithful to Christ her Lord; the other unfaithful to Him. The one is the true Catholic Church; the other is that Church which usurps the name.

Both these Visions are displayed by one of the Angels who had the Seven Vials, full of the seven last plagues. The Angels who had the Vials were executioners of divine Judgments on the empire of the faithless Church (see xvi. 1—19); but their work is completed in a Vision of divine Love, the Vision of the faithful Church in glory.

10. τὴν πόλιν τὴν ἁγίαν] the holy City: so the best MSS. and Editions. Elz. has μεγάλην, the great City; but that phrase is restricted in the Apocalypse to the mystical Babylon. See xi. 8; xviii. 10. 16.

11. φωστὴρ] her light; like to a most precious stone, to a jasper like crystal; as God Himself was described above, iv. 3. This is the Light of which he here speaks, see v. 23, where the Lamb is called its λύχνος, or Lamp; and compare Isa. lx. 19, "The Lord will be to it for an eternal light;" and Ezek xliii. 2—6. On the word φωστὴρ, see above, Phil. ii. 15.

13. ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν] On the east, three gates: the city has three gates on each of its four sides. The heavenly City turns an equal face to each of the four quarters of heaven, showing the equality of God's favour to all, and the Universality of the Church. Many will enter the Holy City from all the four quarters of the world. "Many will come from the East and the West, from the North and the South, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of God" (Luke xiii. 29).

There are three gates on each side, as in the Vision of Ezekiel, xlviii. 30—34. These three gates may signify (as some ancient Interpreters suggest) that the Entrance into the Church is by Faith, publicly professed in Baptism into the Name of the Three Persons, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost (Matt. xxviii. 19).

The number Three bespeaks the number of Divine Persons in the Ever-Blessed Trinity; the number Four represents all space lying within the Four corners of the Earth (see note at end of chap. xi.); and the number Twelve, being the product of Three multiplied into Four, represents the Twelve Apostles and their lawful successors in an Apostolic Ministry, who were sent by Christ with a commission to "go and teach all Nations" in the four quarters of the Earth, baptizing them in the Name of the Triune God. "These are the labourers (says Aug. in Ps. lxix.) who were to be sent on a Mission to the four corners of the Earth, to bring them into the one Faith of the Ever-Blessed Trinity." See above, on Matt. x. 1.

Therefore the Twelve Apostles are mentioned as the Twelve foundations of the Universal Church glorified in heaven.

14. θεμελίους δώδεκα] twelve foundations: or foundation-stones (so that there would be three on each side of the City; cp. vv. 19, 20), and in them twelve names of the twelve Apostles of the Lamb. Compare the three standards of three of the Twelve Tribes on each of the Four sides of the Tabernacle. See above, p. 178.

This is the foundation of the Church glorified, the City which hath the foundations—that for which the Patriarchs looked—whose Builder and Maker is God (Heb. xi. 10).

Here is a proof that no one Apostle is the foundation-stone of the Church; much less can he be the foundation itself, which is CHRIST; see above, on 1 Cor. iii. 2. 12, and Eph. ii. 20, and on Matt. x. 2, and xvi. 18. See also above, the description of the Church, displayed as wearing a crown of Twelve stars, xii. 1.

The names of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb, engraven on the foundations of the new Jerusalem, show that the Twelve Apostles are the Patriarchs of the Tribes of the true Israel, and that the glory of Sion has passed into the Christian Church.

This truth is also exhibited by the quality of these Twelve Foundation-stones. They are Twelve precious Stones; and they are mainly the same precious Stones as those which adorned the sacred Breastplate of the High Priest, and on which the names of the Twelve Tribes of Israel were engraved, Exod. xxviii. 15—21. The breastplate of the Hebrew High Priest, garnished with its oracular gems, was like a beautiful garment which might be put off; but these Apostolic precious stones of the Twelve Tribes of the Israel of God are immoveably set as the very foundation-stones of the heavenly Jerusalem, and are inscribed with the names of the Apostles, who are the Progenitors and Fathers of the Spiritual Israel; because by preaching the Word, and by the life-giving Sacraments of the Gospel, they execute the ministry of Regeneration, by which Christ Himself is formed and born in all Nations of the world. See above, on xii. 5. Matt xxviii. 19.

The Heavenly City is built on these Twelve Foundation-stones. Therefore whosoever is not built on the foundation of Apostolic Faith and Discipline is not a lively stone in the heavenly Jerusalem.

16. ἐπὶ σταδίων δώδεκα χιλιάδων] unto stadia of twelve thousands: that is, extending to (Winer, § 49, p. 363) stadia of 12,000, the genitive of the quality (Winer, § 34, p. 212). This amount expresses the dimensions of the City in every direction, height, breadth, and length. See Andreas, Benyel, Hengstenberg.

The number twelve thousand has already been used to signify the Apostolic company of those sealed from each of the twelve tribes (see vii. 5—8); and this solid cubical form of the City (as distinct from the walls) denotes the perfection of that number.

In those three dimensions some ancient Interpreters supposed a symbolical reference to the spiritual graces and qualities of the Christian Church. Here (say Primasius, Bede, and Haymo) the solidity of Truth is represented, on which the Church is firmly built, in the length of Faith, the breadth of Charity, and the height of Hope, so as not to be moved by any winds of doctrine; and where any one of these dimensions is lacking, the perfect stability of the Church does not exist.

17. ἐμέτρησε τὸ τεῖχος αὐτῆς] He measured her wall: he had just been speaking of the measuring of the City; that is, of the whole glorious assemblage of buildings and suburbs of the heavenly Jerusalem, like pure gold (v. 18), illuminated by the glory of God.

But, as the literal Jerusalem had an inner wall or fortification (τεῖχος), the city of David, so has the heavenly Sion.

He had spoken (in vv. 12. 15) of the Gates and Foundations of this wall. He then proceeded to describe the dimensions of the City; and he now specifies the height of the Wall, which is 144,000 cubits.

— μέτρον ἀνθρώπου] measure of a man, which is also measure of an Angel. In the heavenly City men will be equal to the Angels (Luke xx. 36). They themselves will be in measure and stature like unto Angels, and in all the qualities and graces of soul and body; and they will reckon and measure all things, not, as now, by any carnal and earthly calculations, but by a spiritual and divine Arithmetic, and by a heavenly and angelic Mensuration. They will measure all things with the Golden Reed of Divine Knowledge, like that in the hands of the Angel measuring the heavenly City.

18. ἡ ἐνδόμησις] The superstructure of the Wall is jasper. The word ἐνδόμησις occurs in Josephus (Ant. xv. 9. 6), who applies it to the superstructure of a mole of a harbour. It is that part of the walls which is built on the foundations. On the jasper, see iv. 3, and here v. 19.

19. οἱ θεμέλιοι] The foundations of the wall of the City are adorned with every precious stone: according to the typical adornment of the literal Temple of Jerusalem (1 Kings x. 2. 10, 11), and to the prophecy of Isaiah, liv. 11, 12. Cp. Tobit xiii. 16—18.

— ὁ θεμέλιος ὁ πρῶτος] The first Foundation-stone of jasper, the second sapphire.

These Twelve Foundations appear to be the same as those mentioned above, as engraven with the names of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb. See v. 14, and note.

St. John has already said, in v. 19, that the Foundation was garnished with every precious stone, and then he specified twelve precious stones, indicating that the Twelve Apostolic Foundations represent every spiritual grace bestowed by God upon His faithful servants, who are His Jewels (Mal. iii. 17). In the variety and beauty of the precious stones is symbolized the πολυποίκιλος σοφία of God (Eph. iii. 10), and His multiform love in supplying all the χαρίσματα, gifts and graces (Rom. xii. 6. 1 Cor. xii. 4—9. 28. 30), vouchsafed by Him to the several Apostles, and shining in brilliant lustre in their several places, like Jewels set in beautiful symmetry and harmony, for the adorning of the heavenly Jerusalem, and laid in strength and stedfastness for its solid construction, and everlasting endurance.

A description of these precious Stones is given by S. Epiphanius, de xii. gemmis Rationalis (τοῦ λογείου).

See also the xxxviith book of Pliny's Natural History; and the Treatise of Faustino Corsi, Pietre Antiche, Roma, 1828, p. 137 sqq., and the authorities quoted here by Wetstein, N. T. ii. pp. 843—845.

The Jasper has been specified above in the description of the glorious appearance of God; and also the Sardine Stone, iv. 3.

azure) is mentioned in the description of the pavement under the feet of God in Exod. xxiv. 10, and in the description of His Throne, Ezek. i. 26. Plin. xxxvii. 39, "in Sapphiris aurum punctis collucet cæruleis."

The Emerald, σμάραγδος, has been described above, iv. 3.

The Sardonyx is mentioned Exod. xxxix. 13. Ezek. xxviii. 13, of a flesh colour, tinged with hues of white. Plin. xxxvii. 23.

The Sardius has been described above, iv. 3.

The Chrysolite is mentioned in Ezek. xxviii. 20; it is described by Pliny, l. c. c. 42, as "brilliant, like the lustre of gold."

The Beryl: see Exod. xxviii. 20. Ezek. xxviii. 13; it is rendered by the LXX in Gen. ii. 12 by λίθος πράσινος, and is described by Pliny (l. c. c. 20) as like sea-green.

The Topaz, Exod. xxviii. 17. Ezek. xxviii. 13. Job xxviii. 19, described by Strabo and others in Wetst. p. 845, as like gold; and by others as having a bright green tinge like glass.

The Chrysoprasus, compared by Pliny (xxxvii. 20) to the beryl, but more pale; and yet has a tint of the purple Amethyst.

The Jacinth has been described above, ix. 17.

The Amethyst, Exod. xxviii. 19, of a purple or violet colour.

As was already observed on v. 14, the Twelve precious Stones here specified, appear to be the same, or nearly so, as those on the Breastplate of the High Priest, Exod. xxviii. 17—20.

Three are mentioned there, which seem to be designated here under other names, viz. the ἄνθραξ (carbunculus), λιγύριον (λυγκούριον), and ἀχάτης. Many ancient Writers were of opinion that the Chalcedony mentioned here is a species of Carbunculus; and that the Jacinth of the Apocalypse is the same as the λιγύριον, and the chrysoprasus is similar to the ἀχάτης, on which see Plin. xxxvii. 54; and cp. the authorities in Cornelius à Lapide here.

Some other ancient Expositors have said, that the precious stones of the Aaronic Breastplate are mainly the same as those of the Heavenly Jerusalem; but that there are some differences between the two; and that thus the substantial identity of the Law and the Gospel is represented with some circumstantial variety. See Andreas here in Catenâ, p. 485.

All the glories of the Gospel shine, blended together in a heavenly splendour, on the Breastplate of our Great High Priest, Christ Jesus; all the Graces of Christians are like spangles and scintillations, effulgences and emanations, from His ineffable brightness; and their names are engraven upon His heart (Cant. viii. 6); and here they are set for ever in the foundations of the City of God.

Some ancient Expositors have proceeded to distinguish the symbolical meaning of these several jewels as follows: jasper, an emblem of the brightness of faith: sapphire, of hope; chalcedony, the flame of love.

Some have endeavoured to discover a symbolical representation of the special gifts of the several Apostles in those precious stones; but this seems to be an attempt of vain curiosity.

Their meaning may be more fully revealed hereafter in the Heavenly City itself. It is now enough to know that the City is adorned with every precious stone: that nothing is wanting in the Church for her growth in grace here, and for her everlasting glory hereafter.

22. ναὸν οὐκ εἶδον] Temple saw I none in her, for God is all in all, 1 Cor. xv. 28. God Himself is her Temple, and the Lamb: a proof of Christ's Divinity.

24. καὶ περιπατήσουσι] and the Gentiles shall walk through her light. "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light, upon them hath the light shined" (Isa. ix. 2). The people who were covered with gross darkness, on them hath the light shined. "The Gentiles have come to Thy Light, and Kings to the brightness of Thy rising" (Isa. lx. 3); and they "shall walk through the light;" it shall be their element and atmosphere; they will be bathed in a pure ocean of cloudless light.

Some Versions render διὰ, by means of; but this seems too weak a translation; διὰ is used here as in 2 Cor. viii. 18, διὰ πασῶν τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν, Acts xiii. 49. Cp. Winer, § 47, p. 338; and Andreas here explains the words by ἐν τῷ φωτί.

The sense may be well explained from Isa. lx. 15. 19, "Whereas thou hast been forsaken, and hated, that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellence,—the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy GOD thy glory."

The Prophecy, contained in the sixtieth chapter of Isaiah, which began to be fulfilled at the Epiphany of Christ, when the Gentiles walked by the light of the Star, and came by its leading to the Light of the World, and brought their gifts to Him, the first-fruits of the Gentiles, will have its perfect accomplishment in the heavenly Jerusalem; they will no longer walk by the light of some heavenly constellation external to themselves, and above their own path, but their path itself will be light. They will live and move in light. They will dwell in Him Who is the Light.

This Vision and that Prophecy afford mutually the best exposition, the one of the other. Compare here particularly Isa. lx. 6. 9. 11. 13. 17—21.

Elz. has τῶν σωζομένων after ἔθνη; but this is not in A, B, and in many Cursives and Versions, and is rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles.

— οἱ βασιλεῖς τῆς γῆς] and the Kings of the Earth bring their glory and honour into her. Here is a happy announcement; it declares that some "Kings of the Earth" will remain Christian unto the end, and that they will not join in the rebellion of the "Kings of the Earth" against Christ (xvi. 14; xviii. 9; xix. 19). Kings and Nations (xx. 8) are before mentioned as rising up against Christ, but here they are tributary to Him.

25. οἱ πυλῶνες αὐτῆς] Her gates shall not be shut by day: for there shall be no night there. The γὰρ, for, explains the reason why he had not mentioned night as well as day. "Her gates shall not be shut by day;" and he does not add, "or by night,"—for, "night shall not be there."

The Church of Christ shall have no longer any enemies to fear; her people will be secure for ever from the assaults of Sin and Satan. Cp. Isa. lx. 11. Zech. xiv. 7. What the ancient Poets sang of, as a Vision of the Golden Age, with its "apertis otia portis," will then be fully realized.

Observe that the gates of the heavenly City are not called by the word usually employed to describe the gates of a City (πύλαι), which never occurs in the Apocalypse, but by πυλῶνες, which occurs eleven times, and which commonly, and always in the other books of the New Testament, signifies the gate of a house. See Matt. xxvi. 71. Luke xvi. 20. Acts x. 17; xii. 13, 14; xiv. 13. The City of the Heavenly Jerusalem, although it is described here as of immense size (see v. 17), is but one House. All will dwell together as brethren, as children of the same Heavenly Father, in one Everlasting Home. "In My Father's House are many Mansions," John xiv. 2.

The River of Life. The Tree of Life.

Ch. XXII. 1, 2. καὶ ἔδειξέ μοι] And he showed me a river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb; and in the midst of the broadway thereof—the tree of life. Contrast this with the πλατεῖα, or broadway, of the Great City, where the dead bodies of the Two Witnesses lay (xi. 8).

Here the types of Paradise, as depicted in the Old Testament (see Gen. ii. 9, 10; iii. 22), are fulfilled. Here is the Tree of Life, and the river flowing out of Eden. Here, therefore, is a testimony to the truth and divine origin of the History of Genesis.

Here also is an evidence of the harmonious symmetry and perfect unity of Holy Scripture, from the beginning of Genesis, the first book of the Old Testament, to the end of the Apocalypse, the last book of the New.

The Two Witnesses agree in their testimony.

The Book of Genesis reveals Almighty God, the Creator of all things very good; Adam, formed from the earth; Eve, taken from his side; the Serpent in Paradise; Man tempted, and a curse pronounced on him for disobedience in eating the fruit of the forbidden tree; and driven from Eden; and the way of the Tree of Life guarded by a flaming sword; and the promise made in mercy, that the seed of the Woman should bruise the Serpent's head.

Such are the first records of Holy Scripture.

Pass now from the first chapters of Genesis to the last of the Apocalypse. The same God is revealed, seated on His throne: Heaven and Earth adore Him: Man also is there; Adam is there in Christ, the Second Adam: Eve also is there, in the Bride of the Second Adam, the Church: Paradise also is there, not lost, but regained: and the Tree of Life, no longer fenced with a flaming brand, but open to all, for the healing of the nations. And there "is no more curse."

We have also seen the discomfiture of the Old Serpent (xx. 2).

According to the first prophecy of Scripture, Christ has bruised the Serpent's head, and has chained him, and has cast him into the lake of fire and brimstone, there to remain for ever (xx. 10).

Here is clear evidence of oneness in the design and texture of the Sacred Volume; and when we consider, that a period of more than five thousand years separates the events of the Book of Genesis from those of the Apocalypse, we may here recognize a proof, that the History and the Prophecy are from the same Divine Hand, and that the events which they describe are under the control of Him with Whom "a thousand Years are as one Day." (Ps. xc. 4. 2 Pet. iii. 8.)

The River of Life flows from the throne of God and the Lamb. All grace and glory given to men flows from the Father, through the Son. See above on 2 Cor. xiii. 13.

In the earthly Paradise there were four rivers issuing from one source, and flowing out of Eden.

There is but one River in the Heavenly City; and it does not flow out of the City. All drink there of the same joys as out of a river (Ps. xxxvi. 8); and no one who is outside the city can taste them; see v. 15.

The River of life flows through the broadway of the City, and the Tree of Life stands on each side of the River, and bears perennial fruitage, in never-ending succession; expressed by "every month," and "twelve fruits;" and this supply is accessible to all, to satisfy the hunger and thirst of all for life everlasting. "Blessed are they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." (Matt. v. 6.)

— τὰ φύλλα τοῦ ξύλου] the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the Nations. The Tree of Life in the midst of the heavenly Jerusalem, is like a pattern of the cross of Christ, on the Earthly Calvary, which was outside the literal Jerusalem. For the virtue of the Cross is not limited to the Jews, but it extends to all Nations of the Earth, who are within the Christian Sion. Here is "gloria sanctæ crucis," says Bede, through the ministry of the Apostles. In the preaching of the Gospel, the Tree of the Cross is ever bearing leaves for the healing of the Nations. Cp. Aug.?

The Cross of Christ was outside the literal Jerusalem, because Christ died for all who, in the day of grace, would believe in Him. (1 Tim. iv. 10.)

But the Tree of Life is in the inside of the heavenly Jerusalem; for it is accessible only to those who, in the time of their earthly probation, have accepted God's offers in Christ.

The Tree of Life in the book of Genesis, and the Cross of Christ, are both described by the same word, ξύλον. Cp. Gen. ii. 9, LXX, and Gal. iii. 13, where see note. 1 Pet. ii. 24.

By eating of the fruit of the forbidden Tree, the first Adam was excluded from Paradise, and from access to the Tree of Life. But the Obedience of the Second Adam more than compensated for the Disobedience of the First Adam. Christ, by His Agony in the Garden of Gethsemane, and by hanging on the Tree in Calvary, and by His glorious Resurrection from the Grave in the Garden, has restored us to Paradise and raised us to Heaven. The Tree of His Death has become to us the Tree of Life. It grows on both sides of the river, because it is efficacious for the salvation of all men in every age and country. The Cross of Christ is like the Cities of Refuge on both sides of the River Jordan (Deut. xix. Josh. xx.). It bears fruits for Eternity; its leaves are for the healing of the Nations, who before were "without Christ, aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, strangers from the covenants of promise" (Eph. ii. 12), like the traveller on his journey from Jerusalem to Jericho, lying half dead by the wayside (see Luke x. 30); but now they are made nigh by the blood of Christ, and are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints (Eph. ii. 13. 19), and have "come unto Mount Sion, unto the City of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of Angels, to the general assembly and Church of the first-born, which are written in heaven" (Heb. xii. 22, 23); "in the Jerusalem which is above, which is the Mother of us all" (Gal. iv. 26).

3. καὶ πᾶν κατάθεμα οὐκ ἔσται ἔτι] And there shall no more be any curse. In Paradise, Almighty God pronounced a curse on the first Adam after the Fall. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake: in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life" (Gen. iii. 17). That curse was pronounced on him for his disobedience, in eating of the forbidden Tree. But the Second Adam, Who died on the Tree, has taken away, by His obedience, the curse pronounced on the first Adam and his race for disobedience. It was indeed said, "Cursed is he that continueth not in all that is written in the Law," and "Cursed is he that hangeth on a tree" (Deut. xxvii. 26; xxi. 23). But by "being made a curse for us," Christ has taken away the curse, that all may be blessed in Him, and live for evermore (see on Gal. iii. 13, 14).

4. καὶ ὄψονται τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ] and they shall see His face, the face of God; which the wicked will never see. Then faith will be swallowed up in sight; in the beatific Vision of God. And His Name shall be upon their foreheads—an eternal trophy of their Victory and glorious reward in heaven for their constancy and courage in boldly confessing Him before men. Cp. note above on xiii. 16.

9. ὅρα μή] see thou do it not. See note above, on xix. 10.

— σύνδουλός σου εἰμί] I am the fellow-servant of thee, and of thy brethren the Prophets.

The Prophets were St. John's brethren, and this spiritual brotherhood is displayed in the Apocalypse. He and they were inspired by the same Spirit, and, as is here observed by an ancient Expositor, "how many words of Isaiah, how many words of Zechariah, do we read in this book of St. John!" See above, Introduction, pp. 145—147.

Here is one of the many uses of the Apocalypse, "the Revelation of JESUS CHRIST" (i. 1). In it Jesus Christ Himself, the Everlasting WORD of God, avouches the Divine Inspiration of the Old Testament. Here the Incarnate Word sets His seal on the Written Word. By adopting the language of the ancient Hebrew Prophets in the Apocalypse, and by using it as His own, He proclaims it to be the language of God.

10. μὴ σφραγίσῃς τοὺς λόγους] Seal not the words of the Prophecy of this Book. For the reason of this prohibition see above, on x. 4.

11. ὁ ἀδικῶν ἀδικησάτω ἔτι] he that is unjust, let him be unjust still, and he that is righteous, let him work righteousness still. Elz. has δικαιωθήτω here; but A, B have δικαιοσύνην ποιησάτω, and so many other MSS. and several Versions, and Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch.

Here is a remarkable testimony to the liberty of the human will; and this testimony is coupled with emphatic declarations of the abundance and freeness of divine grace (see v. 17).

These words supply a Divine reply to the objection made by some to the Christian Dispensation, on the plea of the prevalence of evil in countries professing Christianity, and using Christianity itself as a pretext for the commission of evil.

"The objections against all this (says Bishop Butler), from the perversion of Christianity, and from the supposition of its having had but little good influence, however innocently they may be proposed, yet cannot be insisted upon as conclusive, upon any principles but such as lead to downright Atheism, because the manifestation of the law of nature, by reason, which upon all principles of Theism, must have been from God, has been perverted and rendered ineffectual in the same manner. It may, indeed, I think, truly be said, that the good effects of Christianity have not been small; nor its supposed ill effects, any effects at all of it, properly speaking. Perhaps too, the things themselves done have been exaggerated, and if not, Christianity hath been often only a pretence; and the same evils, in the main, would have been done upon some other pretence. However, great and shocking as the corruptions and abuses of it have really been, they cannot be insisted upon as arguments against it, upon principles of Theism. For one cannot proceed one step in reasoning upon Natural Religion, any more than upon Christianity, without laying it down as a first principle, that the Dispensations of Providence are not to be judged of by their perversions, but by their genuine tendencies; not by what they do actually seem to effect, but by what they would effect, if Mankind did their part; that part, which is justly put and left upon them. It is altogether as much the language of one as the other; 'he that is unjust, let him be unjust still, and he that is holy, let him be holy still' (Rev. xxii. 11). The Light of Reason does not, any more than that of Revelation, force men to submit to its authority: both admonish them of what they ought to do and avoid, together with the consequences of each, and after this they leave them at full liberty to act just as they please, till the appointed time of Judgment. Every moment's experience shows, that this is God's general rule of Government" (Bishop Butler, Analog. part ii. ch. i.).

12. ὁ μισθός μου μετ' ἐμοῦ] My reward is with Me. See Isa. xl. 10; liii. 11, and Clemens Romanus, § 34.

14. μακάριοι] Blessed are they that do His commandments, that their authority (ἡ ἐξουσία αὐτῶν) may be upon (ἐπὶ) the Tree of Life (i. e. may extend to it, and may be exercised upon it, so that they may take and eat of its fruit), and that they may enter by the gates into the City.

The reading of this text is somewhat doubtful.

Elz. has οἱ ποιοῦντες τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ, they that do His commandments; and this reading is authorized by B and many cursive MSS., and by the Coptic, Syriac, and Arabic Versions, and by Tertullian, Cyprian, and Andreas. It seems also to be confirmed by the consideration, that by breaking God's commandment, Man lost his access to the tree of life, and that he cannot hope to regain an approach to it except by keeping His commandments. As our Lord Himself says, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments" (Matt. xix. 17).

But the Alexandrine MS. has οἱ πλύνοντες τὰς στολὰς αὐτῶν, they who wash their robes; and so some few Cursives (one in Scrivener, p. 560, has πλύναντες), and the Vulgate, Armenian, and Æthiopic Versions; and this reading has been adopted by Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles.

The other reading seems to be preferable. It is not so likely that a copyist would have been perplexed by the latter reading, which is clearly explained by another passage in the Apocalypse (vii. 14), where there is no such variety in the MSS. But some transcribers might perhaps have been embarrassed by the other reading, as seeming, in their opinion, to give some countenance to Pelagian tenets: and might therefore have altered it to the reading in A.

The doctrine of the text, as compared with other passages of Holy Scripture, clearly is, that though it is by the Death of Christ alone, that men have access to the Tree of life; yet none can derive any benefit from that only access, unless they walk in the way of Obedience to God's Commandments. The Gate is opened to all; but it is open in vain to those who do not go along the Road which leads up to the Gate, and passes through it.

15. ἔξω οἱ κύνες] Without are dogs. See Phil. iii. 2. Matt. vii. 6; xiii. 48. This is quoted by S. Hippolytus, de Christo, § 66, p. 35, ed. Lagarde. The words may perhaps be rendered Away, ye dogs! as ἐκὰς, ἐκάς ἐστε, βέβηλοι, "Procul, o procul este profani." Cp. the comment above, ix. 14; xvi. 12; and Ps. vi. 8; cxix. 115, and the inscription on the doors of Belgian Churches, "Hunden uyt Godt's Tempel," and Düsterdieck here, "Hinaus die Hunde."

16. ἐγώ εἰμι] I am the root and the offspring of David: being both God and Man. See above, v. 5, and our Lord's question, Matt. xxii. 41—45.

— ὁ ἀστὴρ] the bright and Morning Star. Which rose from the darkness of the Grave, and by that Resurrection on the Morning of the first Lord's Day brought Life and Immortality to Light. See above, ii. 28.

17. καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα] and the Spirit and the Bride say, Come . . . . Amen, Come, Lord Jesus! (v. 20,) words appropriate to all who wait patiently and long earnestly for His coming, and specially suitable in the mouth of the beloved Disciple and Evangelist, St. John, whose life was prolonged, amid trials and sufferings, far beyond that of any other Apostle, and who had heard the Lord's saying concerning himself, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" See above, on John xxi. 22, 23.

18. ἐάν τις ἐπιθῇ ἐπ' αὐτά] If any one adds to them, God will add to him the plagues that are written in this book. Here is a prophetic protest against the spurious Revelations forged by false Teachers in the name of Apostles; of which some account may be seen in Fabricius, Codex Apocr. N. T. pt. ii. p. 935. Jones on the Canon, i. pp. 26—33. Lücke, Commentar, pp. 45—50.

Here also is a Prophetic Protest against all additions to the words of Holy Scripture; whether those additions be made by unwritten traditions, or by Apocryphal books, as of equal authority with Holy Scripture. See above, on 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16, p. 95.

19. ἀπὸ τοῦ ξύλου] from the tree of life. So A, B, and many Cursives and Versions, and so Scholz, Lach., Tregelles, Tisch. Elz. has ἀπὸ βίβλου.

— τῶν γεγραμμένων] of those that are written in this book. Elz. has καὶ before τῶν, but καὶ is not in A, B, and is rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch. The reading of the text is important as declaring that the Holy City belongs to those who are written in this Book,

20. ἀμήν] Elz. adds ναὶ, which is not in A, B.

21. ἡ χάρις] the Grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with all the Saints. The words τῶν ἁγίων are not in A, and are omitted by Lach. and Tisch.; but they are in B and in many Cursives, and in some MSS. of the Vulgate, and in the Slavonic, Coptic, Syriac, and Armenian Versions. The word Ἀμὴν, which is omitted by A, and by Lach. and Tisch., is found in B and most Cursives and Versions.

The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. Here is the Apostolic Benediction, which concludes all the Epistles of St. Paul, and was the token of his Epistles, and therefore was not used by any other Apostle, as far as we know, in any Epistle written during St. Paul's lifetime (see above, on 1 Thess. v. 28), but was reserved for St. Paul's use, as the badge of his Epistles, to assure the Church of their genuineness.

That Benediction ends the Apocalypse, written long after St. Paul's death. It closes the Canon of Holy Scripture, and is, as it were, the Seal of the Bible. It is thus commended to the reverent use of the Church Universal, which, having received this Benediction from the Holy Ghost writing by St. Paul and St. John, has ever used it in her Liturgies. Thus she proclaims to all, that her strength is derived from the free Grace of God in Christ; and she prays for an outpouring of that Grace on all, and she ministers the appointed means of Grace to all, in order that all, thankfully receiving God's Grace, may attain to His everlasting Glory, in the Holy City, the Heavenly Jerusalem; to which may He bring us, who read this Book, in His infinite love and mercy, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.
